sides of a hexagon, and each of these sides has 60° of the circumference of heaven. A square aspect is that which joins four equal sides into a square, and has in each of those sides a division of 90° of the circle of heaven. Opposition is when the planets are at the opposite ends of a diameter of the sky.

Now, however, I return to the considerations on which I have been lingering, and I say concerning any working of yours that cannot be delayed until the Moon is received by Venus, put them in a trine aspect and received by Jupiter or the lord of his house in a trine or sextile aspect; and if you cannot do any of these things, get the Moon in a term of Venus, made fortunate by Jupiter, and free from the infortunes. If your working is for love and benevolence, put the degree of the ascendant in one of the terms of Venus. If your working is for acquiring a share in an inheritance, put the aforesaid term of Venus on the cusp of the fourth house. If your working is for acquiring help from the law, do the same in the ninth house. If your working is for faithfulness, and for this you plan and labor, do this in the eleventh house, and strengthen the part of fortune by putting it in the house of one of the fortunes, or put the lord of its house in reception with a fortune.

If your working is for success in lawsuits and battles and the like, make Mars received by the Moon in an amicable aspect. If your working is for receiving what is owed to you, have Mars in reception with Saturn. If your working is about numbers, writing, or study, have him in reception with Mercury. If your work is for pleasing and petitioning kings and lords, have Jupiter received as above. If your working is for any other purpose, that is, for any of the reasons not included here, let Jupiter be in reception with the lord of the ascendant, or else received by the Moon or the ascendant or the part of fortune or the part of the petition. Put the lord of the Moon's house, or the lord of the ascendant, or the lord of the fourth house as described above, and make sure all the foregoing are in places free from the infortunes, and quiet and made fortunate by the fortunes, inasmuch as you are able, because these places dignify the conclusion of petitions.

When you wish to ask someone for something, in the hope that goods will be allotted to you, make the Moon or the lord of the ascendant receiving the almutaz and the lord of the petition, and put the Moon or the lord of the ascendant in the house of the petition. If you ask about the elderly or those who work land, make Saturn the lord of the chart. If your petition is about officials, judges, prelates, or rich and generous people, the lord of your chart should be Jupiter. If your petition concerns soldiers or men at arms, or magisteries, iron, fire, and the like, make Mars the lord of your chart. If your petition concerns kings or nobles, make the Sun the lord of your chart. If your petition concerns women, or joyful people and the like, or decorators, painters, ornaments, actors, those who make pictures on cloth, silk, gilded things and so forth, make Venus the lord of your chart. If your petition concerns merchants, scribes, teachers, subtle geometricians, and the like, make Mercury the lord of your chart. If your petition concerns things of a cold and moist nature, messengers, cases brought before the king, fishermen, and the like, make the Moon the lord of your chart.

Likewise, in all your petitions, make the lord of the ascendant fortunate as well as the Moon. If your petition concerns a question of wealth and food, place the part of fortune so that it is received by one of the fortunes. Beware of having either of the infortunes block the light of the Moon from the ascendant, or the contrary;⁷⁹ nor should either of the infortunes be with the lord of the petition, the Moon, or the lord of the ascendant, nor should they be in conjunction or any aspect with the lord of the petition, and where we spoke of reception before let there also be a trine or sextile aspect with one of the fortunes, or similarly with the infortunes, or conjunct with the fortunes. Make sure that the lord of the petition is not cadent from one of the angles,⁸⁰ nor the Sun, the Moon, or the lord of the ascendant.

If you cannot observe all of these points, however, consider the motion of one of the five lords of the petition,⁸¹ and let it have aspect and reception according to the petition, as we have said, and make those two houses well received by the fortunes. Make sure that neither infortune is with the lord of the Moon's house or with the lord of the fourth house or the lord of the ascendant, because if either of the infortunes is as just said, it will damn, destroy and impede the success of your working.

⁷⁹ This refers to prohibition, when a planet is applying to an aspect or conjunction with another planet or point in the horoscope, but a third, hostile planet aspects one or the other before the aspect can perfect.

⁸⁰ That is, that the planet ruling the house of the question is not in one of the cadent houses.

If you wish to work concerning some issue involving masters and servants, see that the Moon and the ascendant are in common signs, free from the infortunes. If your working concerns gold, strengthen the Sun and have it in relationship to the fortunes above all in your workings, and observe the same in all other qualities.

Thus far I have spoken generally about the judgments of the stars, by which, if you apply yourself to them and understand them as you ought, you will gain their benefit in whatever working you may do; and from generalities, you will be able to understand and judge particulars. You should be exceedingly careful that you never reveal the foregoing or show it to anyone who is not intelligent and studious in these matters. You should know that these are the foundations and materials of magical images, and they are among those secrets of this art that are demonstrated in public; and for this reason serious study of the art of astrology was once prohibited by law, because the deep places of that science border the things that must be known in learning the art of magic.

Aristotle spoke of this to King Alexander: "O Alexander, beware at every moment and in all your activities that you conduct yourself according to the motions, aspects, and qualities of the celestial bodies, for if you study these things, your desires will be accomplished, and you will have whatever you will." This saying is very good and useful, because it indicates the difference between the actions of the wise and those of the foolish, who are unable to pass beyond practical considerations, and to whom thoughts concerning another world are shrouded in darkness; for thoughts concerning another world are nothing other than the wisdom that surrounds all sciences and all wisdom teachings.

Chapter four

The motion of the eighth sphere and the fixed stars

The ancient sages who were learned in the magical sciences saw that the four quarters of heaven⁸² move by eight degrees from west to east, then return by eight degrees from east to west, and this motion they called the motion of the eighth sphere.⁸³ Many of those who produce astronomical tables have concealed this motion, and make no mention of it, but this motion is of great usefulness in magic. Some of those who make astronomical tables include this motion in their tables, and provide numbers and calculations by which this motion can always be calculated at will.

You should by no means surrender this to oblivion, because it is the greatest foundation of magical knowledge, for by this motion the figures of heaven are changed, which is one of the great secrets of this science. The motion of these eight degrees is completed in 640 years, and returns in the same period.

Now it shall be said and revealed to you how greatly it is proper to attend to this motion in the science of magic as well as the science of the effects of the heavens. This same motion moves the pole of the heaven of constellations, moving it from east to west and back again, nor can it move otherwise than in these two ways. When this motion proceeds from east to west it signifies certain things that are done and accomplished in this world, and when it proceeds from west to east it reveals and signifies that other things are put into effect in this world. This motion is the motion of the eighth sphere, the sphere of the signs and the fixed stars, a motion that is not the same as the motion of the entire heavens.⁸⁴ It is proper for you to understand this motion and consider it diligently in every working.

⁸⁴ In Ptolemaic astronomy, the "motion of the entire heavens" was the apparent rotation of the skies around the earth every 24 hours, driven by the primum mobile or sphere of first motion.

The division of this science among nations, and which part of it each nation possesses

Now I will relate to you that I have seen, from one of the ancient sages, a certain very great wonder pertaining to this art, which at this time I have decided to reveal. This explains that this science is divided into three parts. Of these the first is the science of magic, and those who study and practice it most are those we have named Azahabin, who are captive Chaldean slaves. The second is the science of the stars, and of praying to them with suffumigations, sacrifices, prayers, and writings; and those who are most zealous in this science are the Greeks, who are very subtle, knowledgeable and intelligent in it, that is, in astrology, and they have true knowledge because astrology is considered the root of the entire science of magic. The third part, in turn, is the science that works with suffumigations, sayings and words properly assigned to these things, as well as the science of calling spirits together by these words and sending them away again. The Hindus are most versed in this last science, and those from Liemen and Naptini in Egypt practice it most. Each of the aforesaid divisions has its own theoretical foundation and practical essence.

It should be noted and made clear that the Hindus have their strength and power through words, with which they are freed and healed from deadly poisons without medicine. Similarly, they have sayings and words by which, whenever they wish, someone will be evilly vexed by demons, and in the same way it is possible to transmute the senses solely by hearing the aforementioned words, and the Hindus cause any change they wish to cause by virtue of these same words.⁸⁵ Similarly, they have musical instruments cleverly constructed, which they call "alquelquella," that produce harmonies from a single string, by which they make sounds with all manner of subtleties whenever they desire and wish.

They perform similar wonders with women, whom they cause to conceive without intercourse with men, and they do this with motions, workings, and medicines. Some Hindus make a certain medicinal wine which they drink, and which prevents and forbids them from growing old and the infirmities of old age, and they can only die a natural death because of the virtue of this wine. Implicit in these things are other, even more powerful things, for these things just mentioned are provided to them by nature, but the others are yielded up only to diligence and labor, and they have the greatest power to enchant and fascinate others in this world.

Some common Hindus say and assert in their discourses that the space south of the equinoctial line is populated by those whom they call devils. These beings are most subtle, because they do not generate or die, and with this the law concurs.⁸⁶ The planets or celestial bodies that have these powers and vital forces in them are Saturn and Cauda Draconis.

The sage mentioned above says that every form and figure of generation and corruption that exists in this world is disposed and ordained by the powers and influences of the fixed stars, and by the aspects and dispositions of the fixed stars that exist in their images. He says also that other figures and forms are in the heavens but are not found on earth, and are not known or understood except by the wise, who are learned in the sciences of the magical art and of spirits, which proceed to a proportional conclusion. To these figures and forms they give names by which they may be known, though these names reveal nothing of the essence or any other quality of the figure. These • • names are figures and seals such as this: afterwards, • they connect the points together with lines. The • • lines that extend from one point to another are considered to be rays that reach from one to another, and figures and images are calculated from them, and these are placed in the eighth sphere among the fixed stars.

The same sage has said that there are other imaginal figures in the heavens that cannot be figured except by the intellect, as the degrees of heaven are their embodiment. The wonders that this sage has described cannot be understood or known except out of the books of the Hindus, which have introduced many to this science. They say that figures ought to be made in a proper and opportune hour and time and arrangement of the heavens, with a due and appropriate ascendant. They undertake similarly to perform divination with heads,⁸⁷ or birds, as well as mirrors and swords into which one gazes,⁸⁸ and likewise explain the interpretation of dreams. They do all this in order to accomplish their desires and to know subtle and secret things.

With these things, the Hindus are able to guide themselves, just as astrologers guide themselves by circles formed around the planets and the moon, and the rainbow or celestial arc that appears in the air, and the apparent sparkling of the stars, and the whirlpools that appear in the sun,⁸⁹ by all of which astrologers assist themselves in judging and understanding the effects of the heavens.

They have also said that in the heavens there are forms that are beautiful and lovely, and others that are completely lacking in beauty, which they form from the dispositions and aspects of the fixed stars. Those people who are born when the beautiful and lovely forms are rising, while the Sun and Moon are in similarly beautiful figures, are thus shown to be fortunate in their thoughts and deeds; while if an ugly and deformed figure is rising at the hour of birth, this shows that the person thus born will be unfortunate in his deeds, business, and thoughts. You ought to consider this in revolutions of nativities⁹⁰ and in every conjunction, and likewise in magical workings. Other sages have said that what is shown by the constellations is not borne out by any other judgment, like vain dreams that lack significance or insight. According to these, you are warned not to study them, and above all else you should not try to accomplish your desires using them. Rather, you will find these revealed in nativities, conjunctions, and revolutions.

Similarly, the sages have said that the science of dreams is a certain power present in the soul, by which the soul is linked to the spirits of heaven. By these are seen forms and figures corresponding to the things that are possible on earth, and they are given form by the power of these spirits, and these are true dreams, by which we are given certain knowledge of things.

The science of dreams is congruent to the science of astrology, and similar to it, because this science of dreams draws support from the science of astrology. Its power and influence come from the powers of Mercury because, when Mercury is strong in a natal chart, this shows the power of divination by dreams. Other dreams come from silence, from the state of the humors, and from vapors rising to the brain, as doctors say and assert, and these dreams mean nothing.

You should know that dreams are indeed demonstrations of pure images separated from physical bodies and distinct from them. This happens when the soul turns away from perceiving through the sensory powers and does not work through them. Thence dreams are formed according to the cogitations of the mind and the powers of informing images—those that have the powers of sensory things and also possess the third property, which is the reminiscence of things after they have been, in this way: when the rational spirit is complete in itself as it should be, it sees images just as the person himself has seen. Thus the images come in dreams, appearing as no more and no less than when they were seen previously.

If the power by which the images are shown is stronger than the rational spirit, the dreamer will see what he has seen before in the form belonging to those things previously apprehended by sight, and not in the form proper to themselves. A man whose rational spirit is complete in itself will in a dream how a bear or a dog came running after him, and approached him. According to the other manner, the aforesaid dream will appear with a man of ugly appearance running after the dreamer, and this is a similitude.

If nature is strong and potent, the spirit will be impeded by that strong nature, which is stronger,⁹¹ and it will interject natural things such as eating, drinking, dressing, and lying with women; and the dreamer will see all the things natural to the body in the dreams, but in greater abundance. If his body is predisposed to intercourse with women, that is, if it has an excess of semen, it will appear to him as though he is copulating with a woman, and this is because nature wishes to expell from him that surplus matter. If the body has an excess of moist humors, he will see streams and waters in his dreams. If it has an excess of choler, fires and people lighting them and the like will appear in his dreams. If there is an excess of melancholy, he will see frightening and dreadful things, and the like, in his dreams. Auguries⁹² are obtained in a similar way, and they are true when the power of the augur's ability to interpret them combines with the things he sees, hears, and comprehends while sitting, and understands from those things he perceives from the augury.

If the power of those things⁹³ in which the images appear be stronger, and reflect things in a pure way, then they are held to be like the things the wise see in mirrors, and guide themselves by what they see and hear, and by all these things they are able to attain to the power of knowledge and understanding of the things that they experience therein. All this is accomplished by the power and fortitude of the spirit. In this way it fashions the virtue or vigor by which images are represented when they are separated from things that are sensed, and leave the realm of the senses. The spirit becomes a medium between the things of the senses and the visible experience that follows when they are conjoined with the power of the spirit. From this process proceed dreams and auguries: that is, when the body is purged of bad humors and achieves a proper humoral balance, whatever is seen will be truthful and certain; and if the body be otherwise, then whatever is seen will be false and vain.

It is manifest that divination is a virtue of the quintessence, and this is what we call prophecy. Prophecy proceeds from the powers of the spirits in which is represented what is seen from separated things. It both perceives and understands them, whether sleeping or waking, because when the virtue of that in which the images are represented is complete and purified from all superfluities and impurities, it will see separated things just as though they were reflections in a mirror; in just the same way, they appear in the spirit when it is shining and whole. Because of this, nobody will be a diviner who can predict what will be from abstract considerations, nor understand things that can be known perfectly by the senses. If he is well versed in things of the sort mentioned above, which are comprehended by the senses, and lacks the other requirements mentioned earlier,⁹⁴ he is simply a sage. If he has both these complementary powers, then he is a prophet.

⁹¹ That is, stronger than the spirit.

This cannot occur except in unique people in whom the prophetic spirit is completely established by the original disposer of images, who is God himself, and who transmits this same prophetic spirit and establishes it in the midst of the common sense.⁹⁵ Thus God himself places such a virtue in the prophet naturally, since from the common sense proceeds the virtue and power of the senses, or the human intellect. To the common sense is joined the powers by which images are represented, and from this, because of the connection with this virtue, the common sense of such a person is adorned with that virtue; and because he comes into contact with the virtues of the images that are represented, he is called a prophet.

One who is thus disposed is higher and more complete and more fortunate than any other person. It is good to ask if through such a person we can obtain the same state, for human beings do not desire goodness unless by it we may obtain a better fortune. For this reason it behooves us to turn toward good habits and desires, that we do not become people of wicked habits. For this reason the prophets instruct people in laws and teach them to believe in the next world, so that the people unite themselves to goodness with a single mind. This is the way and the means by which that good fortune is achieved, along with an understanding of the things of this world and their qualities, and how they function together as well as individually. This we may call part of prophecy, which proceeds in order from sensible things to higher things in various directions, until we come to metaphysical science, in which human virtue is completed, and speculative sciences, by which it is perfected. It is good that man seeks this, nor can he find anything better, since he can seek and find nothing that is better than complete good fortune.

Albunasar Alfarabi said this in the book he wrote concerning service to rulers: the order and disposition of things in the universe can be perceived according to the manner and way of high and sublime things, and it is by means of good habits, and virtuous deeds that bring forth goodness, that we may attain so great a fortune. Those who have made a firm beginning in the quest for this are without sorrow, for they will have joy and happiness and lasting wisdom perpetually and without end. They will join with the founder of the law⁹⁶ in saying that this life is not worth remembering unless there is another life in the world to come, because the present life, seen from the standpoint of that which is to come, is as nothing.

Now, however, we return to our theme. I say that according to the opinion of the Hindus, spirits reveal themselves in physical forms that speak and show things, so as to make kings love and hate according to their will, and to bring forth and withdraw from effect whatever is desired. This accords with the work of the ancient sages, who fashioned images in diverse forms, and included with them the times and prayers that accord with what is sought.

Again, they say that images are spirits of time, chosen because the works that are done with them are like miracles, and have the form of miracles. This is because their works are instituted by natural virtues, for natural virtues cause miraculous effects; thus the red jargoon stone (that is, the ruby) relieves and helps those who hold it against evils and infirmities, and against epidemics, and performs many other works by its natural virtue. Thus an image may be made joining two virtues, that is, the virtue and power of celestial bodies that the image receives from bodies that are far off, as well as from natural virtues impressed in them, as is done to expel fleas, frogs, and flies, which is done by magistry and the work of the constellations and celestial bodies.

Images of the hours and minutes ought to be made from materials that are naturally appropriate, having the effect that you desire. The property of natural virtue is such that you ought to understand and know out of what material any image ought to be made and consecrated according to the virtue and effect you desire. Likewise, you ought to know that all works that can be made to happen in this world, because of anything known or anything made or attained by knowledge—all this can be done with images. If you diligently study all that we have expounded so far, you will help yourself greatly in gaining perfection in this science.

Chapter Six

The virtues of images, and by what means they may be had, and how images may receive the powers of the planets, and how works are done by images, and this is the foundation of the science of magic and images

You should know that what we call virtue is jointly conferred by nature and spirit. If that which acts, acts according to its virtue, it will manifest its own nature in that action; especially when such an action has its virtue in those things that do not manifest the nature that exists in them, the working will be stronger and more apparent, and what proceeds from it will be more true and more clearly known. This is like the virtue of scammony,⁹⁷ which draws out the choler humor by its own proper virtue, and this is because of the correspondence that choler has to heat and dryness, to which choler is assimilated by its nature. This appears likewise in simples,⁹⁸ for when something is done by means of the virtue and similarity of nature existing in them, the results are more manifest, true, and apparent.

In the same way, magical images work by virtue and similarity, because a magical image is nothing other than the power of celestial bodies in the bodies that they influence. Thus when the material of the latter body be disposed to receive the influence of the aforesaid celestial bodies or planets, and the celestial body likewise be disposed to influence the material body of the magical image, that image will be more powerful and more disposed to bring about the effect we seek and desire. Similarly, the gifts of the planet will be more perfect and more complete,

Here is an example. When you wish to make and consecrate a magical image, consider the purpose and shape in which you wish to make the image, as well as the matter of which you intend to make and consecrate it. Do the aforesaid things in correspondence to one another, and let them reflect the powers and influences of the planet that rules the working. When it is fashioned in this way, the image will be powerful and complete, and its effects will follow and be manifest, and the spirit that has been placed in the magical image will be apparent in its effects. Those who fashion magical images but are ignorant of the foregoing make them badly.

⁹⁸ Simples: in medieval medical theory, medicines made from a single herb.

In the same way, when you want to make something animal out of animals, or something made of wood, or something built of stonework, you should first take parts of that composition, and combine them with other parts of the same nature. Let them then be mixed and incorporated into a proper mixture.⁹⁹ Work in this way until the process is completed. When you do this, nature will not fail to have its proper effect, and the stars similarly will augment and increase that effect until the desired result follows. These influences act in many ways, and work as well in tinctures, as in animals that human beings by their own efforts are able to bring to life, such as reptiles, serpents, scorpions, and many similar things¹⁰⁰ that are made by composition and similar works, by the disposition of nature and the powers of the planets.

Similar to these are the works that are done by the decoction and mixture of things, out of which appropriate medicines are made from necessary and opportune ingredients. Another example is the decoction of semen in the womb, which undergoes a certain decoction until it is brought to a condition appropriate to receive the essence of the creature. Thus nature accomplishes its works, and the planets contribute their proper powers, until the process reaches its ordained completion.

It is in this same way that some stones are compounded of minerals and water. At first, water is clear, and then the wind blows upon it, vibrating and striking against it until it curdles like milk. Then it is decocted into the nature of minerals, being already inclined to that nature, and at length after coction it ⁹⁹ That is, combine the magically active ingredients with inert matter of the same general kind and mix them thoroughly, so that the whole substance is permeated with the magically effective mixture. This and several following paragraphs seem remarkably reminiscent of the modern theory of homeopathy.

congeals and is assimilated to the stone of a convenient mineral and receives the form and shape of that mineral.¹⁰¹

In the same way the substance of trees is made and ordained in all things born from the earth in such a manner. It happens in a similar way: first, the seed rots until it is brought to a disposition from which it is able to become the tree which is to be generated. It receives its form and figure corresponding to that which complements the tree's form; and it receives that form and complement out of the nourishing humidity received from that substance that was acquired at the time of its putrefaction.

In this way, in fact, are all things done that are made by skillful means, since at first it is necessary to remove the form and shape originally existing in that substance. In this way are worked all magisteries which intend to accomplish anything and proceed to do so. First the parts of all those things that will be used to make the thing are gathered together, and then worked together until they become a composite material disposed to receive a different form.

In this way we see that all works done by means of fermentation are done, and the same thing is done by those who make cheese and butter, and other things composed of milk and honey; and the same thing is done by those who make thread with silkworms, and all other craftsmen who work at other crafts convert and transform one thing into another in this same way. This happens because any material that has a form and shape is not able to receive another form until it loses and surrenders the one it had at first; only thus a substance disposed to receive another form may then receive it. Once the substance receives some form and is formed thereby, it is freed and disencumbered from all other forms it previously had. We say this only concerning materials that exist here below, for in the superior world substance is informed with durable forms, so that they cannot be separated from their form; nor is any material able to take another form.

You should understand that work with magical images is done in this way. The makers of images first learned how to gather together things out of which a magical image could be constructed, which are disposed and convenient to receive that form. Thus we see the laurel branch which heals and overcomes the poison of adders, and we see the crocus, which scorpions flee; and wasps, which flee from bitter and sharp flavors, but delight in and seek out rose water, and may be drawn together by the odor of the herb thyme. Many other things happen in the same way, such as the increase of sperm and virility of a man with a woman after eating chickpeas, and many other things that grow by working with correspondences. Thus the body of a magical images is composed from many things joined together. By this combination it is made serviceable in form to receive the powers and potencies of the things for which the image itself is fashioned and created.

In this same way physicians work in compounding medicines, when they seek to heal pain and illness, for the work of healing with medicines proceeds in two ways. Of these, the first uses simples, and this is a good and perfect work in its own right, as Johannicius¹⁰² has said in his book On Physic: that always and in every case you will be able to help with simples, and you never need to work with compounded medicines. The second uses medicines compounded out of many things, combined by this work into one medicine. In this way are made electuaries and the greater theriac of Galen,¹⁰³ which is made of many medicines.

I tell you that a single planet has diverse effects entirely distinct from one another, just as fire does when it decocts honey. When this is done properly, with a moderate heat, the honey receives a good taste, better than it tasted before, while if it is decocted too much, it is strongly burnt and takes on a bad taste. This happens with planets when they stand in bright and dark degrees.¹⁰⁴ The heavens have two effects; one is their motion and natural effect, and the other is their accidental heat, which is generated from motion; and consequently heat comes from motion, and motion from the heavens.¹⁰⁵ This teaching is true

¹⁰⁴ [bright and dark degrees?]

¹⁰⁵ The concept of motion in medieval physics is much more complex than the

and manifest. But those things that appear to the senses are made by motion, the motion and spirit of the eighth sphere or the heaven of Zodiacal signs. This is because of the powers of the fixed stars, and therefore it truly appears that that heat follows motion, and motion follows the powers and fortitudes of the fixed stars. The virtue of the fixed stars is a first composition,¹⁰⁶ having nothing before it in priority.

You should understand the same thing of all the parts and movements of the heavens and the heat born from them. The effects of the stars accordingly follow the effects of the heavens in this way, because the heavens produce their effects by means of some particular star, and the stars do not cause their effects except through the heavens or from the heavens, since no star has motion in itself alone, but has its effects and causes wonders according to the motion of the heavens. The first matter is the first nature, and is itself the founder of truth, and the works of the stars proceed according to the vestments and colors that it makes for them. Therefore it is nobler and higher than any other thing.¹⁰⁷

The degrees of heaven have no properties except in their places and images, because there is no division in the heavens between parts that act and parts that do not; down to its lowest part it is entirely one in form, power, work, and sense, without any diversity or difference in its parts. Because it is all of one substance, it cannot have any diversity in its qualities over time.

It is in no way possible for any degree of the heavens or the firmament to lack the quality or essence of the fixed stars, because the whole heaven of the fixed stars is so replete with stars. Those who say that a given degree of the heavens is empty of stars at a given time say this only in the sense that it is impossible to see or sense a star there, because only the larger stars can be seen, and there is no way for the others to be discerned by sight. Thus it can happen that a star may be in a modern concept, and includes all forms of change. The argument being made here is that all changes in the material world are either caused directly by the stars, or indirectly, by heat generated by changes caused by the stars.

place where it has no manifest effects, that is, when it is not in its term or exaltation, rising or opposite its rising, or standing retrograde or direct (unless it goes to one of the aforesaid places), nor having any assistance or aspect with some planet corresponding with its nature or opposed thereto, because these placements, even when they have effects, have effects contrary to those of the active placements of the fixed stars, and are similar to places having no effect, because planets never lack motion in the heavens and therefore never lack effects. This is why in these placements we say that they are very obscure and concealed. This is why you ought to note well and diligently consider this, so you understand effectively what follows from it, because when the planets are stronger in their effects, they function in two modes, that is, general and particular. The general effect is that which is not directed against any one manifested thing, while the particular effect is directed toward one manifested thing. According to this, it is said that some planet is the dispositor, or has an aspect, or collection, or reception, and so forth.

Here is an example of this. When food is in the stomach and is drawn by the liver through the mesentery, it is changed into blood; and when it is sent by the liver to the other members of the body, it is made into the similitude of the other members, as diverse as they are. Thus in each member of the body, it loses its form and gives up its resemblance to blood, as though it never had it, and becomes bone in the bones, and likewise nerve in the nerves, and does likewise in the other members.

The planets do the same thing in their motions. When they go toward some aspect or conjunction, or any of the aforementioned places, they proceed to convert themselves according to the nature and operation of the place to which they go. Similarly, when a planet is rising, it works according to the operation of the star that is directly above it, and is assimilated to the star in its effects, and thereby works wonders. Furthermore, when it is in opposition to the ascendant, it works according to the planet that is below it.¹⁰⁸ For this reason you ought to pay close attention and note exceedingly well what we say in this place.

For we say this: that the heaven of the fixed stars works in accord with the operations and effects of the primum mobile, and the heaven of the Moon influences and acts through the works of the nature of fire and air, more than other natures, on account of its subtlety. Thereafter we speak of Saturn, because when it is rising it has the effects of the fixed stars that are above it, and when it is opposite the ascendant it has the effects of Jupiter. We say the same thing about the other planets, that is, when a planet is rising its effects and action will be according to the action and effects of the planet that is above it in the order of existence, and when it is opposite the ascendant it will act according to the operations of the planet that is below it in the order of existence. This principle is much appreciated in the art of magic. The sages of old concealed it with all their might, but it would be wholly improper for us to fail to explain it.

You should keep firmly in mind that a planet that proceeds more slowly in its motion is stronger in its effects, and conversely a planet that is swifter in motion is weaker in action, while moderate motion yields moderate effects. In holding this opinion the ancient sages did not agree with the common teaching, because others have taught otherwise and to the contrary, saying that a planet slower in its motion is weaker in its effect, and swifter in motion is stronger in effect. The reasoning of these latter proceeds like this: they understand the foregoing according to the order and disposition given by the primum mobile to the sphere of fixed stars; while the reasoning of the others follows the disposition of the motion of generation on earth, according to which the more ponderous planets are stronger in effect and the swifter are weaker.

According to the opinion which deals with the disposition of the primum mobile to the sphere of the fixed stars, a planet swifter in motion will have a stronger effect, and one slower in motion will have a weaker effect, because it is a proportion of similars.¹⁰⁹ With this the wise are in disagreement, for one group of ancient sages held the contrary, positing the same similitude but attributing it to the primum mobile and the sphere of fixed stars; accordingly, the more ponderous planets will be better and more convenient in their similitude to the primum mobile as well as the sphere of fixed stars in their slowness, because they are slower in motion, and thus the slower will be similar to the slower and the faster to the faster. About this many of the ancient sages spoke secretly and occultly in their books, while we intend to speak here of the secret of the sages of the ancient art of magic.

You should know that when the Moon is conjunct Saturn, its effects will be in accord with those of Saturn. This happens because the influence of Saturn is stronger than the influence of the Moon, just as when any other planet is conjunct Saturn, their effects will be in accord with the dispositions and effects of Saturn. This is because the power of Saturn is the strongest of all the planetary forces, and this happens for the reasons and causes given above, that is, because of its supreme height and propinquity to the highest heavens, that is, the primum mobile and the sphere of the fixed stars.

Because Saturn is very slow, its motion is assimilated to that of the primum mobile and the other superior qualities mentioned above. Everyone that speaks of Saturn's conjunctions with Jupiter, the Sun, and Venus, says that when these latter are joined with the influences of Saturn, they are changed or altered with a great change or alteration. The same influences flow to Jupiter from the fixed stars, and generally to all the planets, down to Venus and the Moon. Thereafter, the influences of the fixed stars appear in water and earth, and the four elements and the generations that are generated from them, in which the influences appear outwardly.

When any two planets conjoin, the conjunction can have three qualities, that is, increase, decrease, and balance; for example, when the Moon is conjunct Saturn, the influence of the Moon will be weakened and lost, because the power of Saturn exceeds the power of the Moon, provided that they are joined in the same degree of longitude and latitude, in their hayz,¹¹⁰ in their exaltations, or in some similar quality, such that the Moon and Saturn proceed together and are in the same place, and not otherwise. This relationship of Saturn with the other planets appears elsewhere.

It could well happen that the influence of the Moon and its power are greater than the influence and power of Saturn. This would happen when the Moon is in one of the dignities mentioned above, and Saturn is in the contrary thereof. Now if the Moon is conjunct Saturn in a place contrary to the aforesaid dignities, then the effect of the Moon will follow the effect of Saturn as in the other relationships described above; and if Saturn is in one of the above dignities, and the Moon in a place contrary to them, the effect of the Moon will be greatly weakened and extinguished. If the Moon be equal in motion or slowness to Saturn, and in another place similar to Saturn's, then the power of the Moon and Saturn will be equal and similar in power; the more so if the Moon approaches her rising, which is the highest dignity that the Moon is able to have (although that dignity is not equal to the greater dignity of Saturn on the descendant), and if Saturn is direct.

Yet the relationships of Saturn and Jupiter are not the same as those of Saturn and the Moon, for these two are always or almost always equal. This happens as follows: when Saturn and Jupiter are both dignified, then the effect of Jupiter is stronger than that of Saturn; and if Jupiter is dignified and Saturn is equal in motion, direct, and in its exaltation, then the effects of Jupiter will not be elevated above those of Saturn; but if it is the reverse, then the power of Saturn will be greater than that of Jupiter, and that of Jupiter will be weakened and in remission.

Nor does this happen in the relationship of Saturn to Mars when these two are joined together; for the effects of Mars will be more manifest in appearance unless Saturn be much stronger in quality and disposition. But Venus and Mercury have dispositions and similitudes with every planet, and the Moon has no similitude or correspondence, because the Moon shares no similitudes or correspondences with any planet. This may be called the great foundation of magic, to be concealed from the multitude, for it is supremely necessary in magical work.

You ought also to know that the effects of the planet are brought about by themselves; and this is because the planets are simple bodies. Those things that are simple are able to suffer no accident or corruption because, if simple bodies were to suffer corruption, they would no longer exist; but destruction and corruption cannot happen except to bodies composed of diverse things.¹¹¹ You should know that the effect of the primum mobile is a perfect effect, and is the foundation of all the operations of the heavens, the planets, and the fixed stars, and this is because it is the power and fortitude that moves the other heavens. Because of this, it is said that the primum mobile is the mover of all things, nor does anything else move it; and to say that anything moves it would be to oppose truth.

The heaven of the fixed stars, however, because its motion is most general, alone follows the motion of the primum mobile; and it thus contains all the other spheres. And you should know that the motion of each of the heavens, along with the motion of the sphere and the fixed stars, is equal in every case, and the motion of the planets is according to the essential motion of their own heavens, by which they are moved, for no star has motion in its own right except by accident. The effects of the heavens are twofold, as we have said; there is the movement they have in themselves and the heat they have by accident.

Since heat comes from motion and motion is natural to the heavens as we have said before, thence proceed all the gifts and influences of the planets, which are drawn into magical images, to move influences and powers and reduce them until they are made manifest, because in form is the similitude of the planetary influences, and in matter is the power to receive them. Every substance has a form appropriate to its nature, and every form has a substance likewise. An example of this is fire which, when it is small and begins to expand until it is great, is able to grow and expand because fire, once it exists, feeds on material from which it can draw forth more fire by burning, and the fire hidden in these things becomes apparent, thus feeding and enlarging the fire.

You should know also that corruption does not enter into apparent things for the purpose of destroying them; it goes deep into things that are not apparent and corrupts them in a way that is not apparent. Because of this, apparent heat naturally rouses latent heat, and similarly, latent heat is roused by manifest heat. This is because latent heat is a disposition to the effect of heat, and thus generates it from itself. You ought to study the other reasons diligently; for you can extract the rest from this.

Chapter Seven

How to work dialectically in the science of magical images, and what part this ought to have in this science

What we have said so far, however, has made clearly apparent the reception of form by matter, and the gift of planetary influence, and the reception of its powers, as well as the forms of similarity and difference, since similarity is a source of help in the effect of magical images. This is because working with images requires similarity to the effects of the stars, and work in the metal out of which the image is composed, in the time when it is made and the place in which the image is cast and prepared. From all these helps, taken together and made appropriate by the proper similarities, proceeds the effect of the image; if there is any divergence among them, the image will be deficient in effect. From this, it may be seen that coadunation is, so to speak, the greatest foundation of those effects gained by the art of magic.

In the same way, quantity is a foundation of this science, for magic works with the quadrivium.¹¹² By its first division, quantity is divided into two parts, which are continuous quantity and discrete quantity. Continuous quantity is in turn divided into five parts, which are line, surface, body, time, and place, while discrete quantity is divided into two parts, which are number and word.

Every one of these parts of quantity is most useful in magical work. For example, the line is necessary in magical images by reason of appearance and symbolism, which are required in images in order to relate them to the influence we want them to receive by similarity or dissimilarity. We divide the line itself in its turn in two ways, according to appearance and convenience, as we have said, according to what is written in the quadrivium, in the chapter on the straight line, where it says that a straight line connects two points and extends from each to the other. That saying is more perfect than any other saying about images, which says that a thing disposed to motion runs in a straight line, passing in one manner from the first point, where it begins, and running through others until it reaches another in the direction it is going.

For this reason we say that something is going straight toward something; and this is when it will encounter with some other thing toward which, in its course, it moves and runs—for example, the points projected by the rays of the planets, which go straight toward a point on the surface of a body disposed to receive the projection of those rays. This is why what is more perfect in magical images comes from the gifts of the stars, from which the effects of magical images are sought. The projection of rays that are suited to enter a given metal are substance from which an image is composed, in order to fill it up with the influence for which the image is made and consecrated by contrariety or similarity. Thus it is most clearly apparent that the line proceeding from a planet to the form of an image must necessarily be straight, in order for what is given to be integral and complete, because it must not be what is called an oblique line; that would be truly weak and diminished.

A surface is the figure that is given by force; and this is because a surface is the extension of the influence of an image in space. When it is extended, it necessarily becomes a surface, for all that is extended to the highest degree of subtlety is a surface.¹¹³ Thus water is changed and altered in itself by such influences as changes in heat, cold, light, odor, color, and the like. The influences from above that run along lines of infusion from planets into images, and that which results from images in their place, make a surface. Thus you ought to understand this secret and add it to your store of learning. Because this is the way that magical images work, therefore, the ancient sages never revealed this.

Time is also necessary and appropriate in working with magical images, since they act according to the movement of bodies, as I will explain, and distinguish the effects of images from one another. Time is divided into parts by the influence of images, and by the time of the aspects in any given place, and the influence of their effects, if you wish that those effects be completed in a year, that is, from the parts of the declinations of the planets. This requires observing the time of planets in a proper and appropriate hour, and knowing the relationships it has with other planets that may be conjoined with it in the same degree, or may be in some aspect, such as opposition, square, trine, and the like.

Other things that have to be taken in this work from the positions of the planets are the effects, either complete or incomplete, that ought to be discerned according to the mode and form of the work. These include whether a planet is direct, in its fall, or in its exaltation; in what place its gifts will be found; in what place it will be cut off by the fortunes or the infortunes; when the planet will be in light, turbid, or dark degrees; and many other things that are taught by astrology. This is a supremely great secret in the doctrine of magic, following this manner of diversity, as they say, in similarity and contrariety. This is how time has to be observed, and the manner that will accomplish this, and that is the time we ought to observe in preparing the aforesaid images, in the place that we ought to prepare them, doing similar things by similar means in their proper time.

Place, finally, is the last member of the aforesaid division of continuous quantity. The place is one in which work may be done easily, until it reaches the desired end in an appropriate time. The places of images, as well as their apparatus, whether this is hidden in air or earth or manifested, and everything similar (such as the places where images are constructed) and the places from which come the material of which the image ought to be made, all help arrange things and carry out the work, because all these considerations will influence the result and effect of the planets, and the work will be completed more effectually and marvelously by those who pay serious attention to statements worthy of belief. Amen.

I say to you that it may truly be said of the nature of miraculous and marvelous effects (and such are the effects of images) that their results are not similar to the effects of animals; they are rather like digging plants from the sands and cleaning stones, restricting plagues, floods, and clouds, changing winds, and other things like these, which will not be listed here because a prolix discourse would be inappropriate.

Words and numbers, which are the material of discrete quantity, are necessary in divinations, auguries, the interpretation of dreams, speaking in public, and the like; and all of these, in one way or another, are part of the art of magic. Quantity in itself, however, is necessary in these workings and opportune for all those who observe the time, and this cannot be done except by computing the movements of the heavens. Thus, when we say "from such and such a time to such and such a time," it is truly clear that we state some number that has been computed, and this number, when it is applied to a certain place, is then perfect in computation. In the same way, when we say "this working will be done from this hour for forty-two days," this saying makes it clear that we wish to state some number that has been computed.

Proportion also enters into this science in a way, because it is the form of an image. Its role is that it receives the virtue and power that are said to be put into images. To a great extent, these are brought into images by means of proportion and prepared figures in the place where a given quality is to be prepared. All this enters in by way of proportion, and other similar things of other qualities are brought in by a similar use of proportion.

Quality in itself, however, is the cause of the effects of magical images, in that anything that is done by the effects of images ought to have a complete virtue and power similar to their effects, and this should be of the same quality as that which is put in those images to accomplish the manifestation of that virtue and effect for which the image was intended. This is the aptitude and mixture that it ought to have, impressed by the nature of higher things into the nature of lower things, so that the thing that has been composed is assimilated to the gift of the planets and to the receptivity it ought to have, in order to complement the effect of the petition, of which we have often spoken in this book.

This is because planets participate more in one thing than in another. For example, a given planet corresponds to a particular city, and certain kinds of trees, animals, stones, and many other

Third in order follow other composite natures, that is, fire, air, water, and earth, which are the third composite natures coadunated from the primary and secondary qualities. After these natures follow other composite natures that are arranged in a fourfold order, that is, those that are in bodies that are divided in many parts—for example, the four seasons of the year, which are winter, spring, autumn, and summer, and the four humors that are found in human beings as well as in all other animals, that is, blood, phlegm, choler, and melancholy. Yet the material of human beings is more delicate and subtler than the material of any other animal, in that the nature of animals is grosser and much more turbid than that of humans.

The natures that are in trees and plants that grow out of the ground, such as oils, tinctures, seeds, roots, and the like, are third in order; and of the same kind are the natures that are in stones. What we have said thus far is to be understood well; what we have said about trees and stones is equal to what we have said about humans and animals in this manner, that trees in subtlety of nature follow after animals. There follows in order composite things made by art, and then those that are composed out of composites and are the ultimate composite; these are medicines and other things compounded in the same way.

All things composed of simple and composite natures, in turn, are divided into seven parts, which thereafter proceed by extension into twenty-eight parts.¹¹⁶ I wish to exemplify this here, so that I might make clear that what is divided accords with the first explanation as well as the example.

I say, then, that the simple natures are heat, coldness, moisture and dryness; the first composite natures are hot, cold, moist, and dry; the second composite natures are hot and dry, hot and moist, cold and dry, and cold and moist; the third composite natures are the elements themselves, that is, fire, air, water, and earth; the fourth composite natures are the seasons of the year, that is, spring, winter, summer, and autumn; the fifth composite natures are the four humors, that is, blood, choler, phlegm, and

For this reason I say that heat, cold, moisture, and dryness are similar to fire, air, water, and earth, when they are divided into many parts by sense and perception. Therefore it is said that fire is hot, since it is hot and dry, but it is not said of heat itself that it is fire, nor that it is compounded of fire or some other thing, because every composite thing is joined to the thing that precedes it and is named after that of which it is composed, as heat precedes fire, moisture water, coldness water, and dryness earth. Yet this manner of speech, along with the example, we have used in the foregoing; and this same manner is used in speaking about the liver, lungs, gall, heart, head, thighs, hands, and all other members of the body.

Heat, as we have already said, is caused by the motion of the heavens; coldness is generated out of the center thereof (for the earth is called the center of the primum mobile), out of which terrestrial substances produce all generations in all substances; and coldness thus opposes heat in all its necessary qualities, in rest and motion, because heat is a quality that joins similars and divides contraries. In the same way, we say that by cold, contraries are joined and similars are divided. Thus all the qualities of these two ought to be opposed, because if this distinction between them was not of this nature, it would be harmed and destroyed.

Therefore I say to you that, if you wish to work in these high, noble, and intellectually profound sciences, you must not be sparing in zeal, or sluggish in studying the sayings and the books of the sages, because by their means you may attain what you desire. The other things that we have said up to this point, in mixing and combining things together, extracted from the sayings of the sages as well as all the sciences, we have said only by way of explanation and arrangement for your spirit and intellect, so that you might be made benevolent, teachable, and attentive in the foregoing.

Chapter Nine

Examples of the figures and forms of images that call down the assistance of the planets

Now we shall return to the discussion we began earlier, when we were speaking of the figures of the heavens and their effects and how to call down the assistance and influence of the stars. I say that the six images, which will be discussed principally below, have virtue, power and effects on the world. In this place I intend to discuss and name these figures, that is, what can be expected of their action and effects, according to the ancient sages who have labored at this work and are in agreement with one another.

The first of them is to chase away mice from whichever place you wish. Write the following figures on a plate of red copper, with the first face of Leo rising and this figure belongs to the fixed stars that are in the sign of Leo. When it is made, place this plate in the place of the mice, and all of them will flee from this place and run away. This is the figure:

To be rid of gnats. Make the following figures in a sulfurous stone with the second face of Taurus rising and place this stone in the place where you wish. No gnats will ever be able to come to that place as long as the stone stands. This is the figure:

To chase away flies from whatever place you wish. Draw these figures on a tin plate with the third face of Scorpio rising, and place the plate in whatever place you wish. Flies will keep away from this place. Here are the figures of the stars which drive them away:

For any man which you wish to quickly come to you or to any place you wish. Make these figures in linen cloth, in the day and hour of Venus, with Venus rising in the second face of Taurus, and in that hour write the name of he whom you wish to come. Then set the top of the linen cloth on fire. At once he whom you said will come. Here is the figure:

To cause hostility. When you wish to separate two men so that they will no longer please each other, draw the figures written below with the tooth of a black dog on a plate of black lead in the day and hour of Saturn, with Saturn rising in the third face of Capricorn; put the plate in the place of one or the other or in the place where they come together. It will dissolve their friendship and they will never again please each other. Here is the figure:

To make whatever place you wish unfortunate, so that no one dwells there. Make these figures on a lead plate with the brain of a pig in the day and hour of Saturn, with Saturn rising in the second face of Capricorn, and put the plate in the place you wish to destroy. And the evil power of Saturn will pour into it, and no one will dwell there as long as the plate remains there. Here is the figure:

All of the six preceding works are done through the power of the planet or planets when they are bodily conjoined to the aforesaid constellations. You should know that there are no figures that call down the help of the fixed stars except these six, nor have the sages written them down in many places. For this reason we have chosen to write down this science completely in this book.

Chapter Ten

The stones proper to each planet and the formation of figures

In this part I intend to reveal how each planet corresponds to metals and stones, and to the figures of the planets and their marvelous operations.

The first is Saturn. Of the metals Saturn has iron and part of gold, his stones are diamond, onyx, cameo, those that are black and clear, and wild and almaginiciem and part of the stone ruby and in gold marcasite and also hematite.

Of the metals, Jupiter has lead, and precious stones that are white and golden and part of alaquech and emerald and quartz and crystal and all stones that are white and clear and shining, and also gold.

Of the metals, Mars has red copper and all kinds of sulfur and has part of glass and premonada, and bloodstone and part of alaquech and onyx and in all stones that are red and spotted or speckled.

Of the metals, the Sun has Egyptian glass and burnt copper and the stones albezedi and diamond and red pearls and stones that are sparkling and clear and part of hematite and in azumbedich and ruby and the balassus ruby and gold marcasite.

Of the metals, Venus has ruby and part of silver and glass and blue stones and coral and dehenech and has part of almehe and lodestone.

Of the metals, Mercury has quicksilver and part of tin and glass, and of stones it has emerald and all stones of this type and has part of azumbedich.

The Moon of the metals has silver and silver marcasite and seed pearls and has part of crystal and blue [stones] and onyx and almehe.

Here are the figures of the seven planets.

These are the figures of the planets as we have found them translated in the Lapidary of Hermes and in the book of Beylus and in the Book of Spirits and Images which was translated by the wise Picatrix.

The image of Saturn according to the opinion of the sage Picatrix is the form of a man with the face of a crow and the feet of a camel, sitting on a throne. In his right hand he has a spear and in his left hand a lance or dart. This is its form.

The image of Saturn according to the opinion of the sage Beylus is the image of an old man sitting erect on a throne. This is its form.

The image of Saturn according to the opinion of Hermes is the image of a man standing with his hands raised above his head holding a fish and under his feet a lagarii (that is, a lizard). This is its form.

The image of Saturn according to the opinion of other wise men is the form of a man standing on a dragon. In his right hand he has a scythe and in his left hand he has a spear, and he is wearing black garments. This is its form.

The image of Jupiter according to the opinion of Beylus is the form of a man sitting on an eagle and wrapped in a cloak, and his feet are above the loins of the eagle, and his head, which is covered by the cloak, is held in his right hand. This is its form.

The image of Jupiter according to Picatrix is the form of a man with the face of a lion and feet of a bird, and under his feet is a seven headed dragon and in his right hand he has a dart as though he wished to throw it at one of the dragon's heads. This is its form.

The image of Jupiter according to the opinion of Hermes is the form of a man completely covered in a linen garment, riding a dragon, and with a lance or dart in his hand. This is its form.

The image of Jupiter according to other sages is the image of a man riding on an eagle, carrying cloth in his right hand and holding nuts in his left hand, and all of his clothing is saffron colored. This is its form.

The image of Mars according to the opinion of the sage Beylus is the form of a crowned man with an inscribed sword in his right hand. This is its form.

The image of Mars according to the opinion of Hermes is the form of a nude man standing erect on his feet and before him on the right is a beautiful maiden standing on her feet, which is the form of Venus; and her hair is fastened in the back; and Mars is placing his right hand on her neck and his left hand is stretched out above her breast, and he is facing her and gazing upon her. The wise say that this figure has great powers and very great effects, and with God's help we will discuss it later on. This is its form.

The image of Mars according to other sages is the form of a man riding on a lion with a sword in his right hand and carrying the head of a man in his left hand and his clothing is a coat of iron mail. This is its form.

The image of the Sun according to the opinion of the sage Beylus is the image of a woman standing on her feet in a chariot drawn by four horses, with a mirror in her right hand, while her left hand holds a stick above her breast, and above her head she has the similitude of flames. This is its form.

The image of the Sun according to the opinion of Hermes is the form of a man standing on his feet, as though he wished to salute those he sees; in his left hand he is holding a round shield, and under his feet is the image of a dragon. This is its form.

The image of the Sun according to the opinion of Picatrix is the image of a king sitting on a throne with a crown on his head, and having the image of a crow before him, and under his feet is the figure of the Sun written above. This is its form.

The image of the Sun according to the opinion of other sages is the image of a baron standing erect in a chariot drawn by four horses; in his right hand is a mirror and in his left hand a shield, and his clothing is saffron colored. This is its form.

The image of Venus according to the sage Beylus is the image of a woman standing on her feet, and in her right hand she holds an apple. This is its form.

The image of Venus according to the opinion of the sage Picatrix is the image of a woman holding an apple in her right hand and a comb in her left hand, like a tablet, with these figures written on it: OAOIOA. This is its form.

The image of Venus according to the opinion of the sage Hermes is an image with the body and face of a man, the head of a bird, and the feet of an eagle. This is its form.

The form of Venus according to the opinion of Ptolemy is the image of a nude woman with a chain around her neck held by the image of Mars, who stands before her. This is its form.

The form of Venus according to the opinion of other sages is the form of a woman with her hair spread, riding on a stag; in her right hand is an apple and in her left hand flowers, and her clothing is colored white. This is its form.

The image of Mercury according to the opinion of the sage Beylus is the image of a young man with a beard, holding a dart in his hand. This is its form.

The image of Mercury according to the opinion of Picatrix is the image of a man standing erect, having wings that extend to his right side and a small chicken on his left side, holding a dart in his right hand, and in his left hand a round seashell; on the middle of his head is the crest of a rooster. This is its form.

The image of Mercury according to the opinion of other sages is the form of a crowned nobleman riding on a peacock, with a reed pen in his right hand and a book in his left, and his clothing is of many mixed colors. This is its form.

The image of the Moon according to the opinion of Mercury is the form of a woman with a beautiful face, with a dragon about her waist, having horns on her head with two snakes encircling them, and with two more snakes above her head and a snake entwined around each of her arms, and a dragon above her head and another dragon under her feet, and both these dragons have seven heads. This is its form.

The image of the Moon according to the opinion of Beylus is the image of a woman standing on top of two bulls, with the head of one next to the tail of the other. This is its form.

The image of the Moon according to the opinion of Picatrix is the form of a man who has the head of a bird, and he holds a stick above him, and he has a tree before him. This is its form.

The image of the Moon according to the opinion of other sages is the form of a young man wearing a crown and standing upright in a chariot drawn by four horses; in his right hand is a crook and in his left hand a mirror, and all of his garments are green and white. This is its form.

Each one of the figures described above, whether of the Sun or the other planets, have miraculous powers and effects in magical operations, which we will explain in this book, God willing.

Here are the images as the ancient sages, the founders of this science, put them down in their books. Each one of these images has miraculous effects and great power. Now I intend to speak of their effects and powers.

An image of Saturn for much drinking. If under the influence of Saturn, you engrave in the stone feyrizech¹¹⁷ the form of a man elevated in a high throne, on his head a yellow linen cloth, having in his hand a sickle, in the hour of Saturn, when he is on the Ascendant, the virtue of this image is that whoever carries it on his person will be able to drink heavily and die only of old age.

If you wish to cause discord between any two people, make under the influence of Saturn these figures in his hour and when he is rising, in diamond. Make a seal from this talisman in pitch and put the seal in the place of the two friends or the place of one or the other, and they will hate each other. Be careful not to carry this image yourself.

The Image of Jupiter. Under the influence of Jupiter, make the figure of a crowned man sitting on a throne with four feet carried by four winged men and the man who is sitting on the throne is raising his hands as though he were praying. Make it in the hour of Jupiter when Jupiter is rising in his exaltation and make it in a clear and white stone. Those who carry this image will have increase of riches and honor and lead a good life, and have many sons, and be able to perform good things and not be injured by enemies.

If you wish to be esteemed by officials and judges, make under the influence of Jupiter the form of a handsome man with ample robes riding an eagle in crystal stone in the hour of Jupiter when Jupiter is in the ascendant and in his exaltation. It is true that officials and judges will esteem those that carry these images with them.

If you wish to stop women from conceiving and catch as many birds as you desire, make under the influence of Jupiter, the image of a vulture in the hour of Jupiter, Jupiter rising in the first face of Sagittarius, in the stone called¹¹⁸...which is easily prepared. And if you carry this stone while hunting birds, birds will congregate around and you can capture as many as you wish. You will also be loved by men and received well by them. The stone we speak of is red in color, and when you shake the stone in your hand it makes a sound, and when polished, white water comes from it. If a woman has this stone she will not conceive as long as she has it.

Hermes says that if you make the image of a fox in this stone in the day and hour of Venus with Jupiter rising in Pisces aspecting the Moon, whoever holds this talisman will be feared by men and devils.

If you make from this stone the image of a crane in the hour of Jupiter, with Jupiter exalted, and if you wash the image in liquid and drink it, you will see spirits, and by it whatever you wish will be accomplished. It has these two powers, says Hermes.

An image of Mars to make what you wish for good or evil. Make under the influence of Mars the form of a man riding a lion, in his right hand carrying a bare sword, and in his left bearing the head of a man. Do this in the hour of Mars, with the second face of Aries ascending and Mars rising, and make the image of diamond. Whoever carries this stone will be powerful in good and evil, but more powerful in evil.

¹¹⁸ The name for the stone does not exist in the text.

If you wish your appearance to cause dread and terror, under the influence of Mars make an image of a man standing wearing a coat of mail with two swords, one lying above his neck and the other bare in his right hand, on his left the head of a man. Do this in the hour of Mars when he is in his sign, in any of the stones of Mars, and anyone who carries this stone will cause fear in everyone and no one will approach them.

To stop blood from flowing from whatever part of the body you wish, make under the influence of Mars, the form of a lion and before it the figures or signs below. Do this in the hour of Mars, with the second face of Scorpio ascending, and make it as described above, in onyx. If someone carries this image, the flow of blood out of any part of their body will immediately be stopped.

An image of the Sun. If you wish a king or kings to overcome and conquer everyone make an image of the Sun in the form of a king sitting on a throne with a crown on his head and a crow before him and under his feet these figures in ruby or oriental ruby, (balassus) when the Sun is exalted. The king who carries this stone will conquer all other kings and his opponents.

If you wish not to be conquered and to complete what you begin, and to be protected from false dreams, make under the influence of Sun the form of a lion, and above it the four figures already spoken of, with the Sun rising in Leo and the malefics cadent and not aspecting the Sun, in a red stone. And whomever carries this stone will not be conquered by anyone and what they begin will proceed completely to the end, as we have said.

If, under the influence of the Sun, you make the image of a woman sitting in a chariot drawn by four horses, holding in her right hand a mirror and in her left hand a scepter with a seven branched candelabra over her head, in a diamond when the Sun is in his exaltation, whoever carries this image will seem good to everyone and not be afraid.

If, under the influence of the Sun, you write the figures below in a sedina¹¹⁹ stone with the Sun rising in the first face of Leo, whoever carries this stone will be protected against the lunar illnesses that come from the combustion of the Moon.

IG43000.

Image of Venus. If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a woman whose body is human with the head of a bird and the feet of an eagle, in her right hand an apple and in her left hand a wooden comb, and write on the figure, everyone who carries this image with them will receive good and be liked by everyone.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the form of a woman, holding an apple in her right hand and a comb in her left hand, in white stone, the first face of Libra ascending, whoever has or carries the above image will always laugh and be cheerful.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a serpent, and above this the image of a spider in a crystal stone or beryl, with Jupiter exalted, whoever carries this stone will not be bitten by snakes, and whoever drinks liquid in which it has been washed will immediately be free from attack.

If, under the influence of Venus, you write the figures below in the hour of Venus (in another book I found the second set of figures; you can write whichever ones you wish), all the boys will love you and follow you.

¹¹⁹ According to Cornelius Agrippa, this should be a cornelian stone.

OX Z E
OX Z E

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a seated woman with wings with her hair braided behind her back with two braids with two boys in her lap, in the hour of Venus, when she is exalted, in quartz, he who carries this stone will not suffer loss or injury.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make an image of three people holding each other, in the hour of Venus, in a crystal, and whoever carries this image will be fortunate and gain profit from merchandise.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of two mousetraps and one mouse in the hour of Venus, with Venus rising, in coral stone, wherever you put the aforesaid image no mice will remain.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a fly flying in the hour of Venus, with Venus rising, in granite, where the image is no flies will remain.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a leech in jasper, and put on another part of the stone two leeches and make the head of one at the tail of the other, in the hour of Venus with Venus rising, and make a wax seal with this image or even another seal if you wish, and throw it down in the place where there are leeches, none will remain in that place.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make the image of a woman standing, in a crystal stone, and before her is the image of an idol that is also standing, and you do this in the hour of Venus, with Venus rising, whoever carries this image will be loved by women.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make an image of a woman standing on her feet, looking as though she has fur on her thighs, and a folded paper in her hand and in her other hand she has an apple; make this in the hour of Venus, with Venus rising, in granite, and if you make a seal from this image in wax and put it in the food of children, they will be freed from boils.

If, under the influence of Venus, you make in granite the image of the head of a zebra, and above it the head of a fly, and make the head of the fly a little smaller, that is, so it is a little smaller than the head of the zebra; do this in the hour of Venus, with Venus rising, and if you make a wax seal with this image it is good for all infirmities of the stomach.

An image of Mercury. If, under the influence of Mercury, you make the image of a baron seated on a chair with the head of a rooster and the feet of an eagle, and in his left hand fire and under his feet are the signs below; do this in the hour of Mercury, with Mercury exalted and rising, in emerald, and if this stone is carried into a prison it liberates prisoners.

If, under the influence of Mercury, when he rises, you make this sign in his hour in emerald, when you carry this stone you will be served by scribes and notaries and all those who are the nature of Mercury.

If, under the influence of Mercury, you make the figure of a single frog on the hour of Mercury, with Mercury rising, in an emerald stone, whoever carries it will offend no one. To the contrary, everyone you meet will speak well of you and say good things about your works.

If, under the influence of Mercury, you make the image of a lion in emerald or another image is the image of head of a lion, in the hour of Mercury, Mercury rising in Gemini, and above the head write a "A" and below the head a "D," whoever has this image will evade infirmities and fear, and good things will be said of them.

If, under the influence of Mercury, you make the image of a scorpion in emerald in his hour and with Mercury rising, if a pregnant women carries this image she will give birth easily and without danger.

From the operations of Mercury make the image of a man holding a balance in the hour of Mercury, Mercury rising in marble, if you make a seal in wax or other similar seal you will be delivered from infirmities and quickly freed from fevers and this has been tested against fever.

An image of the Moon. If, under the influence of the Moon, you make the form of a man with the head of a bird holding a staff above him, and holding the image of a branch in bloom in his hand, and do this in the hour of the Moon with the Moon rising in her exaltation, whoever carries this image on a journey will not be tired no matter where they go.

If, under the influence of the Moon, you make this sign in lapis lazuli in the hour of the Moon and the Moon rising, if this image is washed in liquid and given to two men to drink they will love each other very much and it will not be possible to separate them.

If, under the influence of the Moon, you make the image of a woman with wild hair pulled back, standing above two bulls, one with its head above the feet of the other and the other with its feet above the head of the other; fashion this in crystal, and on the other part of the stone face make the figure of a woman raised up with a crown, and with a staff in her right hand a staff, and write in a circle the sign below. Make this in the hour of the Moon with the Moon rising, and if you make a wax seal with this image and place it in a pigeon coop, many pigeons will congregate there.

If, under the influence of the Moon, you make the image of a man with the head of a lion and on his back is the sign of the crescent moon; do this in the hour of the Moon, with the Moon rising, in lapis lazuli, and this image will free children from all illnesses that arise.

If, under the influence of the Moon, you make the image of a snake, and above his head place the signs below in the hour of the Moon, Moon rising, in the bezoar stone or in green jasper, in whatever place this image is put, snakes and serpents will leave.

If, under the influence of the Moon, you make this sign in the hour of the Moon, with the Moon rising, in emerald, with this stone make a seal in incense and give it to a man for good memory, and to retain knowledge.

These are the images proper to each of the planets.

The first is Saturn. Make in the hour of Saturn, Saturn rising in the third face of Aquarius, an image in stone for healing the sadness of maidens, and for retaining blood or the menses of women.

Of Jupiter. Make in the hour of Jupiter, Jupiter rising in the second face of Sagittarius and aspecting the Sun an image for the stopping it from raining excessively and to divert condemnation.

Of Mars. In the hour of Mars, Mars rising in the first face of Scorpio, make an image for strengthening timidity and humbling the anger of a king and to turn aside robbers, wolves, wild beasts and all evil doers.

Of the Sun. In the hour of the Sun to take away bad thoughts and to heal infirmities of the stomach make an image with the Sun rising in the first face of Leo and this image is strong and is said and quickly heals the infirmities of the elderly.

Of Venus. In the hour of Venus, Venus rising in the first face of Pisces, make an image to heal women from infirmities of the genitals and to gladden the sadness of men, and cure melancholy, and to take away bad thoughts and to have vigor and strengthen in sex, and in the first face of Taurus are made images to powerfully and miraculously bring about love and to have the good will of men.

Of Mercury. In the hour of Mercury, Mercury rising in the first face of Gemini make images to sharpen the memory and intellect in knowledge and wisdom and to acquire grace from men.

Of the Moon. In the hour of the Moon, the Moon rising in the first face of Cancer make images for crops and trees and everything grown in the earth to thrive.

Chapter Eleven

The images of the faces of the signs and their effects

The ancient sages who have spoken of this science have said so many things and offered so many reasonings, that if we wished to recount all of it, it would be too long and diffuse, and we would stray from our topic. Yet we will speak of those reasonings that are necessary and without which we cannot pursue our topic. I will teach you who intend to study this science that you should study it, as you proceed, with a desire to help yourself by it, and you should reveal it to no one. The wise do not possess the science of the spirit, nor did they attain it, without great difficulty, study and labor; and they attained it because they were able to take up a life far removed from the concerns and cares of the world, and studied it with continual study with the good intelligence and memory they had. By good intellect and memory, the spirit and senses are fortified, and profound sciences are understood, through which man has a better ability to discern and verify those things that cannot be attained by everyone.

To discern the truth happens and occurs through a good memory and intellect; for this reason the wise have said things that seem to be a species of credulity, because the clarity of their teaching is all in the clarity of the rational spirit and the gift of the strengthening virtue of things. The clarity of the rational spirit is its agility and disposition to receive those things it seeks to receive, and from which gains speed in its quest. This is how the intellect becomes vigorous, active, and strong, and opinion against the work is weak. An example of strength and weakness of this kind is this, that in strength it quickly does what is to be done without great labor, and in weakness it is changed quickly and easily, as one who has a good intellect and memory understands sciences quickly and in a short time learns what is to be understood by the natural senses and study and intuition concerning things.

Good learning and understanding take place in this way, by the acuity of the spirit, until in a short time one obtains what he seeks. This intelligence and agility or disposition, however, are extracted from the acuity of fire, which works quickly in its effects, and also from the acuity of the Sun, which separates the particles of air, and illuminates and clarifies in its hour. The acuity of the intellect is the same, which by its acuity and clarity separates what is sought, and inquires in all its parts until it achieves certainty and in a short time understands them as they are. In the same way, the more acute the intellect, the more and more swiftly it understands what it seeks, and whatever is presented to it. All this is necessary to understand in this place.

Note that each of the twelve signs is divided into three equal parts, and these divisions are called faces. Each of these faces has its own images, forms and figures, as the sages of India have recounted, and to each the faces is assigned one of the seven planets. These faces are divided and distributed according to the position and order of the planets, beginning at the highest and proceeding in order all the way to the lowest, and then returning to the highest as we will explain. Beginning with Aries, the first face is assigned to Mars, the second to the Sun which follows him in order, the third to Venus who follows the Sun, and the first face of Taurus to Mercury; it proceeds in this way through the order of the planets until the end of the signs. Each of these faces has a nature and image that is appropriate to its lord; and we will present each of the images that arise in each of the faces in the following pages.

The first face of Aries is Mars, and there rises in it according to the opinion of the great sages in this science, the image of a black man, with a large and restless body, having red eyes and with an axe in his hand, girded in white cloth, and there is a great value in this face. This is a face of strength, high rank and wealth without shame. This is its form.

There ascends in the second face of Aries a woman dressed in green clothes, lacking one leg. This is a face of high rank, nobility, wealth and rulership. This is its form.

There rises in the third face of Aries, a restless man, holding in his hands a gold bracelet, wearing red clothing, who wishes to do good, but is not able to do it. This is a face of subtlety and subtle mastery and new things and instruments and similar things. This is its form.

There rises in the first face of Taurus a woman with curly hair, who has one son wearing clothing looking like flame, and she is wearing garments of the same sort. This is a face of plowing and working on the land, of sciences, geometry, sowing and building. This is its form.

There rises in the second face of Taurus a man with a body like a camel, who has cow's hooves on his fingers, and he is completely covered by a torn linen cloth. He desires to work the land, sow and build. This is a face of nobility, power, and rewarding the people. This is its form.

There rises in the third face of Taurus a man of reddish complexion with large white teeth exposed outside of his mouth, and a body like an elephant with long legs; and there ascends along with him one horse, one dog, and one calf. There rises in the third face of Pisces a sad man full of evil thoughts, thinking of deception and treachery, and before him is a woman with a donkey climbing atop her, and in her hand is a bird. This is a face of advancement and lying with women with a great appetite, and of quiet and seeking rest. This is its form.

You should know that in the aforesaid discussion of the faces of the signs there is the greatest secret of great benefit, that cannot be understood except by deep study in the art of astronomy by those who have good intellects and acute and subtle at extracting foundations and profound subtleties. This is because one planet has the power to impede the effects of another planet, and the power of a term is more powerful than the power of a face and the power of a face is more powerful than the power of a sign.

This is because it is natural for one to advance over another, as water extinguishes the heat of fire, and fire carries off the coldness of water, and water moistens the dryness of earth, and earth dries up the moistness of air. This happens because when natural things unite with one another and are pure, the strongest will conquer and prevail, and if many weak qualities join together, the strongest will be able to conquer entirely. If they are equal in their powers and effects, their work and effect will have a mixed nature.

If there is one quality that is very abundant in its own remote place, its perfection is diminished and consumed in the way that health, after it is most strong, produces illness, and when fruits are ripe and ready to be harvested they fall off of the tree, and the little snake destroys and kills great snakes, and small and tiny worms when they join together kill a serpent, and the powerful is weakened by the weak according to his nature. You should carefully consider what we have said.

The properties of these faces are such that you should observe everything that you ought necessarily to observe concerning the operations and bodies of each of the planets. When you make any of images of the faces described above, make them in a material appropriate to the planet that rules the face; then the work will be as we have said—that is, if you make the image when the corresponding planet is present in that face, then that work will be perfect and it will manifest in the world. If it happens that the Sun is rising in the hour of the planet or combines its force with it in a way that you desire,¹²⁰ the work will be stable and strong. In what we have said above, beware that the quality of the planet be not overcome by the Sun. If, on the other hand, you understand the reasons for everything that has already been said, the images of the faces we have given will bring about the effects you wish powerfully and completely.

¹²⁰ That is, if the Sun is in an amicable aspect for a benefic image, or an adverse aspect for a malefic one.

Chapter Twelve

The figures and degrees of the signs and their effects according to the opinion of the Hindus, and how they proceed in the contemplations of this science, and in what manner the virtues of superior bodies are attracted according to the opinions of the same, with notable secrets

The Hindu sages say, however, that the roots of the effects of the magical art are called decans.¹²¹ They say that each part is called a decan, and given and assigned to the seven planets; and they also call the planet that rule each part a decan. The decans are found in this way. Each sign, as it rises, is divided into three equal parts, and the first part is attributed to the lord of the ascendant, the second to the lord of the fifth house and the third to the lord of the ninth house, and this is because the Ascendant, fifth and ninth are of the same triplicity. Works of magical art through the faces of the signs according to the opinion of the Indian sages are given below in order exactly as they have said.

We begin with Aries, and we say that the first face is of Mars, in which an image can be made so that, by such images they are always victorious in battle, litigation and controversy and gain what they wish, and are never defeated; and in it can be made an image to hinder the milk of beasts and destroy their butter.

The second face of Aries is of the Sun, and in this face you may make an image for kings and lords, to acquire their love and to turn aside their annoyance.

The third face of Aries is of Jupiter, in which you may make an image for officials, deputies, judges of cities, and prelates, to place peace and benevolence between them and to reconcile them when they disagree.

The first face of Taurus is of Venus, in which an image is made to place love between man and wife.

The second face of Taurus is of Mercury, and in it you may make an image to cause hostility and to bind the will and to cause disagreement between women.

The third face of Taurus is of Saturn, in which you may make an image to cause hatred and to bind men so they are not able to have sex with women, and conversely to cause women to sicken, and to separate men and women.

The first face of Gemini is of Mercury, in which an image is made to harm the senses and intellect.

The second face of Gemini is of Venus, and in it an image is made to bring back absent people and cause fugitives to come back to a place.

The third face of Gemini is of Saturn, in which an image is made so that evil things will be spoken of whomever you wish, and so that disgrace will befall them.

The first face of Cancer is of the Moon, and in it you may make an image when it is necessary to call forth clouds and rain and to bring home absent people, whether by land or by sea.

The second face of Cancer is of Mars, and in it you may make an image to prevent unwanted rain and snow, and to banish unwanted snakes and wild beasts on land or sea.

The third face of Cancer is of Jupiter, in which you may make an image for those on the sea to escape perils.

The first face of Leo is of the Sun, in which you may make an image to acquire the love and benevolence of lords, and to bring together wolves, bears and wild beasts in any place that you wish.

The second face of Leo is of Jupiter; in it you may make an image to chase away wolves and bears, so that herds are not harmed.

The third face of Leo is of Mars, in which you may make an image to bring together bears, wolves and wild beasts in whichever city, village or place you wish.

The first face of Virgo is of Mercury, and in it you may make an image to write well and to profit in your business.

The second face of Virgo is of Saturn, in which you may make an image to destroy tools and writing instruments.

The third face of Virgo is of Venus; in it you may make an image to cause peace and love between women and their husbands.

The first face of Libra is of Venus, in which you may make an image when you wish to weaken the love of a woman, or the contrary.

The second face of Libra is of Saturn; in it you may make an image for love according to everything that has been said before.

The third face of Libra of Mercury, in which you may make an image for fugitives to return out of whichever place they are.

The first face of Scorpio is of Mars, and in it you may make an image to bring together tarantulas, snakes and vipers in whatever place you wish.

The second face of Scorpio is of Jupiter, in which you may make image to drive away tarantulas and snakes from whichever place you wish.

The third face of Scorpio is of the Moon, and in it you may make an image to divert and hinder rains, and to prevent harm either from rains or from the sea.

The first face of Sagittarius is of Jupiter, in which you may make an image for love and benevolence and companionship.

The second face of Sagittarius is of Mars, and in it you may make an image to bring afflictions and illnesses to whoever you wish.

The third face of Sagittarius is of the Sun, in which you may make an image to acquire the love and the grace of kings and superiors.

The first face of Capricorn is of Saturn, in which you may make an image to hunt birds and beasts, and for the milk of herds to thrive and increase.

The second face of Capricorn is of Venus, and in it you may make an image to increase the milk of goats, and improve bees, and make them multiply in your area, and to call forth birds in any place you wish.

The third face of Capricorn is of Mercury, in which you may make an image to destroy everything contained in the previous faces.

The first face of Aquarius is of Saturn, in which you may make an image for love and friendship and companionship with the old, whether lords or servants, and to locate and take hold of treasures.

The second face of Aquarius is of Mercury, and in it you may make an image for love and companionship with the young.

The third face of Aquarius is of Venus, in which you may make an image for love and benevolence from women.

The first face of Pisces is of Jupiter, in which you may make an image for fishing in the sea and for a good voyage thereon.

The second face of Pisces is of the Moon, and in it you may make an image for the benefit of plants and fruits and to call forth rain at the necessary time, and for fishes to congregate in any place you wish, either in rivers or in the sea.

The third face of Pisces is of Mars, in which you may make an image for a good journey in military activities and for hunting birds and beasts.

This is what is said of the faces that the Indians call decans.

Hermes Trismegistus explains in his book On Images how to calculate images for each and every part of the human body and under which face of the signs to make them. Take pure gold and make a seal and write on it the image of a lion, with the Sun in Leo in the first or second face and in the Ascendant or Midheaven, and the Moon not in her house,¹²² and the lord of the Ascendant not applying to an aspect with Saturn or Mars or separating from them. Bind the seal around the loins or kidneys. I have tested this, and found that one who does this will not suffer thereafter. I have also seen also a doctor use this seal to seal olibanum¹²³ like wax; and patients that were given the seal in a drink were immediately freed from their illness. I myself have made and sealed pills of goat's blood according to this method and it worked miraculously. This happens likewise for the sufferings of the other members of the body, according to their manner and form, and the appropriate symbolism of the planets.

Aries. This figure is a ram with no tongue. Its properties are for all the infirmities of the head. While it may be made when the Sun is in the first or third or fifth degree of Aries, this figure will be of no benefit unless it is made when the Moon is waxing or full. These are the conditions of the figure. Saturn and Mars must be direct, Jupiter is not in Aquarius and Venus is not in Virgo, which is the sign of her fall, and Mercury is not in Taurus; make the figure between the first degree of Aries and the fifth degree of the first face, and do not make it in the second face (they have said elsewhere that the second face pertains to the eyes and the third to the ears, whence you must pay attention to the degrees), and when the Sun and Jupiter are completely above the earth; and make it in the hour of the Sun. Others say that it is good in the day and hour of Jupiter. And make it from gold and silver to the weight of 7 grains of common wheat. This is proven.¹²⁴

Taurus. Its image is placed above the liver and is for all its infirmities. Make it in the first face, between the first degree and the ninth. Let Saturn not be in Pisces nor the Moon in Scorpio and make Mars direct, since it ought to cause great change. Make it in the day and hour of the Sun, and do not have the Sun below the earth. Do not make it in the second face of Taurus, for they say elsewhere that the second face is for infirmities of the gall bladder, and the third face is for infirmities of the windpipe. Make the image in the form of a bull with a great head, small mouth, and great eyes. Make it of red bronze.

Gemini. Its image is placed upon the spleen and is for all its infirmities. Make it from the first degree to the tenth. Let the Sun be above the earth; and with Jupiter in Gemini it is much more powerful because Jupiter diminishes the spleen. Gemini has two bodies twisted together, in the form of two men up to the navel, and from the navel is one body; and in one hand it holds a staff. Make it from silver in the day and hour of the Sun and the first face of Gemini; in the second and third faces, you will find that it damages other members of the body.

Cancer. Its image is placed on the stomach for all its infirmities. Make it in the first face and from the first degree to the fifth; the second face is not assigned to these infirmities, for it is assigned to the infirmities of the lower intestine. Be careful that Saturn and Jupiter are not retrograde, and that Mars is in Taurus and the Moon waxing and the Sun is descending (that is after noon) and Leo is above the earth. And do not make it except on Sunday and do not make it except from the first hour until the eighth hour or in the first and the eighth. Make it in gold or silver. Its image is the image of a crab. Be careful that Capricorn is not in the middle house (according to the opinion of the masters of doctrine the middle house is the sixth or eighth house). Taurus should not be in the fourth house; and be careful with these conditions, because all of them are necessary. This image is for the sufferings of colic. If you are able to make it in the night of the Sun and in his hour,¹²⁵ it is very good.

Leo. His image is placed over the right kidney and is for all of the infirmities of the kidneys. Make the image in the form of a lion without a tongue, straight and not twisted. Make it in the day and hour of the Sun, from the first degree until the tenth degree of the first face. Let Mars be direct; and if Saturn and Jupiter should be in the same sign, the seal will be useless. If the Moon is in Leo, let it be waxing, and if she is in other signs, have no fear, so long as she is not in the fourth, fifth or sixth houses. Saturn must not be in the eighth house. Make the seal in gold or silver, and engrave it or stamp it in one blow. Let the weather not be cloudy, and do not make in the middle of the fifth degree or higher, and let the Sun be above the earth. The second face is assigned to the ribs that are in front of the kidneys, and this is proved. Others say to imprint the image in mastic, when the Sun is in Leo, and when the time comes that it is necessary, soften it for ten days in wine and drink all of it, and it cures all illnesses of the kidneys for a whole year.

Virgo. Its image is a woman wrapped in cloth riding on a lion, and in her hand she has a staff or iron. It is placed over all infirmities of the left kidney, and for people over five years old. And there are many other conditions laid out in the Book of Images, yet I will explain the ones that are most necessary. Saturn, Jupiter and Mars should be retrograde,¹²⁶ the Moon should not be in the fifth house nor the Sun in the eighth house, nor is Jupiter in Aquarius nor Saturn in Leo nor Aldebaran under the earth nor Algamidirus¹²⁷ with the Moon nor in aspect with her, nor should Saturn nor Mars be contrary (that is opposite) nor Jupiter in the Midheaven. Make it with the Sun in the first to fifth degree of the first face of Virgo. Make the image of a man riding on a lion. This has great properties, and with this the sages of India agree because they have proven it. Make it in silver or gold in the day and hour of the Sun, and do not change anything here and be careful of the number of the degrees.

¹²⁶ This is probably a scribal error, and these planets should not be retrograde.

Libra. Its image is placed over all infirmities of the stomach. Make it in the first face from the first degree until the tenth. Venus should not be retrograde nor Jupiter in Libra, and the Sun should be above the earth, and make it in the day of Jupiter from the first hour until the fifth. Make it from gold or silver to the weight of seven medium grains of wheat. The sages of India do not change their custom; rather, they make it in the day and hour of the Sun, and it is proven that it should not be made on a cloudy day. Also, if the Sun is able to shine upon the image, it will not be as good, as Enoch wrote; and this is proven.

It is said that the image of Libra ought to be one man climbing or walking upright, and in his hand he holds a scale so that it balances, and on his head a bird who is half white and half black. This is drawn at noon when the Moon is not waning. If she is in Libra, it is best to be cautious about the number and form, and this is proven. It is likewise proven that it is found best in the first degree; and according to their opinion it ought to be made when Jupiter is above the earth and in his day, and it is good for it to be made by engraving rather than stamping.

Scorpio. Some specify that its image is that of a crow and others its image is that of a man with a crow in his hand; and both of these are by experiment. It is placed over the infirmities of the remaining intestines. Make it when the Moon is waxing and in the day and hour of the Sun; and the Sun is above the earth; and make it in the first face; at a time that is not cloudy. The Hindus also specify that Saturn should be above the earth. Make it in the first face from the first degree to the eleventh.

Sagittarius. Its image is a man shooting arrows with a bow. Enoch says that it rises obliquely and its head is curved; and holds a bird in its left hand. And it is placed over all infirmities of the right hand; and it is greatly recommended against forgetfulness because it is good at expelling all of the infirmities of Saturn, Mars and Venus. Let Saturn not be retrograde, nor Mars in the twelfth house, nor Jupiter in the fourth house; and the Sun should be above the earth, and the weather should not be cloudy. Make it of gold or silver in the first face, from the first degree until the fifth, in the day and hour of the Sun.

Capricorn. Its image is one white [edulus], and the middle of its stomach is black. It is placed over all of the infirmities of the left hand, and expels the infirmities of Mercury and the Moon. Let Mercury not be retrograde and let it be above the earth; and let Saturn be under the earth and Venus above the earth in the east, as Enoch says. But the Hindus say that it must be made in the day and hour of the Sun or in the day of Mercury and the hour of the Sun; but this latter is not as good as the former. Make it in the first face, between the first degree and the tenth. Some specify its quality as laughter and weeping (that is, it counters laughter and weeping), while others say it counters angry men and restores them to being agreeable.

Aquarius. Its image is a man holding two pitchers. And it is placed over all infirmities of the right foot. Let Saturn, Jupiter and Mars be not retrograde, and the Moon be above the earth, and Venus under the earth. Others place this image over all infirmities of the feet. Make it in the first face from the first degree until the fourth. It will carry away all wicked contemplations of the heart. Others specify it for causing delight. Make it in the day and hour of the Sun, when Jupiter is not combust of the Sun, and the Sun is not elevated above Jupiter, and Saturn is in the degree of the ascendant.

Pisces. Its image is placed over all infirmities of the left foot. You may make it when the Moon is in the Midheaven; and Mars is not in the Midheaven, Jupiter is not retrograde and the Sun is above the earth, and it is not cloudy. Make it entirely in the first face, as the second face is located over the shins and the third over the hips. Others specify that the third is against the cruelty of men, and the Hindus have proven this. Make it from gold and not from any other metal. Other say that that tin is good or mastic. And make it during the day. These forms that we have said above are what Hermes specifies in his book of calculation.

One of the great sages of the Hindus says that the infusion of the fixed virtue of the stars is not completed without consecration, purification, and the investigation and assessment of the will, by which the virtues of superior bodies are as the forms of material powers, and inferior forms are as material for the virtues of superior bodies, and each is joined to the other accordingly as one draws the other. This is because all corporeal substances are one substance, just as all spiritual substances are one substance.

And some sages among them¹²⁸ say that virtues and powers are subtle things that are made by God, and put by Him in the world above his creatures out of His benevolence and love; concerning which these same sages have made many books concerning this, and all have been written with a subtle and acute intelligence. When they seek to attain and come to a higher level than the Law allows, first they must pay the penalty in their bodies and purify themselves from everything sordid. They used to begin in the first hour of the Lord's day, which day and hour are properly attributed to the Sun, and fasted for forty days from the consumption of meat, and fed on things born from the earth, and on seeds and herbs. They used to eat less and less each day until the forty days were over, and what they ate on the last day of the forty days was one-fortieth what they ate at first. In all this fasting they used to use medicines which removed the desire to eat and drink, though they never lacked the opportunity to do so.

When they had done as just described, there used to come into their spirits a subtle and acute intelligence, and they used to understand whatever they wished, and retained and increased their wills and senses; and they diminished the terrestrial and ponderous parts of themselves, and the subtle and acute parts of them became apparent, and they used to show an appetite and taste for ascending to the world above, and to the place from which spirits come, and they abhorred the flavors, repose, and delights of this world. When they had done this, it was then fitting for them to draw down virtues and powers from heaven, with which they would speak, and accomplish marvels, and those who wished would perceive what was to come and know the future periods of their lives, and they would receive laws from the powers which they would freely enact; and they obeyed the spirits of the stars.

In this book are the great secrets which they called the truth about things, by which they knew God Most High and recognized him as the maker and creator of all things. They asserted that those who engaged in this work did so only in order to come to an understanding of God and His unity, so that they might be illuminated by His light. What we have said here in the foregoing, we say only so that the foundations of these things might be shown and their effects and consecrations might be collected, as they are preserved in their books.

So great are the marvels thereof that if we wished to tell of them, it would be as hard to recount as to hear them, and this book of ours would become too long and prolix, and we would wander from our theme. Therefore we return to our theme, usefully leaving the aforesaid.

I say now what the sage Alraze¹²⁹ wrote in a magical book, in which he specified each constellation and tested what it was assigned to. In all works of magic for love, friendship and alliance or all things thing to be done, we ought to see that the Moon conjoins Venus or forms an aspect with the sign Pisces, or that the Moon in Pisces forms an aspect with Venus in Taurus; if you attend closely to the preceding, you will obtain your intention in a marvelous way and fulfill what you wish.

When you wish to do any evil thing, we ought to see that the Moon is in Cancer or Libra forms an aspect with Mars, or conjoins him in the Ascendant or seventh house; the evil that you ask for will be fulfilled. In all workings in which you wish blood to flow swiftly, place the Moon in a water sign. In all workings for discord and hatred, place the Moon in Aries or see that Cancer forms a square aspect with Saturn, or conjoins him. In operations in which you wish to bind tongues, place the Moon under the Sun's beams and let our operations be done at night.

In every working you do for kings, old men, and nobles, place the Moon in aspect to the Sun in his sign or exaltation, and in the Midheaven; when this is done our petition will be fulfilled. In all workings for prelates, judges, leaders, and laws that are to be introduced, place the Moon in aspect with Jupiter in Pisces or Sagittarius, in the Midheaven, and your work will be even more strengthened and complete. In all workings concerning law, scribes, servants of kings, or tenants who give returns to kings, place the Moon aspecting Mercury, Mercury being in Gemini or Virgo, and the Moon full; and then your business will be able to carried out.

¹²⁹ Abu-Bakr Muhammad ibn Zakariya al-Razi (850-923 CE), known in medieval Europe as Rhazes, a famous Muslim physician and philosopher.

You should understand that the square aspect of the Moon with any planet is more apparent according to nature; and this is when it is in any of the four angles, the strongest of which is the Midheaven. In all operations for prosperity, see that there are aspects to fortunate planets, but for evil effects do not have aspects to the fortunes, but only with the infortunes. When you wish to do any form of evil work, see that an infortune is in aspect, because from the strength and power of Saturn and Mars the preceding effects are carried out, because they are stronger and more powerful in this type of work.

Similarly, you should know that the aspects of the Moon with planets are more powerful when the Moon is oriental of the Sun and in front of him, and not when she is behind him. The aspect of the Moon and the Sun by sextile or trine is good in all high works in which you seek treasure, great wealth, royal power, honor and victory. When in the all of the preceding operations the Moon is in the tenth house, the effects are good and very strong in completing the work, which cannot be when she is in the fourth or seventh houses, nor when the Moon is waning or combust of the Sun.

The trine, sextile, square and opposition aspects of the Moon to Venus are appropriate to all effects, nevertheless it is not as good as the aspects of Jupiter which indeed are useful and powerful in all operations. Still, in works of agreement, love, and lasting friendship with women and in similar works the aspects of Venus are better and more powerful for all of the preceding things that are specifically attributed to Venus, the strongest of which is the trine aspect with the Moon in an earth or water sign. And if by chance the Moon is in a fire or air sign, have her rising.

The sage Alraze mentioned above, who recounted the foregoing, was a man worthy of belief in every science, because he was a sage and a seeker of knowledge and a tester of things, having studied much in ancient books. Geber Abnehayem,¹³⁰ however, was the great sage who wrote many books in this science, such as the book which he named Book of the Secrets of Magic, and another, the Great Book divided into eighty chapters, and another which he named Book of Keys containing the figures of the degrees, along with their effects and judgments, and another On the Astrolabe in which he presented all the operations of the astrolabe, which is divided into a thousand chapters, in which he gave many works and marvelous effects that no one had recounted before him, and his great book which he called Complete Book of Magic, and compiled in his teachings the wisdom of every science and other marvels that were always hidden away by the wise.

This same man observed everything encompassed in the science of magical images and the effects of the figures of heaven and the powers of the planets and the works of nature; out of which this sage composed all the foregoing, and extracted the motion and effect of the Sun which had been proven by the calculations of mathematicians. Because of his merit I have called him a sage, and have taken him as my master, and become his disciple, even though so great a time lies between us. I pray to God that He grant him eternal life, and grant him a high place among the souls of the saints.

The great sage Plato, however, wrote two books about magic, that is, the Greater and the Lesser. In the Greater he wrote about the effects of the figures of heaven, from which he described great marvels, such as walking upon water, and changing into the form of any animal you desire, or into some composite form never before heard of in this world, and calling down rain at times when it ought not to rain and preventing rain when it ought to rain, and making stars move and cast down rays out of their proper times, and burning down hostile cities as well as ships at sea and remote places that you wish to burn, and ascending into the air, and making stars appear at times incongruent for their appearance so that they seem to fall from heaven, and speaking with the dead, and making it appear as though the Sun and Moon were divided into many parts, and making ropes and spears appear to be serpents and dragons, eating anyone they encounter, and making long and short journeys pass in the blink of an eye.

All the foregoing that we have described are brought about by the powers and virtues of figures and by the strong attraction of spirits that will be obedient to us, and by the strong composition of the bodies of the figures of materials brought together from this inferior world. From these come the spiritual motions that move all bodies, by which motions marvels are brought about, as well as works that are not done by human beings, but appear to belong almost to the category of miracles. For the same reason all the books composed by this sage are full of figures which he describes and exhorts us to understand, and to learn their properties and effects, and by what path we are able to achieve effects if we follow it in every detail.

This is what Pythagoras, speaking of the figures of heaven, said: that they are examples according to other figures of the world. He said also that in the higher world there is a durable substance that our senses are not able to perceive. Geber Abnehayem composed a book about this science which he called the Complete Book, which explains what is a rational animal and what is an irrational animal. It also speaks in this book, speaking according to natural reason, about what is assimilated to the effects of nature, but all that Plato said, according to heavenly reason, Geber said about the powers and effects of spiritual figures composed of natural materials. In this book of ours, if God wills, all of the foregoing will be explained with reasons for the effects of the figures of heaven, all of which will be explained in an appropriate place, according to our judgment, together with all that we have found in the books of the wise and experienced in our own time of the effects of figures, signs, and planets. But this second book of ours is now at an end.

Glossary

- amicable aspect: in astrology, a trine or sextile aspect
- adverse aspect: in astrology, a square or opposite aspect
- angles: in astrology, the first, fourth, seventh, and tenth houses of the horoscope, also called cardines or cardinal houses
- Arabic parts: points on the horoscope calculated from the relative position of two planets and one of the house cusps
- aspect: in astrology, angular relationships between planets that bring their effects into interaction; traditionally trine (120°) and sextile (60°) are the amicable (favorable) aspects, and opposition (180°) and square (90°) are the adverse (unfavorable) aspects
- augury: the art of divination from natural omens such as the flight of birds
- benefic: in astrology, positive or favorable
- black bile: also known as melancholy, one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of earth
- blood: one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of air
- cadent: in astrology, in a cadent house of the horoscope
- cadent houses: in astrology, the third, sixth, ninth, and twelfth houses of the horoscope
- cardinal houses: see angles
- cardines: see angles
- choler: see yellow bile
- coadunation: in medieval physics, the fusion of the four elements in a material substance, or any other unification of separate things as one
- coction: transforming a substance by keeping it at a steady heat for a period of time
- combust: in astrology, within 8° 30' of the Sun
- common signs: in astrology, Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius, and Pisces
- conjunction: in astrology, the meeting of two planets in the same degree of the Zodiac; in traditional astrology this is not considered an aspect but rather a different form of planetary interaction

- corruption: in medieval science, the process by which things go out of existence
- debility: in astrology, a planet is said to have debility or be debilitated when it is in the sign of its detriment or fall, or in hostile aspect to one of the infortunes, or in one of the four cadent houses
- decan: see face
- dexter aspect: in astrology, an aspect in which the swifter planet moves away from the slower one.
- dignity: in astrology, a planet is said to have dignity or be dignified when it is in a sign, term, or face that it rules, or the sign of its exaltation or triplicity, or in amicable aspect to one of the fortunes, or in one of the four cardinal houses
- direct: in astrology, a planet is direct when it moves along the ecliptic in its normal direction; the opposite of retrograde
- direct ascension, signs of: in astrology, the signs from Capricorn through Gemini
- election: in astrology, the art of selecting in advance a time when a desired astrological influence is at its peak
- electuary: a medicine blended with sugar or honey
- elements: in medieval physics, earth, air, water, and fire, which are combinations of the qualities acting in matter rather than material substances in their own right
- elixir: in alchemy, the philosopher's stone, a substance able to transmute ordinary metals into silver or gold
- face: in astrology, a division of 10° or 1/3 of a zodiacal sign, also called a decan; each face is assigned to a planet
- first matter: in medieval science, the prima materia or quintessence, the perfectly transparent and luminous substance out of which the heavens are made
- fixed signs: in astrology, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius
- form: in medieval science, the basic characteristics of a material substance, rather than the outward shape taken by that substance
- fortunes, the: in astrology, the planets Jupiter and Venus
- generation: in medieval science, the process by which things come into existence
- hayz: in astrology, a condition in which a masculine, diurnal planet is above the earth in the daytime in a masculine sign, or a feminine, nocturnal planet is below the earth at night in a feminine sign; a planet in its hayz is greatly strengthened

horary astrology: the art of astrological divination, which interprets a chart cast for the moment a question is asked in order to answer the question humors: in medieval medicine, four subtle fluids, identified with blood, phlegm, yellow bile, and black bile, that maintain health when in balance and cause illness when out of balance

infortunes, the: in astrology, the planets Saturn and Mars long ascension, signs of: see oblique ascension, signs of lord of the ascendant: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac rising at a particular moment

lord of the house: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac on the cusp of a given astrological house at a particular moment

lord of the question: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac on the cusp of the house governing the purpose of an electional chart or magical working at a particular moment

malefic: in astrology, negative or unfavorable

melancholy: see black bile

mobile signs: in astrology, Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn

oblique ascension, signs of: in astrology, the signs from Cancer through Sagittarius

occidental: rising before the Sun or another specified planet

oriental: rising after the Sun or another specified planet

part of fortune: one of the Arabic parts, points on the horoscope calculated from the positions of planets and other points; the point of fortune is calculated from the Sun, Moon, and the ascendant, and shows the location of good fortune in the chart

phlegm: one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of water

planets: in medieval astrology, the seven visible bodies that move regularly against the background of the fixed stars, the Sun, the Moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; the Sun and Moon are occasionally distinguished from the planets prelates: clergy of high rank, such as Christian bishops or Muslim imams.

quadrivium: the four Pythagorean sciences that formed the high school subjects of medieval and Renaissance educational theory: arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy qualities: in medieval physics, heat, cold, dryness and moisture, which combine to create the four elements

quintessence: in ancient and medieval cosmology, the fifth element, the substance from which the spheres of the heavens are made; also called "high matter" in Picatrix

reception: in astrology, a relationship between two planets, in which each planet is in a sign, term, or face in which the other is dignified retrograde: in astrology, the apparent movement of a planet in the opposite direction from its normal course; the opposite of direct revolution of a nativity: a chart cast annually for the time when the sun reached the same position as at birth, used to predict the following year in the native's life short ascension, signs of: see direct ascension, signs of simple: in medieval medicine, a medicine made from a single herb sinister aspect: in astrology, an aspect made when the swifter planet moves toward the slower one

spirit: in medieval physics, vital force, intermediate between consciousness and matter

succeedent houses: in astrology, the second, fifth, eighth, and eleventh houses of the horoscope

suffumigation: exposing an object to the smoke of incense, to charge it with the magical virtues of the incense term: in astrology, one of a set of sixty uneven divisions of the heavens; each term is ruled by a planet via combusta: in astrology, the section of the Zodiac between 15° Libra and 15° Scorpio, which has a malefic effect on planets placed in it virtue: in medieval thought, distinctive excellence and power, rather than strictly moral virtue

yellow bile: also known as choler, one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of fire

Note on Kindle Versions of Picatrix

The Kindle Version of the Complete Picatrix Liber Atratus has been released in two volumes: Books I & II of Picatrix and Books III & IV of Picatrix. Together these two volumes contain all four books of the Complete Picatrix. The release in two volumes was necessitated by Amazon's pricing structure. Had we released a single volume with all four books it would have cost as much as the paperback version despite not needing printing or shipping! By releasing Picatrix as two volumes we were able to cut the total cost of the E-books to half of the paperback! We apologize, but we think readers would prefer the significantly lower cost. The Translators' Introduction and commentary, bibliography and the glossary appear in both volumes.

Translators' Introduction

In an age when such terms as "classic" are the everyday fare of advertising copywriters, it is difficult to know how to introduce a genuine classic of occult literature, but the book you hold in your hands is impossible to describe in any other way. Originally written sometime in the ninth century by an anonymous Arab wizard in North Africa or Spain, and credited in the fashion of the time to the notable Sufi and scholar al-Majriti, it was originally titled Ghayat al-Hakim, "The Goal of the Sage."

Like so many works of Arabic occultism, it eventually found its way to Europe. It was translated into Spanish and Latin at the court of Alfonso the Wise, King of Castile, in the year 1256, and received the new title of Picatrix. Scholars to this day are uncertain what the name means. The explanation that seems most plausible is that it is the Latin version of an Arabic transliteration, perhaps Buqratis, of a Greek original; it is tempting, though unprovable, to suggest that the name may have been Harpocrates, the Hellenistic Egyptian god of silence and mystery. The Latin text makes the mystery more intriguing by claiming that Picatrix was the name of the book's author.

The influence of Picatrix on the magical traditions of the western world was immense. Most of the significant scholarly occultists of the late Middle Ages appear to have drawn on it, or on material borrowed from it by other authors. Marsilio Ficino, whose translation of the Corpus Hermeticum launched the Renaissance occult revival, borrowed heavily from it for his pathbreaking Three Books on Life; Heinrich Cornelius Agrippa's Three Books of Occult Philosophy was even more extensively influenced by Picatrix, and some of the leading figures in the English occult renaissance of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, Simon Forman, Elias Ashmole and William Lilly, used it as a primary source for their own magical work. With the end of the Renaissance and the rise of the scientific materialism that dominated seventeenth-century culture, however, Picatrix dropped from sight, and the revival of magic in the western world that began in the middle of the 19th century passed it by. Even today it remains the least known of the major works of western occultism.

The Picatrix in Context

To understand why Picatrix had so great an impact on its own time, and has been so thoroughly forgotten in ours, it needs to be recognized as the extraordinary work it is. It is not simply a collection of magical recipes and rituals, like the grimoires of a later period. Though it does contain plenty of detailed instructions in magical procedures, its central focus is philosophical; it is in fact the most extensive treatise on the philosophy of magic to be written anywhere west of Iamblichus' On the Mysteries of the fourth century and Cornelius Agrippa's Three Books of Occult Philosophy of the sixteenth.

The philosophy that grounds the magic of Picatrix is the same theurgic Neoplatonism that fills both the books just mentioned, enriched, as Agrippa's work also was, by the astrological mysticism that played so large a role in the magical end of Neoplatonism after Iamblichus' time. To Neoplatonists, among them the author and a great many of the readers of Picatrix, the world was a hierarchy of levels of being, down which currents of influence cascaded from the divine unity at its summit. The work of the magician consisted of learning the ways of these currents, and drawing upon them to perform magical works when they were at their strongest.

Picatrix was not simply a discussion of magical philosophy, however. It contained an immense body of practical occult lore that had been gathered up among Arab occultists over the two centuries or so before its anonymous author put pen to paper. The practices of Neoplatonist theurgy contributed a great deal to the collection, and so did the astral magic of Mesopotamia; there are also workings in Picatrix that show close affinities with the magic practiced in ancient Egypt, and others that are clearly borrowed from Hindu tradition. No other book on magic from the Middle Ages contains anything close to a comparable collection of magical technique.

Much of the magic taught in Picatrix, in addition, used a particular procedure that could be found in few other sources. That procedure seems to have determined the name used most often for magic in the Latin text, nigromantia, which literally means "black divination", very nearly in the sense that a modern book on espionage might refer to acts of sabotage and the like as "black ops." Astrology, the principal method of divination in the medieval world, was generally considered even by theologians to be a legitimate and acceptable means of gathering information. What was not acceptable to the orthodox was any more active use of the subtle currents of influence that astrologers attempted to track, and this is exactly what Picatrix taught. Its "black divination" focused on making talismans at times precisely chosen for their astrological properties, so that a specific influence radiated thereafter from the talismans for good or ill. Unlike the later magic of the grimoires, these workings required little ceremony and made only limited use of divine names and words of power; their effectiveness came from the heavens.

The audience of Picatrix differed from that of many other medieval occult texts as well, for its anonymous author states repeatedly that it is solely intended for the use of members of a particular profession of his time. The Latin text gives that profession the title sapiens; we have translated it "sage," but there is another English word perhaps even better suited to the connotations the author had in mind: "wizard."

It is too rarely remembered that legendary figures such as Merlin, and their fictional equivalents such as J.R.R. Tolkien's Gandalf the Grey, reflect an authentic medieval phenomenon: the freelance occultist-scholar whose stock in trade was as much useful advice as magical powers, and who aspired, and very occasionally rose, to the position of councilor to kings. The author of Picatrix conveniently lists the qualifications for a sapiens in Book IV, chapter 5; they include a good working knowledge of the following topics: agriculture, seafaring, and politics; the military sciences; "the civilized arts by which people are helped," including grammar, languages, law, rhetoric, writing, and economics; the four traditional branches of mathematics, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music; logic, with the works of Aristotle specifically singled out for study; medicine; the natural sciences, and metaphysics, with Aristotle's writings on these two subjects again specifically referenced.

From a modern perspective, this very demanding curriculum may seem irrelevant to the work of a professional wizard. From within the worldview of the Middle Ages and Renaissance, it was essential. Whether he was earning a modest living by casting horary divinations in a marketplace or leading a privileged life in a royal court, a wizard's job was to provide sound advice to his clients. That advice would draw inspiration from astrology or one of the other scholarly methods of divination practiced at the time, such as geomancy, but it would also be informed by a broad education in very nearly the entire body of useful knowledge that had survived the decline and fall of the Roman world.

Nor, of course, did anyone in the Middle Ages or Renaissance perceive the sort of rigid barrier between occult sciences, such as astrology, and practical sciences, such as mathematics, that modern industrial cultures consider self-evident. As Arthur Lovejoy usefully pointed out many years ago in The Great Chain of Being, medieval and Renaissance cultures understood the cosmos to be a unity, bound together by connections and influences extending from the throne of God above the heavens to the deepest recesses of matter. The arts and sciences had their own proper place in that cosmos, and each branch of human knowledge, however humble or exalted, cast a distinctive light on all the others. Thus the sapiens, the sage or wizard of the medieval world, took all human knowledge as his province and applied it to the challenging task of providing sound guidance to his clients in a troubled and often brutal world.

The importance of the wizard as a professional found itself reflected early on in literature and folklore, in such figures as Merlin the Mage and Nectanebus, who played a Merlinesque role as magical instructor to Alexander the Great in the medieval

Alexander legends. The concept of the magical book containing all the occult secrets of the universe similarly found its way into the popular culture of the age. Just as wizards passed in turn from medieval legend to modern fantasy fiction, in turn, the archetype of the secret book of occult lore found a new home in modern literature, and produced a remarkable parallel to Picatrix itself.

In a 1923 short story, "The Hound," pulp horror writer H. P. Lovecraft first mentioned an imaginary tome of darkest magic titled the Necronomicon, written by the equally fictional Arab wizard Abdul Alhazred. The Necronomicon appeared frequently in Lovecraft's stories from then on, along with other equally imaginary tomes such as the Pnakotic Manuscript, and evolved into the core text of an imaginary religion of evil: the cult of the Great Old Ones, terrifying beings from deep space who had ruled the Earth in the prehistoric past and waited until "the stars were right" to resume their dominion.

By 1927 the Necronomicon had become central enough to his "Cthulhu Mythos" stories that Lovecraft wrote out a few pages on its supposed history to help him keep his facts straight. According to this document,[1] the original Arabic name of the book was Al Azif, and it was compiled by Abdul Alhazred around 730 CE, drawing on forbidden lore from Babylon, Egypt, and a lost civilization in the "Empty Quarter" of the Arabian peninsula. Alhazred himself was devoured by an invisible monster in the marketplace of Damascus in 738, but copies of his book nonetheless got into circulation, and it was translated into Greek by Theodorus Philetas in 950, who retitled it Necronomicon. (Lovecraft interpreted this as "an image of the laws of death;" this is not quite grammatical Greek, and a more accurate translation might be "Concerning the Laws of Death," or possibly "Concerning Dead Laws.")

In 1228, the Danish scholar Olaus Wormius supposedly translated the Necronomicon into Latin, and the famous British occultist John Dee, Elizabeth I's court astrologer, made a manuscript English translation some centuries later. From that point on, the history discusses how different copies got into the places where it turned up in Lovecraft's stories and those of other writers who borrowed his eldritch stage props, with his enthusiastic permission, for their own horror tales.

By the last years of his life, Lovecraft was having to fend off requests by fans and fellow writers that he find the time to manufacture the Necronomicon. His work fell into obscurity for several decades after his death, but it found newly appreciative audiences in the 1970s, and an assortment of forged Necronomicons duly saw print thereafter. One, written by a group of New York occultists under the pen name "Simon," appeared in a mass market paperback edition in 1980 and became wildly popular among those members of the occult community (unfortunately no small number) who had trouble telling the difference between pulp horror fiction and genuine magic.

Among less credulous occultists, however, rumors began circulating sometime in the 1990s that Lovecraft had modeled the Necronomicon on Picatrix. This was admittedly only one of several stories that tried to link the Necronomicon to some real work of magic, but the rumor gains a certain degree of credibility from the remarkable parallels between the two works. Like the Necronomicon, Picatrix was first written in Arabic, translated into Latin in the thirteenth century, and circulated surreptitiously among European occultists for centuries thereafter. Both books contain detailed instructions for rituals meant to call down unhuman powers from what we would now call outer space, and include malefic magical workings of terrific power.

Lovecraft could easily have learned about Picatrix in time to use it as a model for the Necronomicon, as the second volume of Lynn Thorndyke's History of Magic and Experimental Science, which devotes an entire chapter to Picatrix, was published in 1923. Still, the best study of the Necronomicon so far, Daniel Harms and John Wisdom Gonce's The Necronomicon Files (2003), points out that Lovecraft's knowledge of the occult was extremely limited, and there is no evidence that he drew on anything but a few popular occult exposés in constructing the dire rituals of his imaginary cult. Perhaps the safest generalization is that if Picatrix did not exist, someone would have had to invent it, and this is exactly what Lovecraft seems to have done.

Picatrix in Practice

Many of the readers of this translation, like the readers of the original Arabic and Latin editions, will read it in the hope of learning how to practice its magic. This can certainly be done, but three significant obstacles must be confronted by anyone who hopes to learn the magic of Picatrix and put it to work in today's world.

First, nearly all the magical traditions that fill the pages of Picatrix and provided the medieval wizard with his stock in trade are unfamiliar to most of today's occultists, and the magical philosophy that underlies them will be even more so. Readers steeped in modern occult lore may be startled to find that today's popular notion of magical power as a function of the magician's will energizing forms in the imagination appears nowhere in Picatrix. This should come as no surprise; the concept in question was introduced to the magical traditions by Eliphas Levi in 1854 in his Dogme et Rituel de la Haute Magie, which took it from the philosophy of Arthur Schopenhauer, and it existed nowhere in magical teachings before that time.

Picatrix is the product of an older world, and its magic draws on a conception of the nature of magic and the universe that differs in almost every imaginable way from today's occult traditions. In the magic of Picatrix, the sources of magical power are in the macrocosm rather than the microcosm; power is native to the universe, not to the mage. Vast currents of creative force set in motion by the Godhead itself cascade downward through multiple levels of being. They are refracted by the stars and planets like rays of light striking moving crystals, and descend to the earth with greater or lesser force, depending on the complex geometries of astrological relationship. The magician is the one who knows how to catch these currents at the moments of their greatest power, store their energies in material objects appropriate to them, and direct those energies to carefully chosen ends.

The differences between modern occultism and the old magic of Picatrix are sweeping enough that attempts to practice the workings in the pages that follow from within the worldview of contemporary magic are unlikely to get far or accomplish much. The student of Picatrix today needs to start at the same place as his equivalent ten centuries ago, with a thorough study of traditional astrology, as it was practiced in the Middle Ages and Renaissance. Modern astrology is emphatically not an adequate preparation, and in fact can all too easily be a barrier to understanding; instead, close study of a standard text such as William Lilly's Christian Astrology, followed by practical experience with the techniques it teaches, will provide the necessary background. The distance learning courses offered by Renaissance Astrology (<http://www.renaissanceastrology.com>) provide another and, for many people, a more congenial way to gain the same working knowledge of the ancient science of the stars.

The gap between ancient and modern magic and astrology, then, forms the first of the three obstacles that must be overcome by the modern student of Picatrix. The second unfolds from the gap between the medieval culture that gave the old magic its social context and the modern industrial cultures that do the same thing for our very different ways of thought.

Picatrix, to put matters bluntly, is not politically correct, and it contains plenty of things that will affront the modern reader. Name a hot-button issue in contemporary culture, relations between the genders, the legitimacy of political power, the ethics of using animals as raw material for human activities, and more, and you may be sure that Picatrix offends today's sensibilities on that issue, since it approaches that issue from within the context of its own culture, rather than ours. Many readers will find this intolerable, and even those who learn to tolerate it may find that some things in the following pages make for uncomfortable reading.

In some cases, the gap has practical consequences as well. For example, many of the confections described in Picatrix, combinations of magically effective substances used to receive and apply the descending influences of the heavens, include animal ingredients that are illegal for private citizens to possess in the United States, and a great many others contain substances that are very hard to obtain. Still others are stunningly expensive, how many people can afford, say, to buy several ounces of pure gold for a talisman of the Sun? In every case, there are alternatives, but it requires careful study of Picatrix and other medieval magical texts to identify them and learn how to adapt ancient recipes to modern conditions, in the same way that the author of Picatrix and his medieval and Renaissance readers adopted the magic they inherited to the needs of their own times.

The author of Picatrix could easily have explained how to do this; at several points in the course of the book, he demonstrates a rare talent for distinguishing essential themes from minor details, and offers one option after another suited to different sets of changing conditions. In most of the book, however, he does nothing of the kind. This points up the third obstacle that the modern student of Picatrix must confront: the book before you is deliberately designed to hide its innermost secrets from anyone who is not willing to put in the work necessary to unravel them. This is not a user-friendly book. When the author wrote that it is meant for sages, or at least sages in training, he was not simply expressing a preference; he was offering a warning to the innocent and incautious. Given the common modern carelessness toward magic, this warning needs to be repeated in strong terms. The teachings in this book are designed to protect themselves from casual use, and there are deliberate traps in certain places that have been set for those who are not willing to take the time to think things through, or to learn the fundamentals of the magical philosophy that underlies the workings given below.

A further warning deserves special emphasis. Some of the recipes in this book produce lethal poisons. Not all of them are listed as such; in fact, some of them are described as healthful cures, and some of the things that are listed as lethal poisons would be harmless if ingested. The medieval student of Picatrix, if he followed the advice concerning preparatory studies, would have already had a good working knowledge of the herbs and minerals that made up the stock in trade of the medieval physician, and thus would know at a glance that a recipe containing large doses of bitter almond oil, even though it was labeled as a cure, would quickly kill the person who took it. Most modern occultists do not have that background. It is therefore urgently necessary, if you choose to put any of the following teachings into practice, to do the necessary research yourself and be sure that you know the health and safety issues surrounding every ingredient.

You hold in your hands a book of magical philosophy and practice for which mages in the Middle Ages were willing to risk their lives, after all, and those who were able to find copies might spend the rest of their lives studying its pages. At least a hint of that same intensity of purpose and patience toward results would make a good starting point for a modern approach to Picatrix and its teachings. An immense amount of magic can be learned from this book, and only a certain fraction of that is stated in a way that can be grasped in a single quick reading. As the author points out, there are entire sciences carefully concealed in this book, which can be unfolded through patient study and practice. Glance through it passively, and it will teach you little and deceive you whenever it can, possibly with disastrous consequences. Engage it patiently and actively, pursuing the additional studies the book itself urges on you, and portal after portal will open for you.

A Note on the Text

This version of Picatrix is based primarily on David Pingree's critical edition of the Latin translation made at the court of Alfonso the Wise of Castile in 1256; we have also consulted the manuscript copy of the Latin text owned by English astrologers William Lilly and Elias Ashmole in the seventeenth century, currently in the British Library as Sloane Ms. 3679. We have chosen to use the Latin rather than the Arabic edition because neither of us is sufficiently fluent in classical Arabic to manage an accurate translation and the Latin text is the one that became a primary source for European occultists during the Middle Ages and Renaissance. Students of medieval and Renaissance magic will find our translation from the Latin text considerably easier to match up to borrowings in such later authors as Marsilio Ficino and Cornelius Agrippa than a direct translation from the Arabic might be.

The Latin text differs in many points from the Arabic original, and is written in a murky medieval Latin full of words borrowed from Spanish and other languages. It has not been possible to interpret all of these satisfactorily; those that resisted understanding have been left untranslated, in the hope that readers with a background in medieval magical literature may be able to help us identify them in a future edition.

For the convenience of students of the occult, we have provided all the magical names and words of power given in the text in both the Latin and Arabic forms, and obscure passages and terms in the Latin text have been clarified by consulting the 1962 Ritter-Plesner German translation of the Arabic text.

Adocentyn Press has released its complete Picatrix translation in a variety of different editions, including the Liber Atratus and Liber Rubeus editions. All editions contain the same basic text, but add additional and variant passages, either from the Arabic Picatrix or authors cited in Picatrix, not found in the Latin Picatrix. The Liber Atratus edition adds a passage on poisons from Ibn Washiyya's Book of Poisons.

PICATRIX

Book Three

Here begins the third book of Picatrix, in which are treated the properties of the planets and signs; and their forms and figures, given in their proper colors; and how it is possible to speak to the spirits of the planets, and many other works of magic.

Chapter One

The parts of the planets that exist in plants, animals and metals

Having spoken in the preceding book of the images and figures of the heavens and the other figures that are found there, we will now explain which figures or faces in this world are compared to the celestial figures. You should know that as the Sun passes from place to place in the circle of the signs his effects are diverse, and this diversity is produced by the diversity of the planets and fixed stars. Therefore when there is anything that you wish to arrange, you should look for a time that is appropriate to your intention, when the celestial figures favor your work, and then your working will have the effect that we intend it to have naturally, and by means of the resemblance of terrestrial to celestial things and the coming together of the two natures, namely the terrestrial and celestial.

Into that which is terrestrial, the celestial virtue is poured in, and in it the spiritual motion and alteration will be most according to your desire. Therefore workings with images are done in two ways, that is, by the virtues of the heavens and by the virtues of natural things of the earth. Thus in this third book we will speak of all the images in magic according to the science of images, and its highest achievements. In this place we will relate in detail the effects and powers that every planet has individually, and their effects and powers of magic.

First we will speak of Saturn. Saturn is the source of the retentive virtue.[\[180\]](#) He rules profound sciences, and the science of laws and seeking out the causes and roots of things and their effects, and speaking of wonders and understanding deep and secret qualities. Among languages he rules Hebrew and Chaldean; among the external organs the right ear; among internal organs, the spleen, which is the source of melancholy by which all members are reciprocally connected. Among religions,[\[181\]](#) he has that of the Jews; and among clothing all black clothing; among professions, those that work with the earth, plowing, digging, extracting minerals, builders, and architects; among tastes, those that are unpleasant; among places, black mountains, dark rivers, deep wells, and desert boundaries and places; among stones, onyx and all black stones; among metals lead, iron and all metals that are black and smell bad; among trees, elder trees, oaks, carubia trees, palms and vines; among herbs, cumin, rue, onions and all plants that have thick leaves; of medicines, aloe, myrrh and similar things, white lead[\[182\]](#) and colocynth;[\[183\]](#) of incense, strong cassia and storax; among animals, black camels, pigs, apes, bears, dogs and cats; among birds, all that have long necks and coarse voices, and cranes, ostriches, duga, crows, and all animals that thrive under ground; among small animals, those that are dry and stinking. Among colors he has all dark and tawny colors.

Jupiter is the source of the augmentative virtue. He rules over laws and the legal profession, jurisprudence, and skill in obtaining petitions, repayments and retentions, and he guards against mortal illnesses. He rules wisdom, philosophy and the interpretation of dreams; among languages, he has Greek; among external organs, the left ear; among internal organs, the liver who rectifies the complexion and humors; among religions, that which unites all; among clothing, that which is white and expensive. Among productive and unproductive professions, he governs ruling and correcting laws and selling treasures; among tastes, those that are sweet; among places, oratories, and all places that are famous, full of treasure, and holy; among stones, emerald and all white and yellow stones, and crystal, and all stones that are bright and considered precious; among metals, tin and tutia;[\[184\]](#) nuts, hazelnuts, pines, pistachios, and all trees that bear fruit, fruit having a rind; among herbs, white mint, all herbs that are fruitful with a good odor; among medicines saffron, yellow sandalwood, nutmeg, camphor, amber and mace; among animals, all animals that are beautiful and valued for their appearance, those which are sacrificed, and all inoffensive, clean, and precious animals such as camels, beavers, stags, gazelles; among birds, those that are beautiful and colorful, such as peacocks, roosters, pigeons and quail; among small animals, the kind that work, such as silk worms. Among colors he has red tending toward white.

Mars is the source of the attractive virtue. He rules over the science of nature and rules surgery, and mastery of beasts, and extracting teeth and letting blood and circumcision. Among languages he has Persian; among external organs, the right nostril; among internal organs, the gall bladder from which choler and heat come; of instincts, that which rouses to anger and battle. Among religions, he has heretics and those who change from one faith to another; among clothing, linen and the skins of rabbits and dogs and garments made of several different skins; among professions, blacksmithing and weapon making and robbery; among tastes, those that are hot, dry and bitter; among places, strong fortresses, places that are defensible and warlike, and place where fire burns, and where animals are slaughtered and where wolves, bears and wild animals congregate, and places of judgment; among stones, granite, and all stones that are red and dark; and of metals, red gold and sulfur and petroleum and glass and red bronze; among trees, all trees whose nature is hot, such as pepper, pines, scammony, cumin, cocnidium, laurel, euphorbia, hemlock, trees that are useful and burn easily; and of medicines everything that has a bad complexion and kills and consumes because of great heat; and of scents red sandalwood; and of animals, red camels and all animals that have great red teeth, and dangerous wild animals; among small animals those that do evil like vipers, scorpions, mice and the like; among colors, intense red.

The Sun is the light of the world and the governor of the cosmos, and is the source of the generative virtue. He rules philosophy, augury, and the exposition of jurisprudence. Among languages he has French, and he shares the Greek language with Mercury;^[185] among external organs, the eyes, and among internal organs, the heart, which rules the organs of the body and is the source of heat, granting life to the whole body; and of religions, the religion of the Sabaeans and the those who pray to the spirits of the planets; among clothes, those that are precious and noble, those that are made of gold; among tastes, those that are thick and sweet; among places, great cities, royal and beautiful, in which kings linger, and lofty and expensive places; among stones, ruby and jacinth; among metals, gold; among trees, those that are lofty and beautiful, such as palms that grow tall; among herbs, saffron, roses, wheat, grains and olives which he shares with Saturn; among medicines, aloe wood, sandalwood, shellac and all whose complexion is hot and sharp; among odors, good aloe wood; among beasts, those that are valuable and useful to man, oxen, horses, camels, rams, cows and all animals that have great strength and power; among birds, those which are kept by kings, falcons, eagles, and peacocks in part; and he also has great serpents, and shares bears with Mars; among colors those that are reddish, and yellow like gold.

Venus is the source of the power of flavor. And she rules grammar and the art of measuring sound and song. Among languages she has Arabic; among the internal organs, the right nostril, and among internal organs, those that meet in sexual intercourse and project sperm,^[186] and the stomach, and those from which come the virtue and flavor in eating and drinking; among religion, Islam; among clothing, all painted clothing; and of professions, all professions of painting and shaping, selling things that smell good, playing instruments that are good to listen to, singing, dancing and making stringed instruments; among flavors, all sweet things that taste good; and of places, place of vice, places in which men seek healing, and in which men dance, and places of cheerfulness where there is singing and speech, and places of ladies and beautiful women, and also places of eating and drinking; and of precious stones, pearls, and of rocks, lapis lazuli and almartach; and of plants, all plants with a good odor like saffron and arhenda, roses and all flowers with a good odor and smell and are pleasant to look at; among medicines balsam and grains of julep, and those that emit a strong smell, such as nutmeg and amber; among animals, females, camels that are beautiful and all beautiful animals with symmetrical bodies such as gazelles, sheep, gazelles, hares, partridges, calandras and the like. Among small animals, she has those that are colorful and beautiful; among colors, sky blue and gold tending a little to green.

Mercury is the source of the intellectual virtue. And he has rulership over learning sciences and wisdom and dialectic, grammar, philosophy, geometry, astronomy and astrology, geomancy, the notory art,[\[187\]](#) augury by birds according to their flight, and interpreting the language of the Turks and other peoples; among the external organs of a man, the visible tongue; among the internal organs, the brain and heart, from which flow the intellect and powers that arrange things in order, and the sensitive memory; among religions, those that are forbidden, and that of those who speculate about religion, and those who delight in the ways of philosophy, and those who live according to the senses; among clothing, linen clothing; among professions, preaching, writing verse, building carriages, geometry, interpreting dreams, debuxandi and drawing, and all professions that are discovered through subtle thought; among tastes, those that are sharp; among places, houses of preaching and places where subtle masters work, and springs of water, streams, reservoirs and wells; among stones, all stones shaped and inscribed; among minerals, mercury, and all stones that are raised up and used in noble works; among plants, reeds, kapok, flax, pepper, and all plants with a sharp smell like cloves, and all trees with fruit that has an outer rind; among medicine, all gums; among things that smell good, those which are for medicine and health maintenance, such as ginger and spikenard and the like; and of animals, humans, small camels, zebras, rumas, apes, wolves, and all animals that jump or run swiftly and all beasts that feed through trickery; among birds, those that fly smoothly and clearly and those with perception and understanding, and those that have pleasant voices; among small animals, those that move quickly such as ants and the like, and of colors, blue and mixed colors.

The Moon receives the virtues of the planets and pours them out into the world, and is the source of the natural virtue. And she has rulership over geometry and arithmetic and of the conjunction of waters and weight and measure, and high knowledge, magic and medicine and petitions and ancient things. Among languages she has German; among the external organs of man the left eye; among internal organs, the lungs, from which proceed respiration; among religions, those that pray to idols and images; among clothing, hides and scarves; among professions, polishing, leather working, minting money, and sailing; among tastes, those that have no taste like water; among stones, very small pearls; among metals, silver and those having a white body; among trees, iris and reeds, and all white trees with a good odor and all born in the earth that do not rise above their roots; and all small plants and all stalks and all plants that are grazed; among places, springs of water, lakes, swamps and places of snow and wherever water is found; and of medicines those that are for maintaining health and healing such as cinnamon, ginger, pepper and the like; among animals, red horses, mules, donkeys, cows and hares; among birds, all birds smooth in their motion, and all animals born or living in the air, and all water birds, and birds that are colored white. She has white snakes, and her colors are saffron and red.

Know that the nature of the Head of the Dragon is to augment; when it is with fortunate planets it increases them in honor and strength, and if he is with unfortunates he augments them in condemnation and bad fortune. Similarly the Tail of the Dragon has the nature of diminution. And when it is with fortunate planets it diminishes their good and with infortunates it diminishes their evil and condemnation. And we have reminded you of the preceding so you can know it and value it.

Chapter Two

Of the parts of the signs in the aforesaid three existences, that is, plants, animals, and minerals

In the same way that the planets have rulership over things, so also the signs have rulership over things. We begin with the first sign, Aries.

Aries rules, among the organs of the body, the head, the face, the pupil of the eye and ears; among colors, yellow and red mixed; and bitter tastes; and sandy places, places of fire and places where robbers gather; among metals and minerals, those that are worked with fire; among animals, those with hooves whose feet are covered.

Taurus rules, among the organs of the body, the neck and the trachea, and all populated places and those created by plowing; among trees, all tall trees and those that produce fruit, and those that do not need water, and all that have good tastes and smells; among animals, all quadrupeds and those with hooves.

Gemini rules, among the organs of the body, the shoulders, arms and hands; among colors, green tending toward yellow; among tastes, sweet; among places, house and cultivated places in high mountains; among trees, those that are tall; among animals, men and apes; among birds, water birds and all those with a good voice and that readily make songs.

Cancer rules, among the organs of the body, the chest, breasts, stomach, lungs, ribs and the secret places of the chest; among colors, tawny and smoky; among tastes, salty; among places, lakes of water, swamps, and places where waters flow together, the seashore and the shores of rivers; among stones, those that are in the water; among trees, those that grow tall in the water; among animals, those thriving in the water, such as small fishes, snakes, scorpions, vipers and terrestrial reptiles.

Leo rules, among the organs of the body, the noble parts, the heart, the thinner ribs and back; among colors, red, yellow and brown; among places, those easily defended and strong, the cities of kings and strong castles and holy places; among tastes, bitter; among stones, those that are red, diamond and jacinth; among metals, gold; among trees, those that are tall; among animals, those that have long teeth; among birds, raptors.

Virgo rules, among the organs of the body, the belly and of the internal organs, the intestines, the lower bones of the belly, and the abdominal organs; among colors, white and tawny; among tastes, those that are astringent; among places, places where women gather and places of joking and singing; among trees those that produce seeds; among animals, men; among birds, those that swim in water.

Libra rules, among the organs of the body, the hips and buttocks, sexual organs, and the upper belly; among colors, green, violet and tawny; among tastes, sweet; among places, deserts, sand, hunting grounds, and high and lofty places from which many things can be seen; among trees, those that are tall and straight; among animals, men; among birds those with large heads.

Scorpio rules, among the organs of the body, all of the sexual organs of men and women, among colors, green, red and tawny; among tastes, salty; among places, dry lands, prisons, and sad places; and stony places where scorpions gather; among stones, coral and marine pearls; among trees, those that are tall and straight; among animals, scorpions, vipers, snakes, small dry animals of the earth, and water animals.

Sagittarius rules, among the organs of the body, the buttocks, shins, and the signs of superfluity in the body and everything excessive in the body; among colors, rose changing to red and all colors tawny and mixed; among tastes, bitter; among places, gardens, places of kings and fire; among stones, the emerald; among minerals, lead; among animals, men and birds, snakes and small worms.

Capricorn rules, among the organs of the body, the knees, the tendons under the knees, that is those under the kneecap and calves; among colors peacock blue, cardinal red, and all that are tawny and tending toward black; among tastes, astringent; among places, the palaces of kings, gardens and enclosed places, river banks and kennels, hospices and inns and places where captives gather and also places of the image and power of great men; among trees, those that are strong, such as olives, nuts, oaks, and all plants born in the water like reeds or iris and all plants with thorns; and among beasts, some animals of the water, terrestrial reptiles and serpents.

Aquarius rules, among the organs of the body, the lower calves and heels and their tendons and joints; and of colors green, gray and yellow; among tastes, sweet; among places, places with flowing water, the sea and places where wine is sold; among stones, glass and similar things; among trees, those that are tall; among animals, man and all animals whose appearance and form is ugly like the devil.

Pisces rules, among the organs of the body, the feet, nails and tendons, among colors, green and white and all good colors; among tastes, sharp; among places, hermitages, river banks, the sea, lakes of water and enclosed places; among stones, pearls, stones that are white and clear like crystal and pearls that are grown in the water; among plants, those are in the middle between tall and short and all plants that grow in the water; among animals, aquatic animals and those that are slow moving.

These are the properties of the things ruled by the planets and signs, and are appropriate to them. It is necessary to pay attention to this because it is a foundation of magic.

Chapter Three

Of the figures, colors, garments, and incenses of the planets, as well as the colors of the faces of the signs.

I will now speak of the colors of the planets. The color of Saturn is like burned wool; that of Jupiter is green; that of Mars is red; that of the Sun is the color of yellow gold; that of Venus is saffron colored; that of Mercury is like lac[\[188\]](#) and the color of gold mixed with green; that of the Moon is white.

Here are the images of the planets according to Hermes, in the book he sent to king Alexander, which he called the Book of the Seven Planets. What follows are many of the things necessary in this science.

The image of Saturn is the image of a black man, wrapped in a green cloak, with the head of a dog and holding a sickle in his hand.

The image of Jupiter is the image of a man wearing fine clothing and sitting on a throne.

The image of Mars is the image of a man riding on a lion, and holding a large lance.

The image of the Sun is the image of a beardless man with a beautiful face, having a crown on his head and a lance in his hand, and before him is the image of a head and a man's hand and the rest of his corpse like a horse with four hooves, lying reversed, that is with hands and feet upraised.

The image of Venus is the image of a beautiful young girl with a comb in her hand and in the other an apple, and her hair is flowing.

The image of Mercury is the image of a naked man, writing and rising on an eagle.

The image of the Moon is the image of a man riding a hare.

The aforementioned sage admonished Alexander that when he wished to do any working with any of the planets, the working should be done with a body that is agreeable to the nature of the planet. If you wish to complete anything, consider the nature of the Ascendant at the time when you wish to do the work, and put on clothing that corresponds to the rising sign. Make the Ascendant fortunate with a benefic and the seventh house unfortunate with a malefic; this is because the Ascendant signifies the querent (and therefore it should be made fortunate in order that things should go vigorously forward), while the seventh house is assigned to the thing desired (and therefore it is appropriate that it be infortunated and debilitated in order for the ordained effect to be brought about).

Now follow the colors of the clothes or garments of the planets. The colors of the garments of Saturn are always black and it is best that they all be made of wool. The color of Jupiter's garments is green, and they are best made of silk. The color of Mars' garments is that of the flame of fire and they are best made of silk. The color of the Sun's garments is yellow gold and they are best made of silk and yellow gold. The color of Venus' garments is rose, and they are best made of silk. The color of Mercury's garments is many colors mixed and they should preferably be silk. The color of the Moon's garments, finally, is shining white, and silk or linen is preferred.

Now we will discuss the suffumigations of the planets. The suffumigation of Saturn is all things that smell bad, asafoetida, gum arabic, bdellium,[\[189\]](#) hemlock and similar things; Jupiter's is all good and temperate odors and includes amber, lignum aloes and similar things; Mars' suffumigation is everything hot such as pepper and ginger; the Sun's is things that are temperate and good odors like nutmeg, amber and similar things; Venus' suffumigation is everything fragrant like rose, violets, green myrtle and similar things; Mercury's is mixed odors like narcissus, violets, myrtle and similar things; the Moon is everything that smells cold like camphor, lilies and similar things. Pay close attention in your work, however, to what has been said already.

Now follows the colors of the faces of the signs in order.[\[190\]](#)

The color of the first face of Aries is red and it is made this way. Take one part of green gall, gum, and orpiment[\[191\]](#), pulverize them separately then mix them together. And from this write or paint what you wish using egg white as the medium.

The color of the second face of Aries is yellow and the color of gold and it is made in this way. Take vitriol of iron[\[192\]](#) and talc in equal parts. Pulverize them separately, then mix them with honey. Distill them into a gum and save them for your work.

The color of the third face of Aries is white and this is how it is made. Take talc and white lead in equal parts.

The first face of Taurus has a color that is tawny and smoky and it is made in this way. Take soot and mix it with gum, and keep it for use. The second face of Taurus is white and it is made in this way: take talc and white lead in equal parts. The third face of Taurus is black and is made from burnt wool.

The first face of Gemini has the color yellow and is similar to gold in color, and is made this way. Crush gall, and take the parts that are black and soak them in water that completely covers them and put in just enough. In another quantity of water and mix lac into it. Mix them together and save for use later.

The second face of Gemini is red and is made in this way. Take orpiment and cinnabar and mix them together, and distill, and add gum in a sufficient quantity and save for later use. The third face of Gemini is red and we have said how to make it.

The first face of Cancer has the color yellow, and how it is made we have already said. The second face of Cancer is also yellow and we have said how to make it. The third face of Cancer is black, and it is made of orpiment and gall in equal parts with a small amount of gum arabic.

The first face of Leo is tawny in color, and it is made as we have said before. The second face of Leo is yellow of a shade similar to gold and it is made as we have said above. The third face of Leo is red like the color of apples or pomegranates and is made in this way. Take cinnabar and wash it many times. Then soften the dust well and mix it with green gall in water, add a small amount of gum arabic and lac; keep it for use.

The first face of Virgo is a mixture of red and gold, and it is made in this way. Take saffron and pulverize it well and dissolve in water of green gall, mix well, and let it sit undisturbed for awhile, then add a small amount of gum arabic.

The second face of Virgo is tawny, which is made as we have said before.

The third face of Virgo is a mixture of yellow and red color and it is made in this way. Take orpiment and pulverize it well and saffron water with a small amount of gum arabic, and keep it for use.

The first face of Libra is tan, which we have already said how to make. The second face of Libra is black, and we have said above how to make it. The third face of Libra is white and we have said above how to make it.

The first face of Scorpio has the color black, the second yellow, the third, tan, and all of these we have already told how to make.

The first face of Sagittarius has the color red, and we have already said how to make it.

The second face of Sagittarius is yellow and it is made in this way. Take yellow orpiment and heat it in the fire overnight. Then mix it with white lead and pulverize it well, then add a small amount of gum arabic, and write with it.

The third face of Sagittarius is tan, and how to make it we have already said.

The first face of Aquarius has the color of red mixed with indigo, and it is made with dragon's blood mixed with gum arabic.

The second face of Aquarius is black and it is made in this way. Take gall, gum arabic, one dram of orpiment, and a half dram of parchment. Break them up and pulverize them and mix them together, dissolving them in egg white and make pills and allow them to dry. And when you wish to write, take one and dissolve it in water and write with it.

The third face of Aquarius is green, and it is made with the gall of an animal with a small amount of gum arabic.

The first face of Pisces has the color of light red, which is made with white lead pulverized with a small amount of cinnabar[\[193\]](#) and gum arabic. The second face of Pisces is tawny and is made from the burnt bark of tamarisk mixed with a small amount of gum arabic. The third face of Pisces is red and we have already said how it is made.

Chapter Four

Why the secrets of this science may not be understood except a little at a time

The ancient sages who have spoken of the occult sciences and magic[\[194\]](#) in their books wrote them as obscurely as they could, so that no one would be able to gain any benefit from them, except by means of wisdom and continual study and practice in them. This chapter is placed here, as though by mistake, in order to make a modest demonstration of this.

Chapter Five

In which is demonstrated the virtue proper to animals and noteworthy things necessary in this science, and how the spirits of the planets are attracted by figures and suffumigations

Now that the higher properties of every planet in the inferior tribes, that is, animals, plants, and minerals, have been described, we shall now speak of the same tribes in another way. Among them, the animals are more noble, and among these nobler forms, humanity is distinguished, in that it attains a nobler degree of reflection. Some animals have only one sense, such as conches, alaph omidie and the like, while others have two, three, four, five, or even ten. Humanity has ten manifest senses and five hidden ones, which this book will now discuss.

The forms of animals are diverse, as may be seen by reviewing the different kinds of animals. Just as a human being is an animal intermediate between separated[\[195\]](#) celestial spirits and beasts, fish are intermediate between beasts and birds, conches are intermediate between sensitive and insensitive beings, as they only have two senses[\[196\]](#), and this is because of the terrestrial nature that binds them, and makes them almost similar in nature to plants. From this it is clear that the more an animal has of a given element, the more the animal will be made of that element's nature.

Man is the noblest of animals, since in his body the elements are mutually related as they ought to be, while other animals may be more easily equated to their combinations of elements. One of the elements is proper to each animal, who can never be separated from it, as birds can never be separated from air or fishes from water, and devils are never separated from the perpetual fire that is called "infernal," while the fire that is sensed and perceived by our senses is properly assigned to the animal called "salamander," which resembles a mouse made of fire. Heavy animals, on account of their weight, are never separated from earth.

Here we will answer a certain unspoken question, that is, in what way devils exist in fire. I say that man is called a lesser world, and when comparing him with the greater, one may almost say that whatever is contained in the greater world may be found virtually in the lesser. Thus if devils exist in the greater world, they ought in a certain sense to be found in effect in the lesser. This happens in this way: when the irascible appetite^[197] is stirred up in man, it is inflamed immoderately and he becomes angry and utterly furious, and then becomes a devil in all his actions. By a certain similitude we can say that devils exist in fire, that is, they exist in the rising fire of anger in man, from which the deeds of a devil follow. When the will of that man has the temperament it ought to have, in turn, it is governed by reason and virtue, and he becomes an angel. We can therefore truly say that devils exist in the greater world just as they do in this lesser one.

Now, however, we return to our theme. I say that the aforementioned division of three kinds in respect to the planets, and their works in the aforesaid sciences according to the Chaldeans, Nabateans, Egyptians, Greeks, Turks, and Hindus, come from the combining of parts that are of the same kind, and this may be accomplished by means of suffumigations, garments, food, and odors. In this way they made truly great marvels, as we indeed discover in their books. In this way they made confections with which, by the addition of the powers of the stars, they worked with the air until it was mingled with the powers of fire, until these reached this world, and thereby the effect or desire was accomplished.

The air is a body without which other bodies can have very little life, since it is the medium by which bodies, or influences, or the effects of the planets, may be disposed by the will acting by a mixture of its own air with the air in general. This may be done by suffumigations, which take the place of the members of the human body, and these suffumigations are composed of woods and things and other kinds. By these suffumigations the spirits of men are moved toward their desires. In this way magical workings have marvelous and manifest effects.

I have read a certain book, titled "The Divider of Sciences and Revealer of Secrets," in which this was written. It recounted a story that seems trustworthy to me, which was mentioned in the land of Foracen as something else which came from India and was introduced to this science from there, but when the book discussed disputes about doubtful matters, it questioned whether it belonged to this science. It said, though, that this was clearly proven.

"There was in that land a certain girl whom everyone considered very beautiful. One said that he could make her come to my dwelling. I asked him to make her come as he promised, and I did this for two reasons, both for the love of knowledge, and also because I desired the girl; and I asked him also to do the working in my presence. At once, by suspending an astrolabe and finding the altitude of the Sun, he determined the ascendant and also set out the twelve houses.[\[198\]](#) He found that Aries, which is ruled by Mars, was rising, and Libra, which is ruled by Venus, was in the seventh house. I asked him what this meant, and he said that the ascendant and seventh house are the houses corresponding to the request I had made. Mars and Venus being placed in the chart where they were, he explained that when they regarded one another in a trine aspect, my intention would be accomplished. He found that the aspect between them would be perfected in forty days, and he told me that in the aforesaid forty days from the day in which I asked my question, I would in fact gain my desire.

"At once he took a little piece of diamond, powdered it finely, and mixed it with an equal amount of gum ammoniac,[\[199\]](#) and from this mixture he made an image in my likeness. He also took dry sycamore and powdered it finely, mixed it with wax, and from this made an image of the beautiful girl, and dressed it in clothing like hers. Then he took a new jug and in it put seven rods or sticks (that is, twigs of myrtle, willow, pomegranate, apple, cottonwood, sycamore, and laurel) and arranged these in the middle of the jug, four below and three above, placed crosswise.

"Then he put in the image made in my name, and then he put the image of the girl into the same jug. As he did this, he noted when Venus would be opposing Mars, and when Mars would be strengthened by the fortunes. He sealed the jug, and opened it again every day in the hour in which he put the aforementioned things into it. At the end of the forty days, when the lord of the ascendant regarded the lord of the seventh house by trine aspect, he opened the jug again and placed the images so that each regarded the other, that is, face to face. Then he sealed the jug and gave it to me to bury under the hearth in which there was ordinarily a fire, and while burying it in the gravel, told me to say one word from India, which he interpreted to me and told to me as we will explain later on.

"Then, when the working was complete, he took out the jug and opened it, and took the images out of it. Then the aforesaid girl came to the door of my house, and she stayed with me for ten days. At the end of the ten days, he said I should do the aforesaid. "When my promise to you is fulfilled," he said, "I think it better that we free the girl, and restore her to liberty unharmed." I agreed to this with a good will, and took the two images that had been buried. Then, taking powdered chaste tree^[200] and mixing it into wax, he made candles from it and burned them on the hearth.

"When they were entirely burnt, he took the images from their burial place, divided them from one another, and threw one of them in one direction and the other in the other, saying another word which I shall teach later. He did all this to show his knowledge to me. When this was done, we saw the girl's memory vanish, and she stood stupefied like a sleepwalker. She then said to me, "What did you want to say to me?" and, taking flight, left the house.

This was one of the great marvels that I have seen of this science in the course of my life. I have recounted the foregoing in order to show the wonders of this science and the magnitude of its effects so that, as this working was done with an aspect of the aforementioned planets, and their positions, aspects, ascensions, departures from their houses, the materials of which the images were compounded, suffumigations, and everything else was related to the work, so you in your own workings should do likewise, so that everything in them should correspond and you will proceed to your goal with the proper competence. In this way you will be able to attain the result you desire, as the wise have written.

Now, however, I will begin to treat of those things which are needful for working with the planetary spirits, as well as those of the stars, and generally of those things that accompany images, so that the image receives the virtues of the planet: for example, suffumigations, and from what foods you should abstain while working, so that the work is completed more swiftly. I tell you, my dear student, that I have composed this book with great labor and study, bringing together a very great number of the books of the ancient sages, considering and contemplating their opinions, and writing down their true conclusions and proven results, until I had studied word by word 224 books of my predecessors, the ancient sages, and from all these, gathering the flowers and lilies thereof,^[201] I composed this book, devoting six years altogether to this labor.

Before writing the passage quoted above, I put forward aphorisms that were noteworthy and truly worth observing. The reception of the spirits of the planets, however, according to the opinion of the ancients, is that which follows. It is first necessary to know the nature of the planets, what receives their powers, the spirits you desire to summon, and their powers, so as to combine these in the figure or image you wish to use, and the natures of those things that correspond to the planet which were discussed earlier, that is, its colors, foods, perfumes, and incenses. Then you should diligently direct your efforts, so that the color of the surface of the body of the image be a similar color to that of the planet you have chosen, that the perfume be among its perfumes, and the colors of the garments of the image and the magician be colors that correspond to the same planet; and the suffumigations be odors corresponding to that planet. The body of the magician should also be of the nature of the planet; that is, let it be fed with foods assigned to the planet, and clothed accordingly, so that the body of the magician himself should thereby be maintained in the complexion[\[202\]](#) of the planet.

If it happens that such meals are contrary to your own nature, you should begin by eating foods that are moderate and temperate, and little by little proceed to eat the planetary foods, so that your stomach becomes accustomed to it.[\[203\]](#) In this way you may strengthen your appetite so that your body may be governed and nourished by the food. When the body is to be governed in this way, however, see what part of the Zodiacal signs the planet is in, and also that its rays are projected in a straight line to the Earth, and are not broken off by the rays of another contrary planet, but are poured directly down onto the Earth, being far from any impediment.

Then you should take some of the metal attributed to the planet, and from it cast a cross, doing this when the heavens are appropriately arranged; and set up the cross on two feet.[\[204\]](#) Then combine it with a figure or image appropriate to your intention and the planetary spirit. For example, if you wish to make an image for battles or to conquer and terrify enemies, join the cross to the image of a lion or a snake. If you wish to work in order to flee and escape, combine the cross with the image of a bird. If your working is for the increase of riches, power, official position, or social standing, combine the cross with the image of a man sitting on a throne. Do the same thing, following these examples, in all your requests, combining the cross with a figure appropriate to your desire. If you wish someone to be obedient to your desire and not disobey your precepts, make the image out of a stone that is of a nature appropriate to the planet that has great power in the radix of his nativity and in his ascendant. Make that image in the hour of the same planet, and the planet that is dominant in the nativity should not be opposing, or in the same sign as, or in any aspect to, any planet of a nature contrary to it. If you would make the aforesaid perfect, set up the figure so that it is the erectrix of another prime figure.[\[205\]](#)

The reason why we have said that this figure should be made in the form of a cross is for reasons already given, that is, that the powers of all things are collected in figures that accord with the qualities that are in them, and flee from their contraries. We seek the powers of a planetary spirit in order that it may be united with a figure, but we do not know the form of the spirit, nor are we able to attain to that knowledge experimentally except in the form of a human being, an animal, or some other thing.

It may be concluded from this that all the aforementioned virtue manifests most completely in figures. Therefore, we see all the figures and forms of trees and plants to be diverse in their shapes, just as the forms of animals are, and likewise minerals. As we have no way to perceive the proper forms of the planetary spirits, the ancient masters of this art chose the cross as a universal figure for them. This is because every body is perceived by its surfaces, and the surfaces of forms have length and breadth, and the proper figure of length and breadth is found in the cross. Thus we say that this shape has a universal magistracy in these workings, and is as it were a receptacle for the powers of the planetary spirits insofar as the other figure does not diverge from them. This is one of the secrets of this art.[\[206\]](#)

Furthermore, all human beings are set beneath the seven planetary circles. When the virtue of the planetary spirits is united with the figure of the cross, then the working has virtue and power over whatever other figure stands with it, so that if the other figure is in the shape of a man, its power will be poured out upon men, and likewise if it is shaped as some other animal.

When you make the figures in this way, however, you should also make a thurible[\[207\]](#) out of the same metal of which the cross is made, in such a manner and form as to be wholly enclosed except at its upper end, in which there should be an opening so that the smoke is able to get out through it; nor should the smoke of the incense be able to rise upward by any other route. Besides this, you should have a house set aside and assigned to this work, into which if at all possible only those taking part in the working may enter, and they only at the time of the working. This house should have a place open to the sky; it should be strewn with herbs of the planet ruling the working, and in it should be nothing but these herbs.

Then you should take suffumigations of the nature of the same planet, which you will burn in the thurible. Set up the cross above the thurible, so that the rising smoke goes up toward the underside of the cross and then flows above the upper side. If this is done, and the preceding instructions are diligently followed, the smoke of the suffumigation reaches the sphere of the signs[\[208\]](#) entirely by straight lines, nor will the lines of other planets resisting that planet cut it off with their rays. If your work will be on this inferior Earth, and the virtue of the planet descends to the Earth by its own proper lines, then you will have what you desire.

Whoever intends to labor in this science, however, must first learn and understand what general and specific significations belong to each of the planetary powers, and how one power overcomes another. Excellence in the working just described comes from choosing a planet for your working that has a general potency, and not combining it with another planet that has a particular potency. You should always work with the spirit and influence of that planet that has the more general potency. Furthermore, if the planet that has a general potency is the dispositor of the nativity of the magician, or the almuten ruling it, your work will be even more complete.

A sage has said that there is no other way or method to unite incorporeal spirits with corporeal spirits except by first making contact with the higher of the two; and this is the secret of this art. Nonetheless, whoever performs the foregoing without error will be able to achieve his desire. The sage Aaron said that one who knows his own nativity is able to know the hour of the conjunction of his own spirit and body, and therefore the planet ruling his nativity, and by this knowledge knows the planet that effected the union of spirit and body in his own generation. If that planet is unfortunate, it will make him unfortunate, while if it is fortunate, on the other hand, it will make him fortunate.

Chapter Six

The magistry of drawing planetary spirits with natural things, and what a magical image is and how it can have this power

Nothing in this science can be perfected unless the virtue and disposition of the planets are inclined toward it by their own nature. This is what Aristotle says, in the Book of Antimaquis,[\[209\]](#) where he says: Perfect Nature fortifies those who philosophize, and strengthens their intellect and their wisdom, so that in all their works they may quickly attain fulfillment.

Everything belonging to this science, however, the wise concealed according to their degree, so that no one except a philosopher would be able to uncover it. They taught all knowledge and the subtleties of philosophy to their disciples before revealing to them the work of the spirits of Perfect Nature. They gave to the spirits of Perfect Nature these four names: Meegius, Betzahuech, Vacdez, Nufeneguediz, which are the four parts of the spirits of Perfect Nature named above. When those sages wished to speak about Perfect Nature, they called them by these four names, which signify the powers of Perfect Nature.

Hermes, however, said: When I wished to understand and draw forth the secrets of the workings of the world and of its qualities, I put myself above a certain pit that was very deep and dark, from which a certain impetuous wind blew; nor was I able to see anything in the pit, on account of its obscurity. If I put a lit candle in it, straightway it was extinguished by the wind.

Then there appeared to me in a dream a beautiful man of imperial authority, who spoke to me as follows: "Put that lit candle in a lantern of glass, and the impetuosity of the wind will not extinguish it. You should lower the lantern into the pit, in the middle of which you should dig; thence you may draw forth an image by which, when you have drawn it forth, the wind from the pit will be extinguished, and then you will be able to hold the light there. Then you should dig in the four corners of the pit, and from there you may draw out the secrets of the world and of Perfect Nature, and its qualities, and the generation of all things."

I asked him who he was, and he replied: "I am Perfect Nature;[\[210\]](#) if you wish to speak to me, call me by my proper name, and I will answer you." I asked him then by what name he was called, and he answered me, saying, "By the four names mentioned above I am named and called." I asked him next at what times I should call him, and how I should make the invocation.

He said: "When the Moon is in the first degree of Aries, be it by day or by night, whenever you wish, go into a house that is clean and splendid, in one corner of which you should put a raised table on the floor, toward the eastern side. Take four pitchers (each of which should have a capacity around one pint). Into one of them put cow's butter, into the second nut oil, into the third almond oil, and into the fourth sesame oil. Then take four more pitchers of the same size, and pour wine into them. Then make a composition of nut oil, butter, honey, and sugar. Take the eight pitchers and the mixture you have made, and a glass vessel; put this latter in the center of the table, and put the composition you have made into it.

"Next put the four pitchers full of wine at the four quarters of the table, arranging them in the following way: the first pitcher in the east, the second in the west, the third in the south, and the fourth in the north. Then take the other four pitchers; first put the one full of almond oil to the east, then the one full of nut oil to the west; the one full of butter goes to the south, and the one full of sesame oil to the north. Then take a burning candle and put it in the midst of the table. Then take two thuribles full of burning charcoal, into one of which you shall put frankincense and mastic, and into the other aloes wood.

"When all this is done, stand upright on your feet facing the east, and invoke the four aforementioned names seven times. When you have invoked them seven times, speak as follows:

"I call to you, O strong, potent, and exalted spirit, because from you proceed the knowledge of the wise and the understanding of the intellect, and by your virtue the desires of the wise are accomplished, that you may respond to me, and be present with me, and unite with me your powers and the virtues that accompany you, and strengthen me with your knowledge so that I may understand that which I do not understand, and know that of which I am ignorant, and see that which I do not see; and remove from me all blindness, turpitude, forgetfulness and infirmity; and lift me up to the degree of the ancient sages (those, indeed, whose hearts were filled with knowledge, wisdom, understanding, and cognition), and affix the aforesaid things in my heart, so that my heart may be made like the hearts of the ancient sages.'" He then said: "And when you have done the foregoing working in the aforesaid way, you will see me."

This working is described in the Book of Antimaquis. The ancient sages used to perform this working every year for the sake of their spirits, so that they might put in order their Perfect Natures. When this was done, they used to feast together with their friends on whatever on the table was nearest to them.

Aristotle said furthermore that each sage had his proper virtue infused into him by exalted spirits, by whose powers their senses were closed, their intellects opened, and sciences were revealed to them. This virtue was conjoined with the virtue of the planet ruling the radix of the nativity, so that the virtue thus co-created in them strengthened them and gave intelligence to them. These same ancient sages and kings used to do this working and pray this prayer with the four names given above, by which they helped themselves in their knowledge and understanding, and the increase of their business and possessions, and guarded themselves from the plots of their enemies, and did many other things.

Aristotle said that the first who worked with images, and the one to whom spirits first appeared, was Caraphzebiz. He it was who first discovered the magical art, and spirits appeared first to him, performing wonders, and opening Perfect Nature to his knowledge, and made him understand that same secret nature and sciences. His familiar spirit said to him: I will remain with you, but do not reveal me to others or speak of me, and make sacrifices in my name. He became a sage by working with the spirits, and helped himself by their powers and by workings in which they took part.

From that sage Caraphzebiz down to another sage named Amenus (who was the second to work with spirits and magical operations) 1260 years passed by. This sage, when he taught, used to offer this advice, that any sage who wanted to work magic, and preserve himself with the powers of the spirits, ought strictly to give up all cares and all other sciences beside this one, because when all the senses and the mind, and all contemplations about other things, are strictly turned to magic, it may be acquired with ease; and since many assiduous contemplations are appropriate to this science of magic, the magician must wrap himself in these, rather than being wrapped around any other things.

Tintinz the Greek said the same thing in the beginning of his book, that one who desires to perform this work ought to abandon all intention and contemplation concerning other things, because the root and foundation of all these workings consists of contemplations. Aristotle said that an image is called an image for this reason, that the powers of spirits are conjoined to it;[\[211\]](#) for contemplation goes into anything in which the virtue consists of a hidden spirit. The powers of the spirits are fourfold: that is, the senses, which are said to be joined to the world; the spirit of things, to which spirit is attracted; the spirit of perfect, sane, and unbroken contemplation; and the spirit by which works are done by the hands. These three spirits in matter, which exist in intention and effect, are coadunated in perfect contemplation with the senses, which we have said are joined to the world.

The senses attract rays and bring them to those things toward which they are directed, like a mirror that is raised up into the light of the Sun, and reflects his rays into the shadows to either side; it receives the Sun's rays from his light, and projects them into shadowy places; and those shadowy places become bright and illuminated, nor is the Sun's light diminished thereby. This is how the three spirits named above work, when the spirits of motion and rest are joined to the superior world while in contact with the senses; they attract the powers of the spirits of the superior world, and pour them out upon matter. This is the foundation of images, and why they are given that name.

Socrates said that Perfect Nature is the Sun of the wise and its root is light. Certain people inquired of Hermes the sage, asking: "With what are science and philosophy joined?" He answered, "With Perfect Nature." They asked again, saying, "What is the root of science and philosophy?" He said, "Perfect Nature." Then they questioned him more closely: "What is the key by which science and philosophy are opened?" He answered, "Perfect Nature." They then asked of him, "What is Perfect Nature?" He answered, "Perfect Nature is the spirit of the philosopher or sage linked to the planet that governs him. This is that which opens the closed places of knowledge, and by which is understood that which cannot otherwise be understood at all, and from which workings proceed naturally both in sleep and in waking."

Thus it is clear from the foregoing that Perfect Nature acts in the sage or philosopher as a teacher toward a student, teaching the latter first in simple and easy matters, and then proceeding step by step to greater and more difficult ones, until the student is perfect in knowledge. When Perfect Nature works in this way, according to its own virtue and influence, the intellect of the philosopher is disposed according to his natural inclination. You should understand this, committing it to memory, because from the foregoing it may be concluded that it is impossible for anybody to attain this science except those who are naturally inclined to it, both by their own virtue and by the disposition of the planet ruling in their nativity.

Chapter Seven

Attracting the virtues of the planets, and how we may speak with them, and how their influences are divided among planets, figures, sacrifices, prayers, suffumigations, and propositions; and the state of the heavens necessary to each planet

A certain sage, Athabary by name, said this about the work of the sages in receiving the powers of the planets, according to the observances found in the ancient books of magical operations. When you desire to speak with any planet or ask it for anything that you need, first and above all else, purify your will and your faith in God, and beware especially that you believe in no other; then cleanse your body and your garments of all dirt. Then determine the nature of the planet to which your petition corresponds. When you wish to address the planet to which your petition properly belongs, dress in clothing dyed the color of that planet, and suffumigate yourself with its suffumigation, and pray its prayer. Do all this when the planet is established in its dignities and called superior in its dispositions, for by observing these things, what you desire will come to pass.

Here we will briefly repeat the petitions proper to each planet. Ask Saturn in petitions concerning old people or generous men, senators[\[212\]](#) and rulers of cities, hermits, those who labor in the earth, restoration of citizenship and inheritance, distinguished men, farmers, builders of buildings, servants, thieves, fathers, grandfathers, and great-grandfathers. If you find yourself in contemplation and sorrow, or in melancholy[\[213\]](#) or grave illness, in anything just named, or in any thing that has already been mentioned as belonging to Saturn, and you ask for something that belongs to his nature, you may seek it from him in the manner we describe below, and you may also help yourself in your petition by means of Jupiter.[\[214\]](#) The essence of all these petitions is that you should not seek anything from any planet unless it belongs to his dominion.

Seek from Jupiter all that belongs to his portion, such as petitions concerning sublime men, the powerful, prelates, sages, preachers of religion, judges, virtuous men, interpreters of dreams, hermits, philosophers, kings, their sons, the children of their sons, soldier, and cousins; and petitions for peace and profit; and anything similar may be sought from him.

Seek from Mars what is consistent with his nature, such as petitions against soldiers, officials, fighters, and those who busy themselves with warlike acts; and on behalf of friends of kings, and those who destroy homes and citizens, and do evil to humanity, killers, executioners, those who work with fire or in places such as stables, litigators, shepherds, thieves, companions on the road, liars, traitors, and the like. Similar, ask him concerning infirmities of the body from the groin downwards, and also for phlebotomy,[\[215\]](#) accumulation of gas, and the like. In these latter petitions you may also help yourself with Venus, for the nature of Venus dissolves what is closed up by Mars, and repairs what he damages.

Seek from the Sun those petitions that are appropriate to him, such as petitions against kings, the sons of warriors and kings, exalted people who delight in justice and truth and abhor falsehood and violence, desirous of good reputation and seeking popular acclaim, officials, clergy, physicians, philosophers, exalted people who are humble, perceptive and magnanimous, older brothers, fathers, and the like.

Seek from Venus all things that pertain to her, such as petitions of women, boys, and girls, daughters, and generally everything pertaining to the love of women and carnal copulation with them, art, vocal and instrumental music, telling jokes, and all those who give themselves over to worldly pleasures, those who engage in vices, male and female servants, brides and grooms, mothers, friends, sisters, and all those similar to them, and in these petitions you may also help yourself with Mars.

Seek from Mercury petitions appropriate to notaries, scribes, arithmeticians, geometers, astrologers, grammarians, lecturers, philosophers, rhetoricians, poets, sons of kings, secretaries of kings, halfbreeds, merchants, minstrels, lawyers, servants, boys, girls, younger brothers, painters, designers, and those similar to them.

Seek from the Moon all things pertaining to her and attributed to her nature, such as those who petition kings, urban and rural tenants, halfbreeds, messengers sent by land or sea, farm laborers, plowmen, geometricians, stewards, portraitists, mariners and all those who do work pertaining to water, the populace in general, geomancers, fiancées, the wives of kings, youths without beards, and the like.

Next I have determined to write the natures of each of the planets and the things appropriate to them, and what each of them signifies. This begins with Saturn, as before. Saturn is cold and dry, an infortune, destructive, the source of bad and foul odors, proud and a traitor because, when he makes any promise, he betrays it. He signifies farmers, streams, those who work in the earth, controversies, great and long journeys, great and enduring enmities, bringing evils, battles and all things unwanted, and the power to make and work. True speech, hope, blackness, age, buildings, fear, great thoughts, cares, angers, betrayals, sorrows, anguish, death, inheritances, orphans, old places, appraisals, proper elocution, secret sciences, secret meanings, and profound knowledge: he signifies all the foregoing when he is direct in his motion.

When he is retrograde, however, he signifies misfortune, debilities or infirmities, prisons and evils suffered in all things, and if he enters into aspect with any other planet, he weakens it and damages all the qualities of the other planet. If he is retrograde and you ask him for something, what you seek will come about with delays and miseries and great labor. If he is retrograde in any of his dignities, his maledictions are augmented and increased; while if he rises in his powers and dignities, then he will be easier and gentler.

Jupiter is warm and moist, temperate and fortunate (whence he is called the Greater Fortune), and follows Saturn in the order of the planets. He signifies things that are subtly made, the bodies of animals, beginnings, the growth of animals, right judgment, collegiality and equality in all things, perception, gentleness, true speech, truth, right belief, faithfulness, chastity, honor, gratitude, eloquence, the sustenance of good words, good perception and intelligence, the sciences, philosophy, teaching, things obtained by correct reasoning and peace, honor received from the people, improvement in all one's business, fulfillment of petitions, the will of kings, delighting in riches and accumulating them, gentleness,[\[216\]](#) liberality, sacrifices, helpers of people in all things and all works, delighting in crowds and all crowded places, benefactors of humanity, piety, following and upholding the law in all things, delighting in places of the faithful, people of honest speech, decent ornament, beauty, joy, laughter and much conversation, speaking well and gladly, benign faces, as well as lovers of the good and those who abhor evil, preachers of good words and those who perform all good deeds and avoid bad ones.

Mars is hot and dry, an infortune, destructive, and the cause of evils. He signifies destruction, wicked deeds, depopulation of homes and cities, drying up and damming of rivers, fire, combustion, controversies, blood, all passions while they are being felt, bad and distorted judgment, oppressions, sorrows, manslaughter and all manner of destruction, demolition, lawsuits, wars, battles, terrors, discord between people, anxieties and miseries, pain, wounds, prisons, misery, escape, litigation, stupidity, treacheries, and all things that are cursed without sense or reason, ordinary happiness, lying, ungratefulness, ordinary life, shame, encounters on the roads, landlessness and lack of solace, discords, sharpness and angers, doing things that are prohibited by the laws, fear, ordinary legalities, betrayals, all kinds of false promises and assessments, wicked deeds involving copulation with women in forbidden ways, such as those who desire beasts and other animals and strange women, infanticide and destroying living things and abortion, robbery, treasons and deceptions, all manner of frauds, feeling miserable, brooding, thefts of clothing and shoes, highway robbery, those who break walls by night,[\[217\]](#) those who break down doors, and evil deeds of every kinds, as well as all things remote from truth and lawfulness.

The Sun is hot and dry, and of mixed good and ill in his influence; he repairs and destroys, and brings both good and evil; he is both a fortune and an infortune. He signifies and reveals perception and intellect, exaltations and high offices, but without fear, and indeed easily, makes men to triumph over their enemies and easily inflict violent deaths on them; he shows those who give great gifts to friends (that is, to those to whom they are appropriate and merited); he destroys those who send many, which are cut off all together, distributes good things and otherwise, and causes both good and evil; those who observe the law, and those who keep promises; to all people, he gives delight in good and pleasant things, great eloquence and giving ready responses in all things; he increases the appetite for amassing wealth, and for people to desire good things, a good reputation in the mouths of the people, and high positions and official posts, making all legality and goodness, and all things that are proper for kings and great men in the world and the mode of living that is necessary to them, as well as all exalted and ornate work with minerals, and making the crowns of kings and sublime things, and making large books.

Venus is cold and moist, and a fortune. She signifies cleanliness, splendor, preciousness, word games, delight in music, joy, adornments, laughter, pictures, beauty, loveliness, playing music by the voice or stringed instruments; delighting in marriage, desiring spices and things that have good odors; sending dreams; provoking games of chess and dice; desiring to lie with women and to fall in love with them and receiving promises from them; desiring to appear beautiful, loving liberty, magnanimity of heart, and joy. She abhors anger, brawling, vengeance, and lawsuits; she desires to serve the desires and wills of friends concerning the world's opinion; tends toward false promises; is inclined to cupidity; desires to drink much; incessantly desires much copulation, and of shameful kinds, and to do it in inappropriate places, as women are accustomed to do with one another; delighting in animals and children and in making them good; making things equal; delighting in merchants and living with them and being loved by their women; and that they may be delighted by men. When she is well received, she plays a part in the making of crowns, building stables and working in stone, having sweet speech, disdaining the world and having no fear of it; sustaining people so that neither anger, strife, or discord can be felt by them; it designates a weak heart and a weak will in lawsuits and combat, and signifies desire for all beautiful combinations of things which may be in conformity with the will; making colors and laboring diligently in skills involving them; selling merchandise, spices, and prayers; those who observe the religious law; and those who adhere to sciences and philosophies of forbidden kinds.

Mercury is changeable, permuting himself from one nature to another, and receives the nature of the other planets, that is, he is benefic with benefic planets and malefic with malefic ones. He signifies perception and the rational intellect, fine eloquence, powerful and profound understanding of things, good intelligence, good memory, good perception, and an agile mind apt to learn sciences; those who labor in science and philosophy; understanding how things will happen; arithmeticians, geometers, astrologers, geomancers, magicians, augurs, scribes, grammarians, and smooth talkers; ready understanding of the petitions of the wise, those who labor in sciences and who desire to be exalted by those same sciences; those who want to make books, verses, and rhymes; those who write books, calculations and sciences; those who want to know the secrets of wisdom; expounders of philosophies; merciful and gentle people, and those who love sensation and pleasure; those who waste and destroy their wealth; merchandise; those who buy and sell things; having a part in the judgments and reasonings of people; the astute and deceptive; those who contemplate wickedness in their minds and keep these thoughts hidden; liars and makers of false instruments; fearful of enemies, swift in all works, flitting from the things of one profession to those of another; busying himself in everything; daring in all works that can be done by subtlety, and desiring to do great things; those who become rich; supporters of their friends and the people who mislead them to illicit ends.

The Moon is cold and moist. She signifies the beginning of works, great cogitations about things, good perception and motion, the best discussions in councils, utterances well spoken, daring in all things; fortunate concerning food that is necessary or desirable; good manners with people; gracious and quick in all actions, clean, moving quickly toward what is desired; having healthy and clear intentions toward people; a great appetite for eating, but a small one for sex and delights with women; turning away from evil so that one may be well spoken of by people; delighting in happy and beautiful things; thoroughly studying high sciences such as astrology, magic, and other secret sciences; faithful spouses, desiring to produce sons and nephews, and to make the society and home of their parents better; loved and honored by people, abhorring iniquity, just in all her works, and according to one of her qualities she signifies oblivion and necessity.

How to speak with Saturn. When you want to speak with Saturn and ask him for whatever you wish, you must wait until he enters into good condition, of which the best is when he is in Libra, which is his exaltation, next in Aquarius, which is the house of his rejoicing, and last in Capricorn, which is his second house. If you cannot have him in any of these three places, put him in one of his terms or triplicities or in an oriental angular or succedent house (among all of which the angle of the midheaven is to be preferred), direct in his course, and in a masculine quarter, being oriental as mentioned above. Beware of his detriment and unfortunate aspects, of which the worst of all is a square aspect with Mars, and do not let him be cadent. The most important point (of which you should take diligent care) is that you should see that the planet is in good condition and quality, and remote from infortunes, because when he is like this, he is like a man of good will and a lively heart and a great and ample mind, and if another person seeks something from him, he cannot find it in himself to deny the petitioner. When the same planet is retrograde in his course or cadent from the angles, he is like a man full of anger and ill will, who is most ready to deny a petition.

desire to speak with him and pray to him, dress yourself in black garments; that is, all the clothing on your body should be black, and you should also wear a black cap of the sort that doctors wear, and you should wear black shoes. Then go to a place set aside for these workings, remote from other people, and appropriate to the humbler sort of people, walking with a humble mind and in the fashion of the Jews, because Saturn is the lord of their conjunction.[\[218\]](#) Have a ring of iron in your hand, and carry an iron thurible with you, onto the burning coals of which you should put the following suffumigous confection, which is compounded in this way. Take opium, actarag (which is an herb), saffron, laurel seed, caraway, wormwood, lanolin, colocynth, and the head of a black cat, in equal parts. Grind up everything that needs to be ground, blend it with the urine of a black goat, and make pills of it. When you wish to work, put one of them on the burning coals of the thurible, saving the others; then face the part of the heavens in which Saturn is found. While the smoke is rising, say this prayer:

"O exalted lord whose name is great and who stands above the heaven of every other planet, whom God made subtle and exalted! You are the lord Saturn, who is cold and dry, shadowy, the author of the good, faithful in your friendships, true to your word, durable and persevering in your loves and hatreds; whose knowledge reaches far and deep, truthful in your words and promises, single in your operations, solitary, remote from others, near to suffering and sorrow, far from joy and celebration; you are old, ancient, wise, and you abolish knowledge of good things; you are the author of good and of evil. Miserable and tormented is he who is made unfortunate by your infortunes, and fortunate indeed is he who is touched by your fortunes. In you God has placed powers and virtues, and a spirit causing good and evil. I ask you, father and lord, by your exalted names and wonderful deeds, that you do such and such for me."

Here say the petition you wish to make, and cast yourself to the earth, with your face always turned toward Saturn, and with humility, sorrow, and gentleness. Your intention ought to be clean and firm in the matter about which you propose to ask, and you should repeat the foregoing words many times. Do the aforesaid in Saturn's day and hour, and know that your petition will be effectually fulfilled.

There are other sages who pray to Saturn with different prayers and suffumigations, and the latter are composed as follows. Take southernwood, bericus seeds, juniper root, preserved dates, and cashew nuts, in equal parts. Grind them up and mix them with good wine well aged (that is, many years old). Make pills of the mixture, and save them for use. When you wish to do the working, do as we have said above, and put some of this suffumigation in a thurible, while facing Saturn. As the smoke rises, say:

"In the name of God and in the name of Heylil,[\[219\]](#) who is the angel to whom God has assigned the powers and potencies of Saturn in all things accomplished by cold; you who are in the seventh heaven; I invoke you by all your names, which are, in Arabic Zohal, in Latin Saturnus, in the Persian language Keyhven,[\[220\]](#) in Roman Coronez, in Greek Hacoronoz,[\[221\]](#) in Indian Sacas;[\[222\]](#) by all these names of yours I invoke you and call to you. I likewise conjure you by the name of God the exalted, who gives power and spirit to you, that you will listen to me and accept my prayer with the obedience by which you obey God and His dominion, and accomplish such and such for me."

Here speak your petition, with the suffumigation continually being on the coals of the thurible. When you have said the aforesaid once, throw yourself to the ground facing Saturn, for this is consistent with his nature. Repeat the foregoing words, and then make a sacrifice to him.[\[223\]](#) Behead a black goat, and collect and save its blood; extract its liver and burn the liver to ashes in fire, and keep the blood. When you have done this, what you desire will come to pass.

When you wish to speak with Jupiter. If you wish to speak with Jupiter, put him in a good condition as we have said before concerning Saturn. Dress yourself in yellow and white garments, and go to a place that you have set aside for these workings, humbly and gently, in the manner of hermits and Christians, with a belt tied around your waist and a crystal ring bearing a cross on your finger, and wear a white cap. Take one thurible made of the metal of Jupiter,[\[224\]](#) in which you put burning fire. A suffumigation of the following sort is put into it. Take classa, storax, stalks of columbine, peony, calamus root, pine resin, and hellebore seed in equal parts. Grind them to powder and mix them with old pure wine (that is, aged for several years), and make pills of the mixture. When you wish to do a working, do as we have said and cast one of the pills into the fire in the thurible. Turning toward the part of heaven where Jupiter is, say the following.

"May God bless you, Jupiter, blessed lord, who is the greater fortune, warm and moist, equitable in all your works, affable, beautiful, wise, truthful, lord of truth and equality, far from all evil, merciful, lover of those who uphold religions and serve them, who thinks little of the things and vices of this world, delighting in religions and religious services, exalted of mind, doer of good and free in your nature, high and honored in your heaven, lawful in your promises and true in the friendships you have. I conjure you first in the name of God Most High who has given you power and spirit, and by your good will and lovely effects, by your noble and precious nature, that you will do such and such for me." Here name your petition. "For you are the source of all good and goodness, and the maker of all good things. Therefore you hear all petitions that are of goodly form."

There are other sages, however, who pray to Jupiter with different prayers, and suffumigations, and their suffumigation is made as follows. Take common fleabane, frankincense, nettle tree, equal parts; three parts of myrrh, and two parts of clean raisins. Grind everything that needs to be ground, mix it together with wine that has been aged for many years, and make into pills that can be saved for use. When the working is done, one of the pills is to be put in the thurible as we have said already concerning Saturn. Dress yourself in the manner of a friar or a monk, and upon your neck place one of the books of Scripture. Go humbly and meekly to the place where the working is to be done. Turn your face toward the heavens, toward that part where Jupiter is, and say the following.

"O angel Raucayehil,[\[225\]](#) whom God has set beside Jupiter! You, Jupiter, are the greater fortune, perfect, and the maker of good and of the perfection of all things. You are perceptive, wise, and great of intellect, far from all evil works and all malice and turpitude. I invoke and call you by all your names, which are, in Arabic Misteri,[\[226\]](#) in Latin Jupiter, in Persian Bargis,[\[227\]](#) in Roman Dermiz, in Greek Rauz,[\[228\]](#) and in Indian Huazfat.[\[229\]](#) I conjure you by the spirits and powers that God placed in you, by the obedience with which you obey Him, and by your virtues and marvelous effects and by your good, radiant and pure nature, that you do such and such for me." Here you should say your petition. Prostrate yourself to the ground and pray, and repeat the aforesaid often and many times. Afterward, take a white lamb and behead it and burn it completely, and eat its liver. Then it will be as you have asked.

There are others, however, who pray to Jupiter without suffumigating so that they may be safe from tempests on the sea. Thus said Rhazes, in his book of metaphysics: to escape in time of peril on the sea, turn to face Jupiter, when he is at the midheaven, and say the following.

"God bless you, noble planet, exalted star, precious and honored! In you God placed powers and spirits that accomplish good, and give form to the bodies of the universe as they appear in the divine law, and give life, and help those who sail the sea, and preserve their lives. I ask you, by the strength that God put in you, that you grant your light and spirit to me, whereby I may save myself, and cleanse and purify my nature, so that my perceptions and spirit may be illuminated, so that I may be able to know and understand things." If your work be properly performed, you will see the similitude of a candle burning before you, and if you do not see this, you will know that your working was not done correctly. Repeat it until you see the candle burning as just mentioned, and it will be as you desire.

But the consensus of the greater number of sages is that you should face toward the part of the heavens where Jupiter is, and say, "May God bless you, Jupiter, planet of perfect and noble nature, exalted, honored, precious, and benign lord, warm and moist and similar in your nature to air, equitable in your works, wise, truthful, lover of religion, wise and learned and lover of those who believe and keep the faith, ruler of truth and the law of truth, greater fortune, shining, perfect, direct, equal, just in your judgments, pious, exalted, honored, disdainer of the sciences of this world, exalted of mind, greatly delighting in grand and sublime things and those that are of your nature and mind, faithful in speech and promises, true in your friendships, perfect in goodness and far from all malice and sin; pure one who fears God, giver of the spirit of fortitude and lord of good and true laws, far from every evil deed and word (for your thought and intention is to uphold the law with perceptiveness, gentleness, intelligence and acuity), delighter in the wise and in wisdom, interpreter of dreams, lover of those who uphold religion, sustainer of your friends and those who cling to them, you who triumph truly and directly, delighter of kings, sublime men, soldiers and rulers, gatherer and accumulator of riches so that they may be given away in the service of the people and God and that which pleases Him, benefactor of humanity, helper of those who obey the laws and commandments of God, keeper of promises and of the words of the law, lover of crowds and populous lands and populated places, helper of pious people and communities, keeper of fidelity, good omens, words, beautiful affections, jests, laughter, long speeches, good manners and sense, lover of lying with women in a proper way and according to the laws, abominator of all evil deeds opposed to the laws, distinguisher of good deeds to which we ought to attach ourselves; you command us to abhor wicked deeds and keep far from them.

"May God bless you, O planet that is helped by God; to you God has given piety and goodness. To pure spirits working with God and living in his service, you distribute good things and keep them from every evil and worldly thing by your solicitude. In the waves of the stormy seas, you are the helper of those who call upon God. I ask you, out of your goodness aforesaid, to illuminate us and our sons and our associates with your light, and to deign to help with your high and honored powers and spirit, which God has placed in you, that by this spirit we may be able to preserve our bodies and our activities, and acquire wealth; and we may be able to put away from ourselves evil thoughts, sadness, and misery; nor may we have misery in this world, or sorrowful thoughts; but that we may live a good life in great and perfect abundance, and do works pleasing to the Lord our God; and that by your powers and spirit you may fortify our bodies so that in health, without any infirmity or suffering, they may be made to preserve our lives, and all infirmities and occasions of evil may be kept far from us.

"Infuse in us, sublime, noble and exalted spirit, your virtue, that we may thereby be honored by all people, that they may hold us in reverence and fear, and please us, and from them and the earth as well as from those of our people who seek to harm us, we can draw away so that they cannot do anything by their speech or actions to cause us harm. Let us also draw ourselves away from every evil that may be done to us by any person or beast, and let us be able to have divine grace and your love, that we may be wholly sheltered by your spirit and virtue, and defend us by your good and beautiful shelter, and regard us by a favorable aspect, and by this let us be defended against all this world. Let those who speak ill of us and their maledictions of every kind be held far from us, and let their eyes be darkened so that they cannot see our traps and deceptions, nor say anything evil of us, nor seek to do any harm to us, nor be able to blame us for any evil deed or word. By the noble and exalted virtue of your spirit may we be defended and sheltered, and thus gaze upon the hearts and minds of people so that all those who behold us shall be terrified by our appearance and be abashed, while by them we may be illuminated and honored as the rays of the sun, which are exalted, sublime, and honored above everything of this world.

"Grant the help of your strength and spirit to us, so that we may have thereby the perception and intelligence to understand divine laws, and to be able to keep them and be helped by them, and that we may be pleasing unto God and ready to do his service, as we ought to be. So shelter us with the strength of your spirit that we may be helped and defended by it, and by the divine God, our Lord, we may be able to attain knowledge, and by His grace be enabled to enter therein; and may He protect and defend us from the maledictions of the Earth, and draw us away from the tastes of this world, and so purify our senses of the superfluities of nature that they may be joined to the natural senses, [\[230\]](#) by which we may obtain the sublime and exalted knowledge of God and His grace. By your good and upright spirit, so guide and lead us that our spirits may be cleansed and purified of all superfluity and sin, and may be made clear, and remain inwardly unshaken by all the evil tastes of the world, sin, and impurity, and be protected by your power and spirit, so that they may attain to the high source of spirit and perception, and with the spirits of the angels and divine grace remain eternally in the service of God.

"For by you our wills are withdrawn from all corruptible things, that we may attain to eternal things. But may God in His mercy pardon and remit our sins, misdeeds, and maledictions, that our spirit be united with the things similar to Him and divided from things contrary to Him, that we may be able to understand, without any confusion, our nature, our forms and figures, and our proper names, that we may be able to rest in our spirits from all misery. Cleanse our spirits from all the juices of nature, and in this way grant that we may be able to obtain the good things of this world as well as the next. Amen.

Bargis;[\[232\]](#) in Latin, Jupiter; in Roman, Harmiz;[\[233\]](#) in Greek, Biuz;[\[234\]](#) that you may listen to my prayer and hear my words, and that you will deign to fulfill my petition. I conjure you by the name Raubeil [Rufija'il], who is the angel whom God placed beside you to complete the virtues and powers of your spirit and your effects; and by the names[\[235\]](#) Deryes, Ahatyz, Mahaty, Darquiz, Themiz, Carueyiz, Dehedeyz, Carnaduyz, Deme, and by the oldest works of the world, ancient and exalted above all others, which is without beginning or end, and is the principle of all things. By all these names, then, I conjure you, that you may listen to the prayer I have spoken and to my requests, and fulfill the petition I have made to you, and purify my mind toward you. I ask you for these few and limited things for us on account of the fragility of our nature and our deeds, and I return in all my doings to you and to your spirit, which cleanses and purifies my mind toward you, and disposes me toward you, that with humility and benevolence what I ask will be granted, and that I may be preserved by your name and spirit. For I know and understand your lordship and power, and am obedient to them. May you hear my prayer and words, on account of your goodness, and hear all my petitions, so that they may be made by me without any defect, and those which in our petition we have forgotten to ask for, you will deign to fulfill.

"Grant us a share in your goodness and nobility, and protect us with your spirit and the honored light of your noble mind, so that thereby we may have the power by which we may make all our dealings upright, and come into wealth. Draw us and our means away from the cravings of people, that thereby we may acquire the love of the people, so that our dealings with them may be well received, and that they may be obedient to our judgments and all our commands. May we be able to gain the grace and favor of kings and outstanding men and even our enemies, and have the reputation of being upright and honest in all our deeds and words; and let us perceive in our hearts the pleasures and vices of the world. May it please you to fulfill all the petitions we have already made by your might and the precious, noble, and exalted spirit which God has placed in you to accomplish good and to have pity on creatures and to distribute the requirements of life to the people of the world.

"I ask you by your pity, and by your great and honored nobility, and your noble and precious deeds and the light you have received from our God, who is the Lord of the Universe, that you may hear this prayer of mine, and turn toward me, and grant what is in my heart and mind even though I do not bring it forth in speech. Grant virtue and intelligence to me, by your powers and spirit, so that I may know that my petition to you has been well received, and reveal that you will help us according to your pity, so that cares and sorrow may be cut off from us. Grant to us, from your enduring good fortune, good fortune that will endure with us for all time. For I conjure you by your names and your pity, goodness, and nobility, that you may be my advocate in the presence of the Lord our God, the Precious One and Lord of the Universe, that my petition may be effectually fulfilled, and I may easily and without effort or sorrow obtain all that I seek; and also receive grace from kings and rulers of the earth and powers in the earth and all rational and irrational creatures. I conjure you by the Lord our God, who alone is God in this world, the world that is gone, and the world that is to come, that I may ask from you and your noble powers all that my prayer seeks, that you may receive complete blessings from the Lord of the Universe, and grace unto the age of the ages. Amen. And having a pure and blessed mind toward the Lord our God, Amen."

Now the sages who are experienced in this science have said of whoever does the foregoing working as we have just described it, saying everything that we have hitherto said, that the virtue and power of the spirit of Jupiter will reach out to him, and all his petitions will be fulfilled in the world, and for the whole circle of that year he will be healthy and safe from harm in his body, without detriment or infirmity, and all people will be obedient to him, and everything that he proposes to do will be accomplished easily, effectually and diligently, and he will be welcomed by people everywhere, especially if Jupiter is strong in his nativity. You should know that the more humbly and gently you proceed when you do the foregoing working, the better it will be, while keeping your mind pure and clean and withdrawn from all things of this world, neither thinking about mundane matters nor occupied by anything except the working itself. Prostrate yourself to the ground, turning your face toward Jupiter and making your prayer humbly, and you will have great help fulfilling your petitions in all things.

When you wish to pray to Mars. When you wish to ask Mars for something, and speak to him and honor him, put him in a good condition as we have said before concerning Saturn. Dress yourself in red garments, and put a red linen or silk cloth on your head as well as a red skullcap, and hang a sword from your neck, and arm yourself with all the weapons you can carry; and dress yourself in the manner of a soldier or a fighter, and put a bronze[\[236\]](#) ring on your finger. Take a bronze thurible with burning charcoal, in which you should put the following suffumigation.

Take wormwood, aloes, squill, spurge, long pepper, and watercress in equal amounts. Grind them up and mix them with human blood. Make pills of this, which you may set aside for use. When you wish to begin working, put one of them into the thurible, which you have brought with you to a remote place specially set aside for this working. When you have arrived there, stand upright on your feet and speak secretly, boldly, and without any fear, facing the south, Mars being fortunate and in good condition as we have said already about the other planets, and these same rules should always be observed. As the smoke rises, say the following.

"O Mars, you who are a honored lord and are hot and dry, mighty, weighty, firm of heart, spiller of blood and giver of illnesses thereto! You are strong, hardy, acute, daring, shining, agile, and the lord of battler, pains, miseries, wounds, prisons, sorrows, and mixed and separated things, who has no fear or contemplation of anything, sole helper in all your effects and in investigations thereof, strong in calculation and will to conquer and to seek after fortune, cause of lawsuits and battles, doer of evil to the weak and the strong, lover of the sons of battle, vindicator of wicked people and those who do evil in the world. I ask of you and conjure you by your names and your qualities that exist in heaven, and by your slayings, and also by your petitions to the Lord God who placed power and strength in you, gathering them in you and separating them from other planets that you might have strength and power, victory over all and great vigor.

"I ask you by all your names, which are: in Arabic, Marech;[\[237\]](#) in Latin, Mars; in Persian, Baharam;[\[238\]](#) in Roman, Bariz; in Greek, Hahuez;[\[239\]](#) and in Indian, Bahaze.[\[240\]](#) I conjure you by the High God of the Universe, that you may hear my prayer and attend to my petition, and furthermore see my humility and fulfill my petition. I ask that you will do such and such for me." Here say whatever your petition may be. Then say: "I conjure you by Raucahehil,[\[241\]](#) who is the angel whom God has set beside you to complete your affairs and effects." Always, when you say the foregoing, the smoke from the thurible should continue to rise, and you should repeat the foregoing many times, and ask for what you wish. Then behead a leopard, if you can get one, and if not, a mouse, which when you have beheaded it, you should burn it as we have already said for others, and eat its liver. That which you desire shall be accomplished.

But when you want to ask for the return of something that has been taken from you by an enemy, or an enemy has done evil to you and you want to be avenged on him, arm yourself with weapons and dress yourself as we have already said, and go to a place as noted above carrying the thurible and suffumigation with you. As the smoke rises, say the following:

"O Mars, who is of the nature of ardent flame, author of wars and labors, who presses down the exalted and hurls them from their dignities and estates; igniter of fury, wrath, and ill will in the hearts of the wicked; maker of mortality, killing of people by one another, shedding of blood, and incest with women, and cause of the sublimity and elevation of one person over another, and of offense and defense! I ask now that you protect and defend me, who is united with you in all these things. You are strong, hot and powerful in your works, nor do you draw back from whatever you seek and require. I ask you by all your names, manners, works, motions, and ways that are in your heaven, by your light and your dominion and the virtue of your realm, that you will attend to me and hear my petition.

"I have been vanquished by such and such a person, who out of his pride and willfulness caused and sought to cause iniquity to me. You are the commander of all those who turn to you, you enact and fulfill petitions made to you. I ask you by the light, strength, and power placed in you by God, the Lord of all the world, that you may send one from among your furies against this my enemy so that he may be separated from me, and direct his thoughts so that he may not remember me or think of me, and send against him pains and miseries and great vengeance and harm of such a kind that I will be able to receive from him what he took from me, and that his hands and feet may be cut off by me, and that he may receive every evil and misery from me, as well as the wrath and fury of the king; that his body and his wealth alike be given by me to thieves and robbers; and let him suffer in his body from sores and fevers and blindness of his eyes and deafness of his ears; and let all his senses be destroyed so that he is made blind, deaf, and mute, and contracted in all his limbs; and give to him pains and protracted miseries, and spoil food and drink and every flavor for him; and let him be deprived of life, and inflict on him every kind of misery and pain; and on his body, wealth, children, and associates inflict vengeance, and the wrath and fury of the king; pour out on him the enmity of his neighbors and his parents, and let thieves have his lordship and lands, and pursue him wherever he goes by land or sea. Let all the aforesaid be effectually accomplished, that he may be hurled down from his office and estate.

"You it is who are the doer of strong, furious, and evil works. I conjure you by your strengths and by your evil and strong effects on those who change, alter and corrupt all generated things, and on those who act against mariners and do evil to people, and all who labor in these works of yours. I conjure you that you may listen to my petition and I ask that you will be strong to fulfill it and that you pour out my misery and the evil works that the man about whom I pray to you has done to me. I conjure you by Raubeyl,[\[242\]](#) who is the angel whom the God of the Universe set beside you to complete all your effects and potencies. I conjure you by your spirit, that spirit which condemns sailors on the sea, and by the power that you pour out into the hearts of furious men and lovers of war, and slayers of one another, and those who enter into arduous deeds and the bitterest of wars. By all this I conjure you that you will hear my prayer and direct your attention to my affairs, and grant the strength of your spirit to me, who has set out the prayer you hear; and may you receive perfect honor from God, who is the Lord of all the Universe. You are the commander of good and of good events, and the doer and maker of evils, inflicting pains and miseries on those who deserve them. Amen. Amen.

"I furthermore conjure you by the names[243] Dayadeburz, Hayaydez, Handabuz, Maharaz, Ardauz, Beydehydiz, Mahydebiz, Deheydemiz, by all which I conjure you that you will grant my petition, and attend to my requests, and have pity upon my lamentations and tears, and heal my injuries, and protect and defend me from the malice and treachery of this person and others who seek to do harm to me. I conjure you by the high God of the entire firmament, the Lord of great power and dominion, namer of the prophets and the lord of good, giver of all life on Earth, who created life and death, end and persistence. He indeed it is who remains and endures for the infinite age of ages, without beginning or end; by Him I conjure you that in this hour and time you will fulfill my petition. Amen."

Repeat these words many times, saying them over the smoke of the thurible, and your intention will be fulfilled. If you behead one of the beasts of Mars mentioned above and burn it in the fire and do with it as is done with the others, you will be the more certain to have your petition fulfilled.

To avenge yourself on an enemy. The ancient sages used to do this working in the proper manner to the star of vengeance, which is near the pole: that is, Benethnays,[244] which belongs to the constellation of the Great Bear. They made their prayer in the following manner.

When you have an enemy who does evil to you or seeks to do the same, and you wish to send him pain and misery so that he will no longer think of you, so that you may be able to avenge yourself by this working, go into a house that you have constructed for this purpose, and face the part of heaven where Benethnays then is. Cast the suffumigation described below onto the burning coals in the thurible. While the smoke rises toward the world above, say the following.

"May God bless you, great Benethnays, you who are exalted in your place and beautiful in the firmament. I call and conjure you by the power that God, the founder of all things, has placed in you, that you will send to such and such a person, a spirit that will enter into his body in such a manner that his body will be bound and knotted up so that all his members will be accursed and all his senses returned to nothingness, so that he shall altogether lack sight, hearing, and every sensation, motion, speech, eating, drinking, delight in anything, and life itself, and that you, O star Benethnays, may hurl him down to death and pour out on him every kind of misery, in every part of him; let his eyes behold only labor and sorrow, the wrath and fury of kings and the victory of his enemies and of wild and domestic beasts; command him to suffer malevolence from his neighbors and parents, and send harsh and manifest vengeance swiftly upon him in all things; destroy his body and house, destroy him by casting him down from high places, make his eyes start from his head, break his hands and feet, destroy all his members, and inflict upon him the strongest and most extreme miseries and the harshest punishments that a human being can suffer; turn him away from the God of mercy and pity, nor have any pity upon him, nor remove any impediment from him; and all that I have said, do swiftly.

"My mind is freely set on you on account of the great injuries I have sustained from him and the evil that he has done and sought to do to me without any reasonable cause. You are the star that effectually accomplishes petitions and supplications made to you, and protects those who have recourse to you. Therefore I ask you to pour out your power and spirit on the aforementioned person with great fury and wrath, and send all the aforesaid punishments on him swiftly, that he may have pains, miseries, and great sorrows, and be maltreated and despised by everyone who sees him, and pour out on him great infirmities and sorrows in all his members, and inflict changes upon him so that he suffers all the pains and miseries I have described to you. I therefore conjure you by your power and spirit that you will remember my petition, and mourn for my tears, and grant to me your spirit, power, and understanding, that I may know that you have effectually heard my petition. I likewise conjure you by God of the great firmament and exalted powers, and by Him, that is, who has dominion and power over all creatures of heaven and earth, who is God himself, to hear my petition, and I now ask you to accomplish it punctually by the name of that High Lord who is God, and by His power and His virtue, that you accomplish my petition and closely consider my speech and words."

When you have said all the preceding in this way, prostrate yourself to the ground, and repeat the same words many times. Do this continually while the smoke rises from the suffumigation, which is made as follows. Take storax, nutmeg, holly, and aloes wood, one ounce each, and spikenard and mastic, three ounces each. Grind it all and mix it with the best wine, and make pills of it. You may set it aside to use whenever you want to work with the polar stars.

When you want to pray to the Sun. When you want to pray to the Sun and ask anything from him, such as asking for grace from the king, and the friendship of lords, and lordships and how to acquire them, make the Sun fortunate and put him on the ascendant, and do this in his day and hour. Dress yourself in royal vestments of yellow and golden silk, and put a crown of gold on your head, and likewise a golden ring on your finger, and equip yourself in the manner of the great men of the Chaldeans, because the Sun is the lord of their ascension. Go into a house set apart and dedicated to this work, and place your right hand on your left, and face the Sun with a modest and humble expression, the way the timid and modest look. Take a thurible of gold and a handsome rooster whose neck is beautiful, and on its neck put a little burning candle which is set on top of a single piece of wood the size of the palm of your hand. In the fire in the thurible put the suffumigation, which will be described below. When the Sun rises, turn the rooster to face him, and with the smoke ascending continually from the thurible, say the following.

"You who are the foundation of heaven and are exalted above all the stars and all the planets, holy and reverend, I ask that you may hear my petition, and grant to me the grace and friendship of such and such a king and other kings as well. I conjure you by Him who gave you light and life. You are the light of the world. I invoke you by all your names: that is, Arabic, Yazemiz;[\[245\]](#) in Latin, Sol; in Chaldean, Maher;[\[246\]](#) in Roman, Lehu; [\[247\]](#) in Indian, Araz.[\[248\]](#) You are the light of the world and its illumination; you stand in the middle of the planets. You it is who cause generation in the world by your virtue and heat; from your sublime place. I ask you for your exaltation and will, that you may deign to help me so that this king and certain other kings of this world shall put me in an exalted and sublime position, that I may have dominion and exaltation just as you are the lord of the other planets and the stars, who receive their light and illumination from you. I ask you who are the foundation of the whole firmament, that you will have pity upon me, and listen to the words and prayers I say to you." While the smoke rises, you should say the above words.

The suffumigation that is necessary for this work, however, is that which we call the hermits' suffumigation, and this suffumigation (as the ancient sages say) has great and marvelous effects. It is compounded of 31 spices, and its composition is as follows.

Take common fleabane, bdellium, myrrh, opium, elecampane, and cicely, 7 oz. each; nettle tree, lavender, and peeled pine nuts, 3 oz. each; orris root, cardomel, cardamom, aromatic calamus, frankincense, and mace, 5 oz. each; dried roses, saffron, spikenard, caper root, and cinquefoil, 4 oz. each; aromatic coltsfoot, balsam grains, and mother of thyme, 9 oz. each; 1 oz. of squill; 2 lbs. each cucumber seed, cardamom, terebinth, powdered dates, and peeled raisins; and 5 lbs. clarified honey. Grind everything that needs grinding, mix with the best wine, and make into pills; and reserve these for the operations of the Sun, suffumigating with them when you pray the aforesaid prayer to the Sun. When you have finished, behead the rooster and eat its liver. Do everything as we have said elsewhere, and you will have your desire.

The suffumigation and prayer of the Sun, however, may be done better in this way. Dress yourself in clothes of the kind already mentioned and prepare yourself in the way we have described above, and put the following suffumigation in the fire of the thurible. Take saffron, storax, frankincense, nutmeg, litharge, wild pomegranate flower, aloes wood, and saxifrage in equal parts. Powder and mix them, and make pills which you may set aside for use. When you do the working, put one of the pills on the burning coals of the thurible. While the smoke rises, say the following.

"May God bless you, Sun, you who are fortunate and the greater fortune, hot and dry, luminous, resplendent, noble, beautiful, exalted, and honored king over all the stars and planets. Power of beauty, subtlety, good disposition, truth, wisdom, knowledge and riches, which by your virtue are acquired, and in you are made strong. You are the lord of the six planets, which are governed by your motion, and you reign over them and have kingship and lordship over them, and they are obedient to you and depend on your aspect, so that when their motion is conjoined with yours, at once, obedient to you, they overflow with your light; and when they are corporeally conjunct with you their rays are consumed, and they are wholly concealed by your face, and all of them shine by your light, virtue and splendor. You have power over them all. You are king, and they are vassals. You give light and power to them all, and they receive fortunate influences from you and do fortunate things when they aspect you with a favorable aspect, and when they aspect you with an unfortunate aspect, they lose their fortunate influences and become infortunes. No one can possibly perceive all your good and noble qualities, which are infinite to our intellects."

When you have made the foregoing allocution in this way, prostrate yourself to the ground facing the Sun, and repeat the foregoing words many times. Make a sacrifice of some animal of the Sun according to what we have said about the superior planets, and you will have your desire.

Another prayer to the Sun, which the sages say is for kings, powerful people, and exalted people when they have been separated from their power and realms and wish to return to their original estate. When you wish to do a working for this or a similar purpose, first put Scorpio on the ascendant, with the Sun forming an aspect to Mars. Take a thurible of gold, and put burning coals with it; and hold grains of amber the size of a fava bean in your hand, and cast them into the fire of the thurible one after another. As the smoke rises toward the Sun (that is, when he is in the middle of the sky), turn toward him and say the following.

"O Sun, you who are the source of riches, the increment of power, the life of decoration, the root of exaltation and the beginning of every good thing! I place all my will on you, and with it place myself wholly in your hands. I beseech you on account of my decline and fall and the diminution of my power, and because people rejoice over me and do not respect me according to my estate. I conjure you by the exalted Lord God, who is the mover of your movements and the giver of your power, by whom you are able to complete your acts, and by the obedience with which you obey the same Lord, and by the reason you have to help and save by projecting yourself and your will (that is, to those who pray to you and supplicate you with a clean and unblemished will) and by the dominion and power that the Lord has given you above all other planets, that you hearken to me, and free my mind, and remove from it troubled and sorrowful thoughts, and restore me to my power, estate, and lands, and grant that one in particular of the people of this world shall fall under my obedience and domination; for you are worthy to distribute your power, fortitude, exaltation, and nobility, by which I shall have fortune and power to work upon all things so that they may be obedient unto me.

"I conjure you by your concealed and hidden nobilities, and by the help that you have in ordering motions, and by the influence, power, strength, and works that you have in the generation of things in the world, and by your pity which touches the poor, and by your fortune which touches the great, and by your fidelity and lawfulness which you have toward the Lord God, who gives power to you, and by your duty to help those who flee to you and call to you, and by the paths and passages of heaven which have no similitude on Earth, that you hear my prayer and understand my request and listen to my words and effectually accomplish my petition. All those who have a clean and unblemished mind toward you will have perfect salvation."

Say this while wearing the clothing that we have described above, standing with your face toward the Sun, and observing all the other things touched on earlier, you will have your desire.

When you want to pray to Venus. When you want to pray to Venus and ask her for something among those things that pertain to her, see that she is far from the infortunes, direct and not retrograde, and in good condition. Then dress yourself and adorn yourself in one of two manners, of which the best is the garments and ornaments of the exalted men of Arabia.[\[249\]](#) Dress yourself in white garments, and wear a white cloth on your head, which is their sign. The other manner is to adorn yourself entirely as a woman. Dress yourself in a long garment of silk and gold mixed together, precious and beautiful, and on your head wear a crown ornamented with pearls and precious stones, and on your hand a golden ring ornamented with a pearl, and golden bracelets on your wrists; and in your right hand hold a mirror, and in your left carry a comb. Place before you a jug of wine, and sprinkle your garments with powdered aromatic spices and sweet-smelling things and nutmeg, as women do. Then take a thurible of gold alloyed with silver, and put burning coals into it; onto these put the suffumigation we will describe shortly. As the smoke rises, say the following.

"May God bless you, O Venus, you who are queen and fortune, and are cold and moist, equitable in your effects and complexion, pure and lovely and sweetly scented, beautiful and ornate. You are the lady of adornment, of gold and silver; you delight in love, joy, ornaments and jests, elegance, songs and music that are sung or played on strings, written music and songs played on organs, games and comforts, rest and love. [\[250\]](#) In your effects you remain equal. You take delight in wine, rest, joy, lying with women, for in all of these your natural effects consist. I invoke you by all your names: that is, in Arabic, Zohara;[\[251\]](#) in Latin, Venus; in Persian, Anyhyt;[\[252\]](#) in Roman, Affludita;[253] in Greek, Admenita;[254] in Indian, Sarca.[255] I conjure you by the Lord God, the lord of the highest firmament, and by the obedience you offer to God, and by the power and lordship He has over you, that you listen to my prayer, and consider my petition, and do such and such for me." Here speak your petition. "And I conjure you by Beyteyl,[256] who is that angel whom God has set beside you to complete all your powers and effects."

When you have said the foregoing, prostrate yourself to the ground toward Venus, and repeat the foregoing while you remain prostrate to the ground. Then raise yourself up and repeat the foregoing words again. When this is done, behead a pigeon and a turtle-dove, and eat their livers; their bodies are to be burned in the thurible that has already been mentioned. While you do the aforesaid, let the suffumigation be in the fire of the thurible. The composition of this suffumigation is this. Take aloes wood, gall, costus, saffron, opium, mastic, poppy hulls, willow leaves, and orris root in equal parts. Grind them all and mix them with rose water; make from this pills the size of a fava bean, which you cast into the fire of the thurible when you perform this working as described above.

A prayer to Venus for love. You can also create love between two people and between husband and wife in this way. Dress and adorn yourself as we have said above, and see that the condition of Venus and the other planets is as described above, and put into the fire the following suffumigation. Take gall and long pepper, 5 oz. each, and raisins, frankincense, and mastic, 3 oz. each. Grind them all and mix them with rain water, and make pills the size of a fava bean, which you throw on the coals one after another, and so on until you reach the end of the working, nor should the smoke be absent at any point during the working. While the smoke rises, say:

"O Venus, you who are the spirit of live and the ordainment of friendship and the adornment of conjunction! From you proceeds the power of enjoyment and love, and from you flow good friendship and mutual delight among people, and from you, having been accumulated by you, the spirits of good desires and evil desires redound. From you proceeds the root of the conjunction of love between men and women. From you is the root of generation. You draw the spirit of one person toward another, and by you they are united; by love their spirits are disposed toward one another, and by your virtue love is generated. O Venus, you who are lovely, you who give the virtue of the conjunction of love, by which you desire those who seek you!

"I beseech you by your names, and by the sublime and exalted name of God, who created you and moves you in your heaven, that you may listen to my prayer and petition, concerning the ill will that such and such a person has and wishes to have toward me, and the misery, labor, and sorrow that are from their[257] enmity and ill will, and that have diverted good things from me, this is the reason why I am conquered. I ask and supplicate that you turn the aforesaid person toward me, along with their love and friendship, and I ask that you send your spirits and powers upon them and their spirit, and upon the essence of their spirit, their speech, and all their spirit and thoughts be directed toward me; and move them by this movement and power toward me, as though by the movement of flame and the power of impetuous winds. I conjure you and your spirits, you who are true in your friendships and loves, and lovely and firm in your associations; your spirits, who bring about loves and conjunctions and move the power of delights and vices in spirits and bring about love, by all these I conjure you that you will hear and attend to this my petition and prayer.

"I likewise conjure you by Beyteyl,[\[258\]](#) who is the angel whom the Lord our God has set beside you to fulfill your powers and effects. I conjure you also by your spirit, with which you have strength and potency in your works. I conjure you by your light and radiance, that you pour into their heart and thoughts the desire for enjoyments, vices and loves, that you attend to my affairs and fulfill my petition, so that you will fulfill all that I have desired from you and transmit to me a share in your light, potency, and love, by which I will be able to perceived that my petition has been heard by you. For it is you who joins hearts, who unites love and benevolence, who combines, who brings about joy, solace, and delight, that you may have complete and perfect salvation in eternity. Amen."

When you have said and done the aforesaid as given above, sacrifice a white dove and eat its liver. Burn the rest of it, save the ashes, and put them in the food of anyone you wish; you will be well loved by that person.

When you want to pray to Mercury. When you want to pray to Mercury and ask him for one of the petitions that pertain to him, such as petitions of scribes and regencies of kings, dress yourself in the garments of a notary and scribe, when the Moon is conjunct with Mercury, and proceed in all your actions as though you were a scribe. On your finger put a ring of fixed mercury,[\[259\]](#) because with such a ring Hermes the wise used to work. Sit on a chair of the kind that schoolmasters use, and turn to face Mercury, holding a piece of paper in your hands as though you intended to write on it. Have the proper suffumigation and a thurible of fixed mercury full of fire, in which you put the suffumigation. As the smoke rises, say:

"May God bless you, good lord Mercury, you who are truthful, perceptive, intelligent, and the sage and instructor of every kind of writing, arithmetic, computation, and science of heaven and earth! You are a noble lord and temperate in your joys, the lord and sustainer and subtle interpreter of wealth, business, money, and profound perceptions. You are the dispositor and significator of prophecy and prophets and their perceptions, reasoning and doctrine, apprehending diverse sciences; of subtlety, intelligence, philosophy, geometry, the sciences of heaven and earth, divination, geomancy and poetry; of writing, rhetoric, keenness of the senses, profundity in all professions and actions, quickness, the conversion of one business into another, making things clear or clean; of sustaining and helping people and making them content with what they have; of piety, perception, tranquility, averting evil, and of good religion and human law. You have concealed yourself by your subtlety so that no one else can possibly know your nature or determine your effects.

"You are fortunate with fortunes and unfortunate with infortunes, masculine with masculine planets and feminine with feminine ones, diurnal with diurnal planets and nocturnal with nocturnal ones; you exist and harmonize with them in all their natures, and you conform yourself to them in all their forms, and you transmute yourself into all their qualities. Therefore I call on you and invoke you by all your names, that is, in Arabic, Hotarit;[\[260\]](#) in Latin, Mercurius; in Roman, Haruz;[\[261\]](#) in Persian, Tyr;[\[262\]](#) in Indian, Meda;[\[263\]](#) I conjure you above all by the high Lord God, who is the lord of the firmament and of the realm of the exalted and great; by Him I conjure you, that you will receive my petition, and grant to me that which I ask, and pour out the powers of your spirit upon me, by which I shall be made strong, and be able to have my petition fulfilled, and be made apt and disposed to gain knowledge and wisdom. Make me beloved and well received by such and such kings and exalted men, make me exalted and honored by all peoples and kings, that I may be given secrets, that they may receive my words effectually and have need of me, and seek from me knowledge and wisdom in writing, arithmetic, astrology and divination. Work on me in such a way and so dispose me that by all these things I may receive profit and wealth, honors and exaltations before kings and exalted persons, and all that I am able to receive.

"Thus I conjure you by Arquyl;[\[264\]](#) who is the angel whom God has set beside you to complete your acts and works, that you will receive my petition and hear my prayer and attend to my requests and fulfill them. I ask also that you help and strengthen me with your spirit, and join me by your spirit and power to the affection of kings, and aid me to attain knowledge and wisdom by your virtue, and by your assistance so help me that I may know what I do not know, and can understand what I do not understand, and can see what I do not see, and remove me from necessity and all that decreases understanding and leads to division and illness, so that I may attain to the level of the sublime ancient sages (those, that is, who had knowledge and understanding in their spirits and minds), and send to my spirit your power and spirit, in order to elevate me, and make me attain to the aforesaid state, and direct me in knowledge and wisdom and in all my deeds, that I may have grace and power by serving kings and exalted people, and in this way acquire wealth and treasures, and swiftly fulfill this my petition. Therefore I conjure you by the Lord God, lord of the high firmament and the realm of power, that you may receive my petition and effectually fulfill all the things that I have asked of you."

When you have said all of the foregoing, prostrate yourself to the ground toward Mercury, humbly and devotedly, and repeat the foregoing prayer once. Then raise your head, and behead a rooster that has a large comb, and burn it in the way described earlier, and eat its liver. The suffumigation that is to be burnt is compounded in this way: take nuts of the holm-oak, cumin, dry cloves, myrtle roots, bitter almond bark, acacia, tamarisk grains, grapevine roots, and squill, all in equal parts. Grind and mix with pure and delicate wine, make into pills, and save them for use.

When you want to pray to the Moon. When you want to pray to the Moon and ask her for any of those things that pertain to her, dress as though you were a child, and have with you things that smell good, and hold a silver ring in your hand, and be quick in your movements and actions, and speak elegantly, well, and punctually. Carry in front of you a thurible of silver. In the fourteenth day of the lunar month, when the Moon is above the earth and aspecting the fortunes with a favorable aspect, wash your face, turn toward the Moon, and say the following.

"May God bless you, O Moon, you who are the blessed lady, fortunate, cold and moist, equitable and lovely. You are the chief and the key of all the other planets, swift in your motion, having light that shines, lady of happiness and joy, of good words, good reputation, and fortunate realms. You are a lover of the law and a contemplator of the things of this world, subtle in your contemplations. Joy, songs, and jests you take delight in and love; you are the lady of ambassadors and messengers and the concealer of secrets. Free and precious one, you are closer to us than the other planets, you are larger than all and most luminous; you are apt to good and evil, you join the planets together, you carry their light, and by your goodness you rectify all things whatsoever. All the things of this world are adorned by your beauty and accursed by your curse. You are the beginning of all things and you are the end thereof. Thus I call to you and I conjure you by Celan[265], who is the angel whom God set beside you to complete all your effects, that you will take pity on me, and hear my petition, and by the humility which you bear toward our Lord Most High and His kingdom, that you will hear me in the things concerning which I beseech and ask you. By all your names I invoke you: that is, in Arabic, Camar;[266] in Latin, Luna; in Persian, Mehe;[267] in Greek, Zamahyl;[268] in Indian, Cerim;[269] in Roman, Celez, [270] that you hear my petition in this place."

Then prostrate yourself to the earth, facing the Moon, repeating the foregoing words. While doing this, keep suffumigating with the suffumigation of the hermits, which is composed of 28 components in this way: take one ounce each of mastic, cardamom, savine, storax, and long pepper, two ounces each of elecampane, myrrh, squill, dar sessahal, spikenard, costus, frankincense, and saffron; four ounces each of melon, melon seed, and henna root; three ounces each of orris root, nettle tree, Indian poley, and shelled cleaned pine nuts; two pounds laudanum, St. John's wort, apple leaves, dried roses, and rice; two pounds of raisins; and five pounds of dates. Mix these with enough of the most subtle wine to bind them together, and make into pills the size of a fava bean. When the working is finished, take a calf and behead it, and burn it in a great fire, as we have said before. If you sacrifice an ewe instead, burn her and eat her liver, as we have described earlier concerning other sacrifices. Your petition will be fulfilled.

The opinion of the sages, however, concerning opportune prayers and petitions to the planets, is that each planet acts in matters corresponding to its nature, as fortunes in good things and infortunes in bad ones. When you wish to seek anything from a planet, see to it that the lord of the ascendant is aspected by that planet, and the almutaz of the figure is oriental, and elevated in four altitudes in its epicycle as well as oriental therein;[\[271\]](#) this is when they would ask their petitions. Also, the virtues and effects of the planets are stronger and more influential at night. Be careful that you do not ask anything from any planet that is not of its own nature, for in this case your petition will fail.

The sages who made these prayers and sacrifices to the planets in mosques[\[272\]](#) did all of the foregoing things. While the planet moved through eight degrees of heaven, they would sacrifice one animal, and similarly when it declined by another eight degrees they would offer another sacrifice. They say that Hermes commanded them to do this in mosques or in their own churches. These sages say of the aforementioned Hermes that he was the lord of the three flowers of things, that is, king, prophet, and sage. They require that no animal of two colors, nor black, nor having a broken bone nor a horn broken in any way, nor an injured eye, nor having any flaw in its body, be sacrificed in their mosques. When they behead an animal, they take out its liver at once. They examine it, and if they find any defect or spot in it, they say that the lord of that place has some notable impediment. They then cut up the liver and give it to one of the bystanders to eat.[\[273\]](#)

They call Mars in their language Mara smyt, which means Lord of Malefactors, and they say that he is a malefactor because he is quick to do evil. His image according to their opinion is the image of a man holding a sword in his right hand and a flame of fire in his left, and threatening in turn with sword and fire; and for this reason he is honored by them, and they make sacrifices out of fear of him and to prevent his evils. The sacrifices they make to him are made when the Sun enters Aries, which is the house of Mars, and similarly when the Sun enters Scorpio they make another sacrifice.

They have an experiment with a child, which is as follows. In the month that the Sun spends in Scorpio, they would take a boy and lead him into a house set apart and decorated for this working, and have him stand upright on his feet. They would bring a handful of tamarisk seeds, and burn them in a brass thurible. Over the boy they would utter words pertaining to Mars and dress him in the garments of Mars. If the fire touched the back of the boy, they judged by this that he was unqualified, inappropriate, and inapt for this working; while if the fire touched his front parts, they asserted that he was proper and apt for this work.[\[274\]](#)

Then they took him to their house of prayer, where they examined him to see that he was healthy in all his members. They then took him to another house where it was dark, and veiled his eyes. The priest was waiting for him, and held a spear of red tamarisk wood above him, They dressed the boy in animal skins, and put a thurible full of fire next to his right foot and another thurible full of water next to his left foot. Meanwhile the boy's mother came with a rooster in her hands and sat in the door of the house.

The priest then swore the boy to secrecy, and bound him by the bonds of an oath that he would never reveal the secrets of the ritual for all eternity, and terrified him fiercely so that he did not reveal it, telling him that if he revealed any of the foregoing to anyone, he would instantly die. When this was finished, the boy's eyes were unveiled and opened. His mother then came in with the aforementioned rooster, and the priest took the rooster in his hands and beheaded it above the boy. At once the mother threw a red cloth over the boy and led him out of the house. As soon as the boy left the house, he put a ring on his index finger that bore the image of an ape.[\[275\]](#)

They also say that the first sacrifice pertaining to Saturn is when he is in Taurus, and they sacrifice a cow to him, asserting that its horns are placed in the manner of a crown, and that it is more beautiful than other animals and more proper for sacrifice than any other animal. They sacrificed it after it had been fed on herbs gathered by virgin girls in the garden of the Sun for a certain time, and afterwards they returned home by roads other than the ones by which they left home. They considered all of the foregoing to be the greatest secrets of their workings. They made sure that the aforementioned cow was completely intact, and without any white spot, however small. Above its eyes they put a golden chain and wrapped this around its horns. They say that the wise Hermes taught them to do the working in this way.

When they wished to behead the cow, they prepared it for death, and burned the suffumigation of Saturn before it and said prayers after the manner of the Greeks. The priest beheaded it with a sharp sword in which no defect or diminution was found, and collected the blood in a dish, and received its tongue, ears, snout, and eyes; and the rest was carried away in pieces.[\[276\]](#) Later they used to inspect the blood that remained in the dish and the foam that rose atop the blood, and from the foam interpreted the lordship and motion of Saturn, which according to them is the first motion, because in him motion begins and ends. They were accustomed to make this kind of sacrifice when Saturn entered the sign of Taurus.

These same men used to wash their faces and bodies with wine and powdered salt, because it makes their skin or hide dry, and because it makes the blood move freely in their bodies. They hold that their work is completed by this.

They had a closed house into which no one entered, and in it was a deep well. When the Sun entered into the first degree of Leo, they would send to the land of Canuiz[\[277\]](#) for a red ram, and cover it with precious cloths. They led it to a place full of trees and flowers, making much rejoicing, and gave it as much wine as it would drink. They then led it to this house at night, and threw it down the well just mentioned, and bathed it therein in sesame oil. Then they drew it up out of the well and gave it dried roses, lentils, fava beans, rice, honey, and wheat to eat, all mixed together. Finally, 28 days after the Sun's entrance into Leo, they led it at night to a grove outside the city and outside populated land, and cut off its head. They made a pit there and buried the ram in it. The head, though, they carried back to the house of the working, and stored it up facing their images.[\[278\]](#) They said that out of it they heard a faint voice, by which, they said, they learned the length of life of their king and the increase or decrease of their people.

The one who revealed the foregoing workings and taught us this secret was Barnac Elbarameni,[\[279\]](#) who ended his days in the land of the Hindus; a certain part of India is given the name Bayrameny[\[280\]](#) after him. Certain sages of that people have many workings of diverse kinds, which would prolong our book inordinately if we wished to repeat them all. Therefore we return here to our proposed course.

Chapter Eight

The way of prayer with which the Nabateans used to pray to the Sun and Saturn, and how they would speak to them and their spirits and draw forth their influences

The Nabatean sages have said that the power and works of the heavens and stars are from the Sun originally, and this is because they see and understand that the Moon helps him (that is, as much as is in her power), while the Sun does not need her effects, nor those of the other planets; and similarly, the five other planets follow the Sun in their effects and obey and are humbled by him, and proceed in their aforementioned effects according to the dispositions of the Sun. In the same way, according to their opinion, all their effects are primarily rooted in the Sun, and the other six planets help him by their effects. Similarly, the fixed stars are the Sun's handmaidens, and serve, obey, and are humbled by him, and while they help him with their effects, this is not because of any need that he has of them. These people were wont to make this prayer to the Sun:

"We pray, we honor, and we praise thee, high Lord Sun. For you give life to everything living in the world, and the whole universe is illuminated with your life and governed by your power. You are seated on high; a great kingdom full of light, perception, intellect, power, honor, and goodness is yours. All things that generate are generated by your power, all things governed are governed by you; by you all plants live, and all things endure in their strength through you. You are noble and honorable in your effects, and powerful in your enduring heaven. We salute, we praise, and we honor you, and we pray in obedience and humility, and reveal all our minds to you, and all things necessary to us we ask and require of you. You are our lord, and we beseech you that we may perceive your life and governance by day as well as by night. We give to you our wills, that you may free and defend those who turn to you from our enemies and from all evils, and that this also may be done by the Moon, who is your handmaiden and obeys you, and whose light and radiance are from you and the virtue that proceeds from you. You are the giver of power; you are lord in your chosen heaven. The Moon and the other planets serve you always and obey you, and never depart from your precepts. May all this likewise always by us be praised unto the infinite age of ages, Amen."

The sages of The Chaldean Agriculture[\[281\]](#) have said that they prayed to Saturn with the following prayer, but they first ascertained that this lord was not descending in the circle nor occidental of the Sun, nor under the Sun's rays nor in the midst of his retrogradation. When they found him to be free of all impediment and clean, however, they made the following prayer to him, and suffumigated with old hides, fat, sweat, dead bats, and mice, of which 14 bats were burnt and 14 mice were similarly burnt; and they took the ashes and spread them on the head of their image. They prostrated themselves around the image on stone or black sand. By this working they were protected from Saturn's malice and evil, because from Saturn all evils, destructions, and sorrows proceed. He is the lord of all poverty, misery, sorrow, imprisonments, sins, and lamentations, and these are signified when he is cadent and unfortunate. When he is in good disposition and in his exaltation, however, he signifies purity, length of life, exaltation, joy, honor, wealth, inheritance, and the transmission of inheritances to sons and nephews. His goodness is when he is oriental of the Sun, and when he is at the midheaven and in direct motion and swift in motion and elevated in his circle and in his increase.

Zeherit, who was the first sage of the three sages of The Chaldean Agriculture, said that he made this prayer to Saturn and asked from him the petitions he desired, and at once a certain disposition came over Saturn's image, from which he received an answer to what he asked. The way of making this prayer is as follows.

"We stand upright, we pray and we honor you in obedience and humility. We stand upright facing this high, living and enduring lord, fixed in his power and dominion, who is Saturn. He is enduring in his heaven and potent in his lordship and adunate[282] in his effects, altitudes, and magnificences. He encircles all things, and has power over all things visible and invisible, and has power over all that exists on the Earth. By his power all living things on Earth live, and by his durability they endure. They begin by his power and potency, and he makes them endure, and by his enduring permanence and his durability the Earth is made permanent. He makes waters and rivers to flow by his power, as they flow away and are moved. By his life he makes living things move so that they live. He is cold by his nature. By his high rulership trees grow and are raised up, and the earth is made ponderous according to the ponderousness of his motion; and if he wishes, he makes things other than they are. He is wise and the power of things and the maker of perception; and his knowledge extends to all things.

"For you are blessed, you are the lord of your heaven, and your name is holy, revered, and honored.[283] We are obedient to you, on our feet we pray to you and to your honor, by your names, will, nobility and honor we beseech you that you will strengthen our senses that they will be enduring and be with us throughout our lives, that they will remain as they are, and take pity on our bodies when they are separated from live, so that worms and creeping things draw back from our flesh. You are the pious and ancient lord, and none but you can restore what you have destroyed. You are permanent in your words and deeds, nor do you repent of your actions. You are slow and profound in your powers. You are so great a lord that no one can take away what you have given, and what you prohibit none can allow. You are the lord of your elegant works and your unique realm. You are the lord of the other planets, and the other stars moving in their circles fear the movement of your voice and shake with terror for fear of you. We ask you and we implore you that you will keep us safe from your fury and your wrath, and deign to remove from us your evil effects, and in your purity have pity on us, and let your good and noble names touch your pity, so that we may be able to remove by your power all your evil effects, and have pity on us by your virtue as well as ours. By all your names, and by your high and noble name, to which you will allow more than all your other names, this name[284], we pray and ask that you will pour out your pity on us."

The foregoing words were composed by Abenrasia[285] in The Chaldean Agriculture, which he translated out of the Chaldean language. We have repeated this prayer here only to reveal the common agreement of the ancient sages concerning planetary workings, and how they at all times protected their bodies from the natures of the planets. We have recited this prayer in this book to turn people away from this incomprehensible working of the ancient sages. We have made this book of ours complete in all that we promised to treat in the beginning. Because this prayer is prohibited in our faith, we recite it here solely to uncover the secrets of the ancient sages, because it was made before the laws against such workings. For that reason none of the foregoing ought to be removed from this book, and even as much as I have communicated concerning this working and others has been done with good intentions. I beseech all who see and hear this book never to reveal it to the insensate. If it becomes necessary to reveal any of it, do not do so except to those of great wisdom and illuminated minds and those who lead their lives according to the commands of order. I supplicate God the Omnipotent: keep this work of ours out of the hands of the foolish, and pardon me for all that is said here, for I have said all the foregoing with good intentions.[\[286\]](#)

Chapter Nine

How to attract the powers of each planet and the powers of their spirits, naming them according to their parts, and how to accomplish this by speaking their names

The spirit of Saturn called Redimez[\[287\]](#) is coadunate with all of his names, both collectively and individually, and with his parts which are above and below and elsewhere, according to the opinion of Aristotle in the book he wrote for Alexander, which is called the Book of Antimaquis, in which he discussed the way in which the powers of the planets and their spirits ought to be attracted. And their names, listed according to Aristotle's opinion, are as follows. The name of the spirit of Saturn above is called Toz, below is called Corez, to the right Deytyz, to the left, Deriuz, before Talyz, behind Daruz; and its motion in its sphere and its progress through the signs and the motion of its spirits, all the aforesaid are united in the name Tahaytuc[\[288\]](#). All of these separate names above are united in the primary name, Redimez, and this name is the root and origin of all the names we have said.

The name of the coadunating spirit of Jupiter is Demehuz, the spirit above is Dermez, below is Matiz, to the right is Maz to the left is Deriz, in front is Tamiz, behind is Foruz and the spirit of his motion in his heaven and divided by the signs is Dehydez[\[289\]](#) and the name that is the root and origin of all is the primary name we mentioned above, that is Demehuz.

The name that coadunates the spirits of Mars is Deharayuz, the high spirit is Heheydz, the low is Heydeyuz, the right is Maharaz, the left is Ardauz, in front Hondehoyuz, behind is Meheyediz, the spirit of his motion in his heaven and his progress through the signs and the movement of his spirit is called Dehydemez.[\[290\]](#) The name that includes all of the aforesaid names, and which is the root and origin of the aforementioned, is the name named above, that is to say Deharayuz.

The name that includes all the spirits of the Sun is Beydeluz; and the name of the spirit above is Dehymeze, below Eydulez, to the right Deheyfuz, to the left, Azuhafez, before Mahabeyuz, behind Hadyz, and the spirit of his motion in his heaven, and through the signs, and of his spirit is called Letahaymeriz.[\[291\]](#) The name that includes and conjoins all of these names (and is the root and origin of the aforesaid) is the name named above, that is Beydeluz.

The name that includes all the spirits of Venus is called Deydez, her spirit above is Heyluz, below Cahyluz, to the right Diruez, to the left Ableymeze, before Teyluz, behind Arzuz, the spirit of her motion in her heaven and progress through the signs and the movement of her spirit is Dehataryz.[\[292\]](#) of equal value to all the names we have said (and it is the origin and root of all the names aforementioned) is Deydez who has been named above.

The name that includes all the spirits of Mercury, in turn, is Merhuyez, and his spirit above is Amirez, below Hytyz, to the right Cehuz, to the left Deriz, before Maylez, behind Dehedyz, the spirit in the motion of his heaven and progress through the signs is Mehendiz.[\[293\]](#) The name that includes all the names we have said (and it is the root and origin of the aforesaid) is Merhuyez named above.

The name that includes all the spirits of the Moon is Harnuz, her spirit above is Hediz, below Marayuz, to the right Meletaz, to the left Timez, before Hueyez, behind Meyneluz, and the name of her spirit in the motion of her heaven and progress through the signs is Dahanuz.[\[294\]](#) The name that joins and unites all of the names listed above (and which is the root and origin of the aforesaid) is Harnuz listed above.

Aristotle said all this in the book already mentioned, giving the aforesaid spirits the names just given, and asserting that these are spirits of the parts of the universe, there being six parts in the climes of the seven planets.[\[295\]](#) The names of these spirits are those that worshippers of the planets were accustomed to use, and which they habitually used in the prayers they prayed to the planets. You, however, ought to diligently pay attention to what was said earlier.[\[296\]](#)

Next, the philosopher said that from these spirits descend all the spiritual potencies of the same kind that come into contact with the climes and the world of generation. By praying to the aforementioned spirits, they accomplished miracles, from them, riches and poverty emanated, for they gave, took away, and changed the course of these things. They had bodies with which they were clad, and were embodied with the same. Each of them had human beings in their climes, into whom their powers and spirit flowed, and they permitted them to arrange things with these sciences and make use of things of their nature.

Thereafter the same philosopher said this: when you wish to summon any of the aforesaid planetary spirits in any clime, attend to the aforementioned fundamentals because the effect of each of the planets works most powerfully in its own clime.

The Operation of Saturn. When you wish to work with Saturn, do the following. With the Sun in Capricorn and the Moon in Sagittarius,[\[297\]](#) make an image with feet of iron, and wrap it in a garment colored green, black and red. Afterwards go into the open and go under trees that lack any odor. Make your sacrifice (namely a cow or calf) and suffumigate with a mixture of the brain of a black cat, castor, hemlock, myrrh and St John's Wort. Say: "Bedimez, Toz, Eduz, Hayz, Derniz, Tayuz, Huaruyz, Talhit, Naycahua, Huenadul,[\[298\]](#) come, you spirits, here is your offering!" Repeat your prayer continually as you suffumigate. Make your petition and it will be fulfilled. All of this has been laid by Aristotle in his book.

The Operation of Jupiter. When you wish to work by means of Jupiter, do the following in the day of Jupiter,[\[299\]](#) the Sun being in Sagittarius or Pisces and the Moon in the head of Aries (because this is the exaltation of the Sun). And prepare a clean and splendid house, with hangings and curtains and cloth goods finely decorated, so that the house may be suitable to the work. Take in your hand a dish with a mixture or compote of honey, butter, nut oil, sugar, making it smooth and moist. Then make a pastry (that is, a torte) of flour, butter, milk, sugar and the most delicate saffron, and make it as large as you can.

In the same house, put a large table in the place of honor, supported by a strong tripod. Place before it a censer composed of the metal of Jupiter.[\[300\]](#) On the table place nutmeg, camphor, lignum aloes and other good smelling things and civet and the like. Have one measure of mastic, along with the pastry you made and the mixture you made, that is, both the wet and the dry.

In the middle of the table place a large burning candle, and behind the candle place four opened pomegranates, and the cooked and roasted flesh of a ram, a chicken and a pigeon and fill the dishes full. At the head of the table put a jug full of wine and a clear vessel. Above the table place a branch of myrtle. When you have done the aforesaid, suffumigate with mastic and lignum aloes at the head of the table, and suffumigate with mastic in the other parts of the house, and no one should be in the house besides yourself.

Say the following: "Demuez, Armez, Ceylez, Mahaz, Erdaz, Tamyz, Feruz, Dyndez, Afrayuz, Tayhaciedez."[\[301\]](#) These are the all of the names of the spirits of Jupiter in six parts of Heaven. The interpretation of the name Afriduz and the others following is, "Come and enter, all you spirits of Jupiter, and smell the perfumes and eat from this dish and do as you desire." Say the preceding seven times. Afterwards go out of your house and stand quietly for an hour.[\[302\]](#)

Then enter your house and repeat the previous prayer again. When you have done the work five times, return to the house a sixth time and make the aforementioned prayer as we have said, and then the spirits will come in beautiful forms wearing ornate garments, and they will receive your petition and that which you desire will come into being in the manner you wish, and your knowledge and understanding will be assisted and the power of the spirits will defend and protect you. When you have done everything as ordered above, call together your friends and associates and prepare food and eat and drink together and perfume with perfumes and suffumigate with suffumigations. This is the prayer of the planets that the Roman sages themselves were accustomed to make each year, and especially for Jupiter.

The Operation of Mars. When you wish to work by means of Mars, do the following in the day of Mars,[\[303\]](#) the Sun being in Aries, which is the house of Mars, and the Moon in her 23rd Mansion,[\[304\]](#) in which is the exaltation of Mars. Do this at the end of winter when the trees begin to fruit. Take with you a cow or sheep as sacrifice, and fill an incense burner with charcoal and suffumigate with myrrh, aspid seed and sarcocolla,[\[305\]](#) and provide a full dish (that is, a dish as good as you are able to make) and fill a pitcher full of wine. As we have said before, you should carry everything to a field, under a tall tree, and offer up the sacrifice in both hands, and light the fire in which the suffumigation will be burnt. Say these words: "Dahaydanuz, Hahaydiz, Hayadayuz, Mihyraz, Ardahuz, Heydaheydez, Mehenediz, Dehydemez."[\[306\]](#) This is the oration of Mars. And when you have said that, say this: "This sacrifice is yours, spirits of Mars. Accept this and consume it and do as you desire."

Afterwards take the sacrifice to another place away from the tree, and suffumigate it with the suffumigation already described, and cut off the head of your sacrifice and cut off the skin and remove the liver and roast it. Put all of it on a tray and cover it with the skin; and offer it as a sacrifice in the same place and say the prayer. Then pray in this way: "O spirits of Mars, this sacrifice is yours. Come and smell this suffumigation, and do as you will with this sacrifice and food." Then a red spirit like the flame of a fire will descend, and he will go to the food and consume a portion of it with fire.

As soon as you see the spirit, ask for what you wish and you will be assisted in all of your works. When the flames are gone, take the aforementioned food and eat as much as you are able, similarly drink as much wine as you can, and ask whatever you wish of the petitions pertaining to Mars. You should know that Mars is a diverse planet that is strong in its nature, and does not receive or respond to petitions every time. Therefore when doing the magical works of Mars, even when the aforesaid events do not happen, by no means despair. As soon as you have carefully done the aforesaid, return to your own house.

The Operation of the Sun. When you wish to do the magical work of the Sun, do it on a Sunday, the Sun being in Leo and the Moon in the 15th or 19th degree of Aries. [307] Prepare an appropriate house that is clean and bright, and ornament it with the costliest cloth you have. Place in it seven golden images, and if you are not able to make them of gold, then you may use wood. If they are made of gold, put jewelry of red jacinths and pearls on them, and if the images are made of wood, wrap them in clothing of red silk and put on them jewels of gold and red jacinth. Place the images in the middle of the house, and before whichever image you please, place a table.

Place on the table, wherever you like, pastries made from wheat flour that has both wet and dry portions, and somewhere in the middle of them place a pitcher of wine, and around the table, vessels with many different types of pleasant smelling things such as nutmeg, camphor and amber, and place myrtle in the house. Afterwards light a large wax candle, and place it on something high that will place it before the images, and say: "Tebdeluz, Dihymez, Andulez, Dehycayz, Aginafez, Mahagnuz, Ahadyz, Tuymeryz." [308] And when the aforesaid has been spoken, make your petition for what you propose to ask for. When this is done, call together some of your friends and acquaintances and eat the food and drink the wine. Afterwards they should leave the house, because then you can petition the spirits of the Sun and they will hear you clearly.

The Operation of Venus. When you wish to do the magical works of Venus, do it in the day of Venus, the Sun being in the beginning of Pisces and the Moon in Cancer. Clean yourself and bathe, and when you are cleaned and bathed, go to where there are figs or palms and take with you a ram. Say, "Hueydez, Helyz, Hemyluz, Deneriz, Temeyz, Cempluz, Arhuz, Meytaryz." [309] When you have said this, ask for what you wish. But beware that you do not ask for something attributed by nature to another planet.

The Operation of Mercury. When you wish to do the magical works of Mercury, work in the day of Mercury, with the Sun in Capricorn, because the year of the Chaldeans begins then. Sit in a gold throne in an empty house, and suffumigate yourself with lignum aloes, incense, myrrh, hemlock and elecampane. Put a golden table before you, and around it place seven male goats, which you shall discipline with a wooden rod so that they cry out.

As the smoke of the suffumigation rises, say: "Barhurez, Emirez, Haytiz, Cociz, Deriz, Heniz, Deheriz, Zahudaz." [310] And when the aforesaid has been said, cut the heads off the goats, skin them and cut them apart and place them around the table, while continue to suffumigate with the suffumigation. When this has been done, cover your entire face except for your eyes, and continue to suffumigate. Afterwards go out from that house and carry all of the meat you have cut, and cook it with chickweed and vinegar, and get bread made with wheat flour. When this is done, put everything in a basket and save the best of it. Ask for appropriate things in your petition to Mercury.

The Operation of the Moon. When you wish to do the magical works of the Moon, do so when the Sun is in Cancer and the Moon in Aries, which is the exaltation of the Sun, and do the work in the night of the Moon (that is, on Sunday, when the day has ended)[\[311\]](#). When the Sun sets, go to a field. Then wash and clean yourself very well, and take a ram and a suffumigation of frankincense, hemlock, elecampane, myrrh and lignum aloes mixed together. Your friends and associates should go with you, and some of them should lead the aforesaid ram and bring the suffumigation, and they should likewise bring food in baskets. When this is done, they should light a large fire of wood, and put the baskets of food around the hearth.

One of them who is taking part in your petition should rise up, and find a place by some spring of water, with a fig tree before it and nearby the ram that he has led there. He should put the suffumigation, which he has brought with him, into a fire. He then says: "Hedyuz, Denediz, Mubrynayz, Miltaz, Tymez, Rabyz, Celuz, Deheniz, Merniz."[\[312\]](#) When he has said this, cut off the head of the ram. Then your associate who led the ram should go away, because if anyone approaches you, you must kill them, cutting off their heads, saying the same words one at a time, and suffumigating with the suffumigation.[\[313\]](#)

When this is done, you should leave, and go back to where the fire is burning. Then you and all your friends may return to the place where the ram was killed, and skin it, and take its skin, head, feet, and entrails to a clean place, where no other animal can eat any of the aforesaid parts, and bury them. Roast the ram, and when it is well roasted, put it amidst the circle of baskets of food around the hearth. When dawn is near, put out many-colored cloths under the fig tree, and when this is done suffumigate with the aforesaid suffumigation. And say the oration of the spirits and ask for your petition, and all of it will be fulfilled.

Chapter Ten

A demonstration of the confections of planetary spirits, and preventing dangers from ceremonies and effects, and of the wonders of magic, and of the food, suffumigations, unguents, and odors that one who invokes planetary spirits ought to use; and the proper effects, and works that are not done except in appearance

Aristotle, in the Book of Antimaquis already mentioned, which he composed for King Alexander, recounted the confection of four stones, which have miraculous spiritual powers and effects.

The first of these is named Rayetanz. Whoever carries this stone with him in a battlemented ring[\[314\]](#) will receive the humble obedience of men and of every other living thing possessing a spirit; and if he seals any letter with this stone and sends it to any kings or any other men, when it is seen by them, at once they will tremble and obey it, and unfailingly accomplish whatever the letter requests. It will also make men perverse if it is transmitted in the same way as given above.

This stone is red in color, and its composition is as follows. Take three ounces of rubies; grind them and cover them with 1/2 ounce of diamonds, one ounce each of lead filings and magnesia, 1/2 ounce sulfur, and two ounces of gold. Let all the aforesaid be mixed in a crucible and put on a gentle fire, increasing it little by little until all the aforesaid ingredients fuse, for the rubies will be melted by virtue of the diamond, the diamond by virtue of the magnesia, and the magnesia by virtue of the sulfur, and gold also fuses with them. When they are well blended, take the crucible off the fire and allow it to cool. You will find one body, completely blended, and of a turbid color; then leave it.

Then take equal parts lion brains, leopard fat, and wolf blood. Liquefy the fat, and mix it with the brains; then pour the blood into it, and it will take on a spotted color. Be careful that you do not touch it with your hands, nor get your clothing near it, and keep your face turned away from its odor, for it is a deadly poison in all its qualities, from the specific form according to the opinion of Cetras, who saw it in a dream. When it is still, take it off the fire.

Then take burnt copper, crocus, and yellow and red sulfur, ten ounces each. Let then be pulverized and cleaned, and then add them to the foregoing poison. At once its harmfulness will be broken, and the whole of it will be liquefied. When it is all melted and mixed together, put it in a jug or small vessel, which should be sealed up with alchemists' luting;[\[315\]](#) and put it on a gentle fire. When all of it has melted like wax, take it off the fire and allow it to cool. Then melt the first body, which should be combined with its spirit[\[316\]](#) little by little, until it is all blended and becomes one body. From it, make round pebbles of the desired size on a lathe, for Aristotle said the following to Alexander: O Alexander, know that this is a miraculous body that conquers everything.

The second stone is named Helemetiz. This stone is to be made against rain, hail, and snow; for when any of these is about to fall, raise this stone upon your right hand, and you will be safe from them. This stone is spotted in color, and it is made in the following way. Take four ounces of hellebore and melt it with white soapwort on the fire. When it is melted, put four ounces of silver and four ounces of lead into it. When all this is melted together, take it off the fire and work with the spirit of the work.

Take bones from the forefeet and hind feet of a pig, which have been well cleaned of flesh and tendons, and cook them well in salt water; when they are well cooked, take them off the fire and dry them to remove the water. Pulverize them and put them in an earthen vessel with equal parts of mandrake and lime, sealed up well with alchemists' luting and properly arranged, that is, in the vessel put down a layer of mandrake and lime, then on top of it a layer of powdered bone, and so successively until the vessel is full. Melt all this by cooking it for one night on a fire of manure. Then remove the aforesaid vessel from the fire, and allow it to cool. Powder the contents and add to them a little clear red copper. Then grind them again, sprinkling them with human blood from a vein, and let it be ground for an entire day; and save it for use.

When you have finished, melt the first body, and add to it this second body a little at a time, until the two are fully blended into one another. When this is done, take it off the fire, and let it cool, and you will find its color to be spotted. This stone may then be worked on a lathe to the desired size in a spherical form. Thereafter you should labor at this work with the words and ceremonies that we have given already in the ritual of Perfect Nature. When you see rain, snow, hail, and thunder in any place, and you wish to send it away from yourself and the place where it is, say the words we have said before, and raise your right hand, holding that stone, toward the sky; and all the aforesaid will be stilled. This stone is composed of the powers and spirits of spiritual things.

The third stone is named Astamatis. Aristotle says that this stone is one of the wonders of the world, for whoever carries it with him in a fight or battle will remain safe from harm from enemies, and from their offensive weapons, not only himself, but also his companions. The composition of this stone is as follows.

Take ten ounces of iron melted in sulfur, and melt it in the fire, and into the sulfur put white magnesia stone and borax, all well powdered, until they are all blended into one. First it will appear yellow, then white like silver, but even more beautiful, and its body will be soft. After this take pork fat and pig brains in equal amounts. Melt them together, mix with the blood of a black crow, and let it cool, so that it coagulates by the normal way of coagulation. Then take four ounces of magnesia stone, 1/2 ounce of burnt diamond, two ounces of clear red copper, and four ounces of yellow sulfur; grind them all together into powder, and put the powder on the aforementioned coagulated body.

Let it all be put into an earthenware vessel of appropriate size, and sealed well with alchemist's luting. Thus prepared, let it be put on the fire and completely melted like wax. Then take it from the fire, and allow it to cool. It will coagulate, and take on the form of a stone; set this aside. Then take ten ounces of iron processed in the way already mentioned, and one ounce each of gold, silver, and copper. Put them on the fire and melt them until they are well mixed. When this is done, cast the other body you have already made onto it, little by little, until they are entirely blended; and let it be purified by fire. The moisture of the bodies will be removed, and then will be united with one another and will be made very slippery.

When you see that this has happened, remove it from the fire and allow it to cool. You will find that the bodies have united into one and become a little soft. You may work this on a lathe, and make round stones of any desired size, and you should work on them for three days with the words we have already mentioned. You should always keep this stone with you and carry it during war, and you will be preserved against all the iron weapons of your enemies, you and all that accompany you, while you have the aforesaid stone with you.

The fourth stone is called Handemotuz. Aristotle said that this stone exists to awaken the love of women, and is composed so that by it, for example, soldiers and warriors who ought to be engaging in battle will seek to mingle with women instead, so their bodies may be made weaker, and that in consequence they will be more easily vanquished. This stone is white in color. It is compounded in this way.

Take ten ounces of lead, one ounce each of copper and iron melted with sulfur, and 1/2 ounce of silver. Melt the copper, iron, and silver all together, then put in the lead. When all this is blended together, take 1/2 ounce each of magnesia, diamond, and yellow sulfur, and two ounces of red copper. Powder them all, and add the powder to the melted substances until all has been absorbed. Then take this off the fire, and set it aside.

Then make the spirit in this way. Take equal parts of gazelle fat and the brains and marrow of a horse. Melt the fat and mix it with the brains and marrow, and then put sparrow blood in it until it coagulates. Then take one ounce of pig bones, and powder it with a little of the best borax, 1/2 ounce of magnesia, one ounce of yellow sulfur, and 1 1/2 ounces of red copper, and mix them together into a mass, and add it to the aforesaid marrow and fat. Put it on the fire until all of it has melted together. Then take it off the fire and allow it to cool.

When it has cooled, take the body you made first, and melt it on the fire. Put the medicine into it little by little until all has been absorbed, and all of it begins to simmer. Then take it off the fire and let it cool, and it will become a stone, which you may make spherical and equal on a lathe. Then work for three days using the words we have already mentioned. Then make two images of copper, one in the shape of a man and the other in that of a woman, and put the stone in the male image. Let these

Take an iron needle, and say over it the words we have already given. When this is done, thrust it into the chest of the female image until the image is entirely pierced through to the back, and let it be pressed into the male image so that the two images are pinned together. Put the images prepared in this way into a tightly closed iron box, and over it, day and night, say the words we have given above. Keep it with you, for you and all your associates will thus be completely free of any desire for women.

Aristotle relates all of the foregoing in the aforementioned Book of Antimaquis. The mixtures of which all these stones are made are deadly poisons, and whoever makes these stones must carefully avoid touching or smelling them. The remedy for this poison, by which these things may be done without fear, is made in this way. Take two ounces each of aloes wood, myrtle seed, mandrake seed, and centaury seed, 1/2 ounce nutmeg, and one ounce each of chaste tree, cleaned raisins, and white sandalwood. Mix them together and pulverize them well, and blend them with the juice of myrtles, and make them into pills, which you should allow to dry. Whenever you wish to compound the aforementioned stones, which are deadly poisons, take these pills and put them in your nostrils, ears, and mouth, and cover your entire face with a cloth while the foregoing are powdered and worked.

You will also need another remedy for the preservation of your hands, which is this. Take equal parts of laurel seeds and the kernel of basil seeds, and four parts each of balsam and rabbit's blood. Grind what can be ground, and mix this with the balsam and rabbit's blood. You should have this medicine with you in all the foregoing operations, and wash your hands in it while working, and you will be able to work safely and without danger.

In the aforementioned book, Aristotle also says that spirits sometimes attack the workmen who perform the foregoing, destroying their natures. If you wish to free them from this infirmity so that their natures may be brought back to their proper quality, give them the following medicine to drink. Take 1/2 ounce of human blood, and mix it with four ounces of oil of bitter almonds and two ounces of rabbit brains or marrow, and let these be mixed with one ounce of donkey's urine. Combine the foregoing; and once each day, on an empty stomach, for nine days, give this in a drink to the patient. By this medicine they will be cured, and their nature rectified, and evil planetary spirits of every kind driven away from them, so that their natural complexion may be restored to lasting strength.[\[317\]](#)

Again, in the book named Malatiz, Aristotle says the following. When Alexander inquired of Caynez, a sage of India and a master of marvels in this art, he composed this book Malatiz out of the knowledge of Caynez himself, in which he recounted the wonders done by this Caynez, who was considered a spirit in human form, and who lived for 840 years. This was in the time of King Aydeneruz, who was a mighty man and a murderer. This sage made great marvels from composites of the greater and lesser worlds, and his words were composed by the spirits that are in the composite world.[\[318\]](#) He controlled the will of the aforementioned king and of any other kings that he wished. He also used to make marvels and diverse prayers, which I will relate presently.

For acquiring the love of a woman. This confection he called Deytuz, and its composition is as follows. Take 1/2 ounce each of gazelle marrow and beef fat. Melt them together, and add 1/2 ounce each of camphor and rabbit brain. Let all these be put into an iron vessel for the aforesaid melting, and add the powdered camphor last. When it is all mixed together, take it off the fire. Then make an image out of virgin wax, which has not been used for any other purpose, and have in mind the woman whom you desire.

In the mouth of that image make an opening that penetrates to the belly of the image, by which the melted medicine above may be poured into the belly of the image. While pouring it, say: "Dahyeliz, Hanimidiz, Naffayz, Dabraylez."[\[319\]](#) Then put into its mouth two ounces of fine sugar.

Next, take a fine silver needle and insert it into the chest of that image until it comes out the back. While you place the needle in this manner, say: "Hedurez, Tameruz, Hetaytoz, Femurez."[\[320\]](#) When this is finished, wrap the image in a white cloth, and over this put another silk cloth, white in color, and prepare a silk thread, and tie this tightly under the chest of the image, and let the two ends of the thread be joined together and knotted with seven knots. Over each of the knots say these words: "Hayranuz, Hedefiuz, Faytamurez, Arminez."[\[321\]](#)

Then put the image in a little clay pot, which you should seal up with alchemist's luting. Make a pit in the house where the person lives against whom, or at the request of whom, this working is performed, that is, in whichever house or place is suitable. Bury the image there, head up, and cover it with earth. Then take two ounces each of incense and galbanum,[\[322\]](#) and cast it on the fire. While the smoke rises, say: "Beheymerez, Aumauliz, Menemeyduz, Caynaurez."[\[323\]](#) I move the spirit of this woman N. and her will toward this man N. by virtue of the spirits I have named, and by the virtue and power of the spirits Beheydras, Methurez, Auleyez, Nanitaynuz."[\[324\]](#)

When you have done the foregoing, return to the house. You should know that all the spirit and will of the woman against whom this working is done will be moved toward the man for whose sake the work is done, nor will she be able to rest or sleep or do anything else until she obeys the man for whom such a working has been done, and this is by virtue of the spirits of the foregoing image. This woman will be led to the house where the image is buried by the aforesaid virtue.

Another confection for the same purpose, to be given in food. Take two ounces each of rabbit rennet[325] and wolf brains, three grains of melted beef fat, two grains each of amber and nutmeg, three grains of camphor, two ounces of the blood of that person who is the agent (that is, for whom the working is done). Put this blood in an iron vessel on the fire to heat. When it is hot, add the other medicines to it, and mix them all. Then remove it from the fire, and mix it with wine or honey or with a dish of meat or fowl or any other dish you wish.

While you do the foregoing, keep your mind intently on the woman for whom you are doing it. Then take a little incense and an equal amount of galbanum, and cast them into fire. While the smoke rises, say: "Ye Deyluz., Menydez, Catrudiz, Mebduliz, Huenehenilez.[326] I move the spirit and will of this woman N. by virtue of these spirits and this composition, and I move her spirit and will by a restless motion whether in waking or sleeping, in walking, standing, or sitting. Nor shall she have any rest until she obeys these spirits whom I name: Hueyheyulyez, Heyediz, Cayimuz, Hendeliz." [327] When you have done the foregoing in the manner specified, give all of the food to eat to whomever you wish, so that nothing remains of it. When the aforesaid medicine reposes in her stomach, she will not be able to be still, rather, she will be moved with a strong motion, and she will come obediently to the place of your choosing.

If it should happen, because of some difficult, that there is no way for you to give this to the woman in food or drink, take the confection as prepared above, and in place of the blood mentioned above, use the blood of the one against whom you operate. Mix it all together very well. Put it into food or drink as before, and put it into a jug with your own hands.

Take two ounces each of incense and galbanum, and suffumigate with them. While the smoke rises, say: "Adyeruz, Metayruz, Beryudez, Fardaruz.[328] I move the spirit and will of this woman N. toward this man N., and by all spirits and wills and hearts I move her so that she cannot be quiet or calm in waking or sleeping, speaking, sitting, or standing, until she is obedient to N. and fulfills his desire completely. I attract the spirit of her heart and move her toward this man N. by virtue of these spirits: Vemedeyz, Audurez, Meyurneyz, Sandaruz." [329]

After this, give the aforementioned to be eaten by the one for whom this working is done. When he has eaten it and it has descended into his stomach, instruct him to take two ounces each of incense and galbanum in his hand and cast then upon fire, and suffumigate with them. While the smoke rises, have him say these names: Hamurez, Heydurehiz, Heldemiz, Hermeniz.[330] When he has said these, tell him to say: "By these names let the will of the one for whom this operation is done be attracted. Let her come to me with great love and obedience so that my will and command shall be fulfilled."

The same sage says further that if you are unable to get the blood of the woman, take two ounces each of wolf's blood and cow's blood, and mix them in an iron vessel upon the fire, as we have described above. Put into it two grains of rabbit marrow, three grains of wolf's marrow, and four grains of beef fat, all melted and mixed together. Add two grains each of nutmeg, camphor, and rabbit rennet, and when all this has melted, mix it well and take it off the fire. Give this mixed into drink or food. Then suffumigate with incense and galbanum.

While the smoke rises, say these words: "Animurez, Maphueluz, Fenuz, Fadrulez. [\[331\]](#) I move the heart, spirit, and mind of this woman N. toward this man N., and I move her spirit, forbidding her to sleep so that she cannot have any rest in waking, sleeping, staying, going, or arising. I move her spirit and will and lead her to N. by virtue of the spirits written hereunder: Hueytayroz, Beryenuz, Aunuhiz, Andulez." [\[332\]](#) When you have done, this, give it to eat to whomever you wish. When it is in his stomach, take two ounces each of incense and galbanum and hair from a wolf's tail, with which you should suffumigate the man who ate the foregoing, saying these names written below, which I will teach you: Heyudez. Maherimeyz, Taydurez, Umeyruz. [\[333\]](#) When you have done this, know that the spirit and nature of the woman toward whom this operation is done will be moved with a great love for that man, and her desires likewise; and she will not be able to find rest in anything until she has come with a humble attitude toward that man.

Another confection, that is, a suffumigation for love. Take two ounces each of wolf vulva and rabbit penis, one ounce of the eyes of white mice, two ounces each of the fat of a white dog, incense, and galbanum; and beef fat of a weight equal to all the foregoing, melted in an iron vessel; put into this all the foregoing ingredients. When they are all blended together, take 1/2 ounce of camphor, one ounce each of white sandalwood and aloes wood, 1/2 ounce of amber, and 1/4 ounce of nutmeg. Powder them and add them to the aforementioned confection, and blend well together. When this is done, let it be divided into seven equal parts. Take seven thuribles full of burning coals, which you should set in front of you in a straight line, and in each of them put a seventh part of the confection you made as just described. While the smoke rises from the thuribles, say: "Ahayuaraz, Yetaydez, Ahariz, Aharyulez. [\[334\]](#) I move the heart, spirit, and nature of this woman N. toward this man N., forbidding her any rest or sleep, and that she shall have no peace in sleeping, waking, or sitting, or in any other action, until she comes to him obediently to obey his pleasure and command. I attract and draw her spirit toward him by virtue of these spiritual spirits: [\[335\]](#) Alhueriz, Heyemiz, Huetudiz, Taudiz." [\[336\]](#) When you have done this, return to your home. The aforesaid woman will come there, and will be obedient to his good pleasure and command.

Again, another for the same purpose, to be smelled. Take two grains of rabbit rennet, and one grain of a male goat's liver, and add powdered incense. Put it on the fire, and let it roast until all its moisture has left it entirely. Then take it with iron tongs, and cut it to small pieces with a knife, and let it be pressed in a pot until all the water leaves it; this water should be set aside in a glass vessel. When you wish to work with the foregoing, take two grains of the aforesaid water, three grains of nutmeg, and four grains of amber. Put all these on a charcoal fire in an iron vessel until it is all melted and blended together. Add to it a single grain of the confection from the glass vessel, and then melt until it is entirely blended and mixed together; then take it from the fire and put it again in a glass vessel. When you wish to work with it, take one ounce of fine and very pure oil of amber, which you should put on the fire in an iron vessel, and add a single grain of the confection from the glass vessel, which you should melt until it is entirely blended and mixed together.[\[337\]](#)

When this is done, take two ounces each of incense and galbanum, and suffumigate with them. As the smoke rises, say: "Yetayroz, Maharahetym, Faytoliz, Andoraruz.[\[338\]](#) I move the heart of this woman N., her spirit and her will toward this man N., and I move the spirit of her heart toward him with love and desire, forbidding her sleep, rest, and tranquility, so that she will not have any peace in sleeping, waking, rising, or sitting. I attract and draw her spirit and will toward him by virtue of these spiritual spirits: Hueyquitayroz, Hedilez, Menueriz, Meyefurez."[\[339\]](#) When you have said the foregoing, take the aforementioned oil, and (if you can) anoint with it the woman for whom the aforesaid working is done. If you cannot do this, put it on something from which its odor shall arise, so that she for whom the working is done will smell it. At once, when she is anointed by this or smells it, her spirit and will by a strong motion will be moved with a strong love and desire toward the man for whose benefit this working was done, and she will have no peace either sleeping or waking or resting in anything until she comes to him, obedient and tame.

If it so happens that you cannot give this to her by means of its odor, make an image of wax formed in her likeness, which you should give to the man, so that he may hold it in his hands. Suffumigate it with incense and galbanum for three days successively, that is, at the rising of the Sun, repeating the words given above and suffumigating with the suffumigation, and anoint yourself with the oil mentioned above. When you have done everything in this manner, her spirit and will will be moved toward him with love.

If you wish to do the foregoing in another way, take myrtle branches or those of another sweet-smelling tree such as apple, and anoint them with two grains of the aforementioned compounded medicine. Suffumigate them with incense and galbanum. While you suffumigate, say these words: "Neforuz, Hemiruliz, Armulez, Feymeriz."[\[340\]](#) I move the heart of this woman N. and her spirit and will toward this man N., and I move her spirit and nature toward him in love and desire. I take away from her sleep, waking, and rest in sleeping, waking, rising, and sitting. I draw and lead her by virtue of these spiritual spirits: Venehulez, Mantayriz, Feymulez, Berhunez."[\[341\]](#) Then make whoever you wish (that is, the woman for whom the working is done) smell the odor. When she smells it, her spirit and will at once will be moved by a strong motion and great love and desire, so that she will be unable to be still or to rest in any way until she comes obediently to the place of the querent and fulfills all his desires.

If you are not able to do this by means of odor, however, make a wax image as we said above. Let the agent (that is, he who commanded that this working be done) take the image into his hands, and take two ounces each of incense and galbanum, which he should cast onto the fire with his own hands. Then instruct him to say the words: Heydinez, Beyduriz, Affihuz, Deriyenuz."[\[342\]](#) When he smells the oil, at that instant the work is completed. At once the spirit and will of the woman for whom the aforementioned work has been done, as well as her heart, will be moved by a strong motion in great love and desire, and she will not be able to rest in any manner of quiet or tranquility until she comes obediently to the querents desire, ready and able to fulfill his every wish.

These four images, composed as we have said, are called Decaytus; they are those that Caynez the sage recounted for the union of man and woman.

For acquiring the love of a king. When you wish to attract the love of a king and his beneficence toward the people, take virgin wax that has not been used for any other purpose, and from it make an image of the king whose disposition you wish to influence as just said. Then take 1/2 ounce of gazelle brains, one ounce of rabbit brains, and two ounces of human blood; mix them together in an iron vessel, and let them be put on the fire until they are all mixed. To that mixture add one ounce each of powdered camphor and amber, and 1/2 ounce nutmeg, adding these to the first medicine. Leave it until all is melted and blended together. Then make a single opening in the head of the image, by which you pour the medicine into the belly of the image, and then seal up the opening well with wax.

Then take four ounces each of human blood, the blood of a white rooster, and horse brains, 1/2 ounce each of nutmeg and camphor, and two ounces of melted beef fat. Let these be combined and held over the fire. Make an opening in the throat of the image, pour the mixture into it, and let it cool; then close the opening with wax.

Next take a fine silver needle that is new and has never been used for any other purpose, and thrust it through the chest of the image so that it does not pass into any other part of the image. While you do this, say: "Acriuz, Fendeyuz, Nephalez, Feyeduz."[\[343\]](#) Then put the image in an earthenware vessel and seal it with luting.

Then take one ounce each of incense, powdered galbanum, and the eyes of white roosters, and mix them together. Take the image and the aforesaid suffumigation and a thurible, and climb a high mountain, from which you can see the king's city; make a pit there the size of the image, and bury it there head downward. On the mouth of the pot or vessel put a stone or tile, and put earth upon it until it is entirely covered. When this is done, put the suffumigation onto the fire, and while the smoke rises, say: "Acderuz, Madurez, Feyleuz, Hueryreliz."[\[344\]](#) Then say: "I turn the heart of this king N. with love, friendship, goodwill, and mercy toward this man N. and this people N., by the virtue and power of these spiritual spirits: Hueyfeduez, Affimuz, Beefinez, Medariuz."[\[345\]](#) Know that the king will delight in that man or that people, and grant to them his favor.

For generating enmities. He says: a confection to generate enmities, which is given in food, and it is this.

Take 1/2 ounce each of the bile of a black cat and the brains of a pig, two ounces of the fat of a black dog, and two grains of sweet myrrh.[\[346\]](#) When this confection is eaten it attracts spirits of enmity and ill will.

For the same. Take two ounces of the brains of a black cat, one ounce each of pig's bile and brains, and 1/2 ounce each of the penis of a black dog, sweet myrrh, and ammoniac. From all these things blended together, make a suffumigation, and it will be as above.

For the same. Take three grains of black dog's bile; two ounces each of pig's brains, black cat's bile, pig grease, sulfur, sweet myrrh, black cat's eyes, and oil of caubac; two grains of copper, four ounces of the brains of a black dog, and one ounce of hair from its tail. If you make a suffumigation from all this mixed together, it will generate ill will and enmity. A certain sage worked with all these confections, and asserted that he found them to be true.

That a man may have no desire for women. When you want to do this, take 1/2 ounce each of the brains of a black cat and mandrake seeds. Mix these two together and blend well. Then make an image of wax, and make a hole in the top of his head, into which you pour the confection. Then take an iron needle, and into the image (that is, in the place where delight in women is) thrust the needle.

Then take four ounces of pig's blood; two ounces each of rabbit rennet and swallow brains; and one pound each cow's milk and myrtle juice. Mix all these together, and when you wish to take away someone's desire for women, give him this to drink, and suffumigate him with incense and galbanum mixed together, and it will happen as you desire.

Chapter Eleven

The effects of magical images in diverse things, as well as in alterations of sight, so that things are seen other than as they are; and causing sleep and waking, and making poisons and their remedies

I have found the following confections in books written by those who were wise in this science, none of which are mentioned by the aforesaid Caynez. First, to bind tongues so that nothing evil is said of you.

When you wish to bind tongues so that they may speak no evil, compound the confection that follows. Take the tongues of all the following, that is: the tongue of a crow, an eagle, a toad, a water snake, a white dove, a white rooster, and a hoopoe. [347] Powder all these tongues and mix them together. Then take one grain of pearl and 1/2 ounce each of gold, silver, camphor, borax, and aloes. Powder all of these and mix them together, and add them to the powder described above, and blend the whole mass with honey. Then put it in a white silk cloth.

Then take two hairs from the eye of a hawk, two hairs from the eye of a peacock, the liver of a hoopoe, the liver of a chicken, two wing bones of a dove, and two wing bones of a hoopoe. Powder all these and blend them with milk, and put them in the aforementioned white cloth with the first mixture.

Then make an image of white wax, which you should name with your own name; write your name and the figure of the Sun on its head, and similarly on its chest write your name and the figure of the Moon. Then wrap this image in another white silk cloth, and put it in the midst of the aforementioned mixture, and tie it all up with silk thread. Whoever carries an image thus prepared with him will behold miracles, nor will anyone be able to speak ill of him, and he will be loved and valued by all.

For love. Take five ounces of gazelle brains, one ounce of leopard blood, and two ounces of rabbit rennet. Mix these together and blend well. Give this mixture in food or drink to whomever you will, and you will be loved by that person.

For the same. Take two ounces of the blood of a white dog and the same amount of its brains, and four ounces each of gazelle brains and human blood. When this is all mixed and blended, suffumigate whomever you will with it, and that person's spirit will be moved toward you in love.

For the same. Take two ounces each of the brains and blood of a white dove and the blood of an eagle, one ounce of rabbit rennet, and 1/2 ounce of hawk brains. Mix all these together and blend well. Give some of this in food to whomever you will, and you will be loved by that person.

For the same. Take one ounce each of chicken blood, leopard blood, and rabbit rennet, and two ounces of human blood. Blend all this together, and add one ounce of eyebright. Suffumigate anyone with this confection, and you will be loved by that person, whose spirit and will will be moved toward you.

For the same. Take two ounces each of sparrow blood and brains, one ounce each of mouse blood and brains, four ounces of human blood, and 1/2 ounce of eyebright. Mix them, and give in a drink to whomever you wish.

For the same. Take the brains of a black cat and human urine, in equal parts. Mix them, and give them in food to whomever you wish; and that person's spirit and will will be moved toward you in love.

For the same. Take four ounces each of the blood and brains of a red dog, two ounces each of rabbit rennet, dove blood, and chicken blood, and one ounce of eyebright. Mix all these, and suffumigate with it whomever you wish.

For the same. Take eight ounces of donkey blood, and one ounce each of fox blood and hedgehog blood. Mix these well, and to this mixture add two ounces of eyebright. Suffumigate with this whomever you wish.

For generating enmity and discord. These confections are compounded for enmity and ill will. Take four ounces of the blood of a black dog, two ounces each of pig blood and brains, and one ounce of donkey brains. Mix all this together until well blended. When you give this medicine to someone in food or drink, he will hate you.

For the same. Take four ounces each of black cat's blood and chaste tree, two ounces each of the brains and blood of a kite, and of fox blood, and four ounces of chaste tree. Powder the chaste tree, and then mix it with the others. If you suffumigate someone with this, it will expel love from him, and his will and spirit will draw back from love.

For the same. Take fox blood and ape blood, two ounces of each, and one ounce each of cat's blood, wolf's blood, ape brains, and pig brains. If you mix these together until well blended and give it to someone in food, it will do the same as above.

For the same. Take two ounces each of toad brains and crane brains, four ounces each of the blood of a red dog and the blood of a black cat; and one ounce each of pork fat and the brains of a red dog. Mix all this together and add to it four ounces of cinquefoil. With this, suffumigate the person you want to hate you.

For the same. Take four ounces each of human blood and donkey's blood, and one ounce of leopard's blood. Mix it all together, and give it in food to whomever you wish; and it will do the same as above.

For the same. Take four ounces each of the blood of a black dog and the blood of an eagle, and one ounce of donkey's blood. Heat them, and mix with two ounces of chaste tree. Make a suffumigation of this mixture for the one you want to feel hatred.

The following four suffumigations cause enmities, hatreds, and depopulations.

The first of them is this. take equal parts of blood of a black cat, brains of a red dog, and blood of a fox. Mix them together and add to them St. John's wort and chaste tree, two ounces each. Suffumigate with this whomever you wish.

The second, for the same. Take four ounces each of pig rennet, pork fat, and mouse blood, and one ounce of brains of an arrahama Mix all this, and add St. John's wort and cinquefoil in equal parts, making an amount equal to the other ingredients. Powder all together, and suffumigate whomever you wish.

The third, for the same. Take eight ounces each of crane brains and kite brains, and one ounce each of rabbit brains and blood and donkey fat. Mix together, then add an amount of chaste tree equal to the other ingredients. Whomever you suffumigate with this will become as above.

The fourth, for the same. Take one ounce each of crow's blood and vulture's blood, and four ounces each of donkey fat and blood. Mix together and add an amount of chaste tree equal to the other ingredients. Whomever you suffumigate with this will become as above.

For the same. Take four ounces of black cat brains. Powder this, and mix it with an equal amount of dried and powdered human feces. Give this in food to whomever you wish, and he will hate.

Aristotle said: "Whoever truly knows and is instructed in the separations and unions of spirits and natures, and understands the ordering of the macrocosm and microcosm, will know the separations and conjunctions of all things with one another, spiritual as well as corporeal."[\[348\]](#)

Here are seven confections that are given to men in food so that they cannot perform with women. The first is this. Take two ounces each of horse brains, pig fat, and black cat's blood. Mix all these with one ounce of powdered colocynth, and give a little of this mixture in food to whomever you wish.

The second, for the same. Take horse brains, pig fat, and wolf's blood in equal parts. Give half a dram in food to whomever you wish, and it will be as said above.

The third, for the same. Take ape blood and brains, ostrich fat, and the eyes, horn, and tongue of deer, all in equal parts. Powder them all and mix together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The fourth, for the same. Take four ounces of donkey brains, one ounce of pork fat, and two ounces of horse blood. Mix them all, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The fifth, for the same. Take four ounces of powdered pig bones, two ounces of persimmon leaves, and two ounces each of burnt wolf hair, black cat's eyes, and donkey brains. Mix them all together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

Sixth, for the same. Take equal parts of black cat's blood and the brains of a sea cow. Mix them, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.[\[349\]](#)

Here are seven confections that will cause sleep and quiet all the spirits of the body, and it will be believed that they kill. The first of them is this. Take equal parts pig's brain and the brain of a chamois (which is an animal like a deer), and add a quantity of mandrake seed equal in weight to both. Give 1/2 ounce in food or drink to whomever you wish.

The second, for the same. Take four ounces of wild black poppy seeds, and one ounce each of fox brains, human brains, and pig bile. Mix them, and give a little in food to whomever you wish.

The third, for the same. Take equal parts human sweat and the blood of a black cat, and a quantity of mandrake seed of a weight equal to both. Mix them, and give 1/2 ounce of it in food to whomever you wish.

The fourth, for the same. Take 1/2 ounce each of pig's brains and black cat's blood. Mix them, and give in food to whomever you wish.

The fifth, for the same. Take equal parts dove brains, pig's blood, and grease from the serpent that is called the deaf adder. Mix them, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The sixth, for the same. Take four ounces of cat urine, two ounces of horse sweat, and one ounce of colocynth. Mix them all, and give 3/4 of an ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The seventh, for the same. Take equal parts of the juice of wild rue, human sweat, and pig brains. Mix them all, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish. This confection kills the virtue of the victim's spirits.

Here are ten confections that cause sleep and death. In the Book of Methedeyhoz, similarly, are found these ten confections that cause sleep and death.

The first of them is this. Take two ounces of coagulated urine of a black cat, and one ounce each of mouse brains and chamois brains. Give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The second, for the same. Take equal parts of pig brains, pit sweat, and salt of human urine. Mix together, and give in food to whomever you wish.

The third, for the same. Take two ounces each of ape grease, dog brains, and blood of a racan or lagarius (which is a large green lizard). Mix together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The fourth, for the same. Take equal parts donkey brains and human sweat. Mix together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The fifth, for the same. Take human sperm and gazelle brains in equal parts, and animal sweat of a weight equal to both. Mix together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The sixth, for the same. Take human sweat and gazelle brains in equal parts. Mix together, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The seventh, for the same. Take black cat brains, bat brains, and wolf grease in equal parts. Mix together, and give one ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The eighth, for the same. Take equal parts mouse brains and black crow's blood, and 1/2 part colocynth. Mix together, and give one ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The ninth, for the same. Take two ounces each of bear's bile and brain, and one ounce each mouse blood and black cat grease. Mix together, and give one ounce in food to whomever you wish.

The tenth, for the same. Take equal parts ape brains and human brains. Mix together, and give one ounce in food to whomever you wish.

These ten confections just mentioned have virtues and powers from the planets and fixed stars, by means of the virtues of the things of which they re composed, from which, by a certain mixture, a spiritual power results. The foregoing are found in the book that is named Hedeytoz,[\[350\]](#) which was compiled by Hermes the sage.

In this book he described a form of composition that causes wonders, and repels all witchcraft[\[351\]](#) from men, that is, from those who carry this confection with them.

Against witchcrafts and enchantments of men. Take the spine and head of a frog, and grind them together. Put them in a silk cloth with one ounce each peony, barberry [aloaxac?] and donkey brains. Let whoever fears witchcraft carry this with him, and he will be safe from it. This confection was made by Galienus for a certain king who reigned in his time.

Wonders which are made with things belonging to the human body. In the aforementioned book, the same sage said that in the human body are many wonders of the works of magic, when one works with them as the sages who discovered this science used to do. Among them, Hermes wrote of a marvelous confection which displays many wonders, and which is made as follows. He used to take an intact human head, freshly killed, and put it into a large jug. With it he put eight ounces of fresh opium and enough human blood and sesame oil, in equal parts, to cover the aforementioned head; he then sealed the jar tightly with luting, and put it on a mild charcoal fire for 24 hours without interruption. Then he took it from the fire and let it cool. He strained the foregoing, keeping his face covered, and found that it had all melted to the similitude of oil, which he set aside.

He said that there were many marvels in that oil, and the first is that it allows you to see whatever you want to see. If you light a lamp with the foregoing oil, or anoint someone with it, or give a little of it in food to someone, you will see whatever you

To appear in the form of whatever animal you wish. Take the head of the animal and its grease, and scialta nuts, using as many of these latter as you wish. Cover them with oil in a jug, and put on a gentle fire for a day and a night, until all the oil flows from them. When it has cooled, strain it well. If you light a lamp with this and anoint someone's face with it, he will appear in the form of that animal standing upright. This may be done with the heads of diverse animals, and in the same way he will appear as diverse animals.

For taking away sense and thought. Take the head of a man, freshly cut off, and put it in a large pot; and put his spleen., heart, and liver with it. Then in the same pot put the heads of the following animals, that is, of a cat, a fox, an ape, a chicken, a hoopoe, a crow, a kite, a bat, a goose, a swallow, a tortoise, and an owl. Cover them all with oil, and seal the mouth of the jar well with luting; put it on a gentle fire, and let it remain there for three days and as many nights. Then take it off the fire, and let it cool. Strain the foregoing with your face covered, and set aside the oil.

Then take the bones of the aforementioned heads, and burn them in a different oil until they are reduced to powder. Mix the powder with black henbane seeds and scialte nuts, and keep this with you for use. When you wish to work with the foregoing, give some of the powder to whomever you wish, in food or drink, and light three lamps with the oil; you will see it affect him. To make your body appear wondrous, take some of the aforesaid oil and anoint your face with it. You will begin to illuminate the house by its light, and will appear to stand out as though you were something monstrous.

For sending away sense and memory. Take two ounces each of hawk brains, mouse brains, and cat brains, and 1/2 ounce each of sulfur and myrrh. Mix it all and leave it to putrefy.[\[352\]](#) When you wish to use it, take 1/2 ounce of it and an equal amount of crane feces. Mix them together, and cast them onto the fire so that smoke rises from it. Whoever breathes that smoke through his nostrils will be possessed by a demon, and will lose his senses and memory, and will not be able to tell in what place he is.

Many other marvels that are made from the human body. In a certain book published by Geber the sage, I found many marvels that are made from the human body. He says this: I, Geber, have seen that the elements accomplish your labors when they are combined; alone, they accomplish nothing, because their existence remains in themselves. When they are conjoined with one another so that all four are united, I have seen that they create and give birth, grow and live. When one of the four is lacking, however, I have seen that they cause death, withering, and corruption. I begin with man, and first with the head.

I say that the human brain heals those who have lost their memory, if they eat his brain.

Burnt skull bone, drunk with syrup of squill for nine days, heals epileptics.

Whoever carries a human eye together with a wolf eye cannot be hindered by the evil eye or by any wicked tongue.

Human hair, burnt, powdered, and mixed with laudanum, warms the head.

The saliva of a young man heals scabies if frequently moistened with it.

If the saliva of a young man or woman is put on the head or mouth of a snake, the snake will swiftly die.

The tongue of a woman helps those who wish to tell lies and compose incantations.

If you wish to steal or carry off something, carry with you the tongues of a man and a kite.

Water of blood imbibed in sublimated azernece makes the azernece enter into copper that is melted in the fire.[\[353\]](#)

Ear wax makes the Sun and Moon swiftly melt or solidify, and with it one may make them solid as quickly as with borax.[\[354\]](#)

Soup made from a human head drunk mixed with brains heals those who have lost their minds.

Shave your fingernails and toenails with a knife of red copper when the Moon is in conjunction with Jupiter, and burn them when she is in conjunction with the Sun; take powder made from the ashes, and give it in a drink to whomever you wish, or sprinkle it on his clothing; he will delight in you.

So that new leprosy or scabies, which is a kind of leprosy, will not increase, give the patient in food a powder made from the burnt end of a human penis, and it will spread no further.

Human urine burns every place where it goes. If someone has scabies, wash him with it, and he will quickly be healed.

Human feces dried in the sun, powdered, and put into gold in which there is iron corrodes the iron and destroys it, and cleanses the gold.

Oil of feces softens the Sun and Moon and improves their color.[\[355\]](#)

Whoever has a deadly illness in his thighs, let him wash his thighs in water of feces that has been distilled three times, and put powdered, calcinated feces on it, and he will quickly be healed.[\[356\]](#)

One who suffers from an acute fever should wash his head with water of human blood, and he will be healed.

When a wound is washed with water of blood, and the calx of the same blood is put on the wound, it will be cured.[\[357\]](#)

All combustion, whether of fire or burning water, if first washed with water of feces, and then treated by applying a powder of calcined blood, will be healed.[\[358\]](#)

If you see a sick person who cannot be healed by any medicine, wash him with water of blood, and his condition will improve.

Whoever has great internal dryness in his body, give him water of blood to drink, and he will be healed.

If someone suffers from diarrhea, give him droplets of blood to drink, and he will be healed.

If someone has a quartan fever, take a human arm bone and the topmost wing bone of a goose, and have him carry them with him; he will be healed.[\[359\]](#)

Every man who suffers from nightmares should be washed with water of feces, and he will be healed.

Oil of feces distilled three times and imbibed with an amalgam of the Sun and green water of alfadite with dissolved cinnabar water, tinges the Moon and other metals.[\[360\]](#)

A collyrium of human bile heals weeping eyes and cataracts.[\[361\]](#)

Whoever has a cancer or a fistula should burn blood, and make a calx from it, and put the calx on the cancer or fistula; but first wash the place with distilled water of blood.

Human feces dried in the Sun are very strong and sharp, and take away rheumatism and disease from horses and other animals, and help the eyes, and take away cataracts from the eyes of beasts.

Women's menstrual blood given to a man makes him leprous, and if it is put in someone's bath, he will soon die.

The cure: take human semen, and give it to him to drink. Similarly, he will be cured if a certain herb called male barberry is given to him.

Take the membrane around the human heart, and pour into it the blood of three other men, and call upon demons; they will answer.

Take your sweat in a very clean and beautiful basin, and then put it in a glass vessel. Put into it scrapings from the soles of your feet, and a little of your feces dried in the Sun, and one root of the herb that is called fu in Arabic, and in Latin valerian. Give this in a drink to whomever you wish, and he will delight in you. I, Geber, have tested this, and it is entirely true. Women, however, add water with which they have washed their thighs, while keeping their buttocks turned toward the east.

All flesh and bone of men, when burnt, moves and provokes benevolence.

Three measures of human death, that is, you should measure a corpse three times; and with the same measure, you should measure a living man's arm from the elbow to the longest finger, and again from the shoulder to the same finger, and then from the head to the feet. He will waste away and die.

Blood taken from the fingers of the left hand when the Moon is in conjunction with the Sun, and from the other when the Moon is in conjunction with Venus, and given to someone when the Moon is in opposition to the Sun: this provokes delight. This is an experiment of the Egyptians, and I have seen it tested many times and discovered its virtue.

Water of feces and of snails dissolves tartar. Quench sheets of copper in it, and they will become white. Put feather alum and dissolved azech in it, and it will be better.

Take the skin of a woman's vulva all the way around, so that it retains its opening; and if you look at someone through it, it is the sign of death. This is a thing of great sacredness. In the same way, it causes illness. This was taken from those among the Greeks who were called Ephesians.

Skin a human penis, and tan and soften the skin with salt and wheat flour, the way belt leather is treated, you should know that you will be able to bind and loosen with it.

Human testicles, dried and powdered, and eaten with frankincense, mastic, cinnamon, and cloves, makes men young again and gives them very good color.

A human eye tied up in a snakeskin causes anyone who sees you to delight in you and not to hinder you, but to be good to you.

Whoever suffers from a fever or a headache, if you anoint his head with breast milk, the pain will be removed.

Breast milk with opium brings sleep to the feverish and insomniacs.

If you wish to go safely on a journey, make one pill from your semen and your ear wax, and suspend it from your neck, and you will go safely. Certain sages used to carry this with them, saying that a great many properties were hidden in it. Some of them thought there were 72 such properties, to all of which they used to assign reasons that none were able to contradict.

The umbilical cord of a newborn wrapped in a red cloth with the tongue of a green tree frog, whoever carries this with him will be honored by his lord and by others as well.

Whoever has an illness with pustules, or scabies, should anoint himself in hot sunlight with water of blood distilled three times, and then put on the earth of blood, [\[362\]](#) and he will be healed. he should do this seven or more times. This we have already demonstrated in the book On Properties.

The right arm of a man and the head of a rabbit kept in anyone's home has power against lies.

Alcohol of human bile with cat eyes helps and makes keen the sight, and whoever makes this will cause marvelous things to appear and demons to be seen.

Take human blood, and grind it with lodestone and the deadly lucula that is called Herb of Light. Make a mass of it, and keep it with you in a little vessel of gold or silver, and you will have power over enchantments and tricks and lies, and above all if you have collected the herb with your own hands and the blood is from your own body.

A certain person from Baldach, however, told me that the herb that in Arabic is called fu, in Latin valerian, and in Greek amantilla, has a similar virtue. He said also that the virtue of this confection was to cause benevolence when eaten or given in a drink.

Take the vulva of a woman (that is, the skin) and carry it with you in a yellow cloth with a serpent's tongue; and you will have the power to make discords and friendships. The same may be done with the hair from a woman's chest.

All of the foregoing are found in a certain book published by Geber the sage. In the book Methedeyhoz I found the experiments written below.

To take away sight by suffumigation. Take the blood of dogs, donkeys, cats, goats, and cows in equal parts. Mix these bloods together, and put them on a gentle fire until they are all blended into one. Then put into it one part each of powdered azernec and sublimated mercury. Mix well and put into a jar, which you should seal well with luting and bury in manure until it putrefies. Then take it out, and beware of its odor. If you put 1/2 ounce of this confection in fire, anyone who breathes it will have the sight of their eyes closed off by a mist, and they will be unable to see light any more. To cure, take fennel juice and green coriander juice. Mix them and put them in the eyes, and by this the blindness will be healed.

For taking away speech. Take two ounces each of cat bile and bear bile, four ounces of bat blood, and 1/2 ounces each of lettuce seed, black poppy seed, and mandrake root. Liquefy the blood and mix in the other ingredients, blend well, and allow the mixture to dry. Then powder it and mix it with old wine aged many years, and make lozenges of 1/2 ounce each. If you give one of these to anyone in drink or food, he will lose the power of speech completely, nor will he be able to communicate in any way. To cure him, let the mouth of the patient be filled with oil or butter, and have him hold his mouth closed.

For taking away hearing. Take mandrake, cow bile, and goat bile in equal parts. Mix them together and powder them; when they are powdered, let them putrefy. Give 1/2 ounce of this in food to whomever you wish, and he will completely lose his hearing. To cure, put juice of rue into the ears of the patient, and he will be healed.

For generating discord and enmity. Take the head of a racanus and an asp, the hair of a dog and of a black cat, in equal parts. Mix them together, and burn them in a jar until they can be powdered. If you throw some of this in a place among people, hatred and quarreling will increase among them until they kill one another. To cure, take four ounces of mallow seeds and two ounces each of the blood and bile of a white dove. Let these be powdered, and mixed with the blood over the fire; and make lozenges weighing 1/2 ounce each. When you wish to take away this discord, pulverize one lozenge, and cast the powder in the place, that is, where the other powder was thrown. At once the aforesaid spirit of discord and hatred will be taken away from there.

Confection for sleeping. Take 1/2 ounce each of opium and black henbane seeds, and 1/6 ounce each nutmeg, lady's bedstraw, and fresh aloes wood. Powder them and mix them with the juice of green coriander; and let it putrefy in a jar so that their complexions and spirits may mix with one another. Then take it out, and give 1/2 ounce in a drink to anyone you wish, and he will sleep for a great space of time during which he cannot be awakened.

For the same. Take four ounces each of scialte nuts, red azernek, mandrake seeds or its bark, and black poppy; six ounces of autumn crocus; and two ounces of henbane seeds. Mix them all together and allow to putrefy for three days; when this is finished, remove them. Give 1/2 ounce to drink mixed with wine to whomever you wish.

For the same. Take equal parts of opium, mandrake bark, lettuce seed, branches of scialte nut, arcole juice, black hellebore, and black poppy seed. Powder them all, mix them together, and blend with a quantity of old wine aged for many years equal in weight to all the foregoing; and leave it to putrefy for seven days. Then take it out, and give 1/2 ounce in food to whomever you wish.

For the same. Take henbane juice, mandrake juice, green coriander juice, lettuce juice, juice of scialte nuts, and spring crocus in equal parts, and opium, a tenth part of all the foregoing. Mix them together. Then take a syrup made from mashed figs pressed four times in an oil press, blend an egg into it, and take of this syrup an amount equal to all the other ingredients. Mix them together, and let it putrefy until all the complexions and spirits are united. Never give a dose of this confection larger than 1/4 ounce, and this is because of the very great strength that its spirit has in the foregoing.

A deadly poison. Take equal parts dried scorpions, scialte nuts, black poppy, and colocynth. Mix them together and pulverize them, and let them putrefy. Be careful of this because 1/2 ounce of it will kill a man.

For the same. Take soapwort, ariole, and fresh eyebright in equal parts. Mix them together, and let it putrefy with a quantity of viper's gall equal in weight to all the preceding ingredients, that is, let it putrefy in an jar appropriate for it, and leave it until it has putrefied. Then remove it. Beware of this, because its excessive heat and superfluous sharpness damages and destroys the blood of the heat and swiftly kills men.

For the same. Take as many frogs as you can catch, and put them on spits arranged as you wish (that is, as many as you wish on each spit) thrusting them through from the mouth to the opening of the anus; and put the spits upright, so that the frogs are placed with their mouths toward the ground. Then have a leaden vessel in which you can collect oil the oil that issues from their mouths. You should know that the later oil is much more effective in this working than the first; save it for use. Oil of this kind, because of its damage to the members of the body, very powerfully kills and harms. The first who discovered this deadly poison was Rufus, who tested it, and found great wonders in it.

A wonderful composite stone against poison. The kings of India were accustomed to have this stone made as described below, because the wonders it wrought in defending them against all danger from poison exceeded all the other noble things that were around them. The composition of this stone is as follows. Take the eyes of ten deer, and the eyes of ten vipers or other venomous snakes; if you cannot get vipers' eyes, as many as will weigh as much as ten of them; and take as much of the head of a toad as equals the weight of one of them. Let all these be dried and well cleaned, and powdered very finely, until it will pass through a fine cotton sieve. Then let it be put in a glazed pot with a very narrow mouth.

Then take sharp wine flavored with cedar, and turnip juice, eight ounces each, and one ounce each of clean white spiderwebs and mastic; the spiderwebs should be chopped up as finely as possible, and put with the mastic into the two juices. Let them remain there for two days and as many nights; then take it up and strain well and combine with the powder in the jug already mentioned. When this is done, seal up the mouth of the jar tightly, and bury it in burnt straw, leaving it there until all is dissolved and reduced to the appearance of oil. Then mix it with water, and put it back in the same burnt straw until all the water is consumed, and turned back so that it can be coadunated.

When this is done, take it out and put it in an empty eggshell so that it becomes round. Put another eggshell over it and seal it well, and put it back again in the same burnt straw, and leave it there until it is partly coagulated. Then take it out, piercing a pinhole in it, and wrap it in a silk cloth, and put it in bread dough and bake it in a pan. When it is done, take it out and put it in the stomach of some kind of fowl, and when it is so placed, roast the fowl. Then take it out of the stomach of the aforementioned bird; if you find that it is well solidified in the form of a stone, that is good; if otherwise, put it in the stomach of another bird. Roast as before, and proceed in the same way until it becomes a stone, and put a thread through the pinhole, and by this thread tie it over the loins.

The kings of India used to make such a stone in this way, and continually wore it over their loins. The effect of this stone is that if anything poisonous was put before the wearer, in food or drink or anything else, the stone would be moved with a great motion and would sweat with a great sweat. This is very well known among the Hindus, and it one of the great marvels that are among them.

The one who first compounded this stone by his own labor was King Behentater, who was one of the kings of India, and a great sage. It was he who built the city of Manif, in which he built mighty buildings, and in those buildings constructed images that spoke. He it was who discovered how to use numbers to make computations for love, which is one of the great wonders the Hindus have. When two people were given these numbers in food or drink or in any other manner, they became great friends and well pleasing to each other. If the aforesaid numbers were carved in wood, and bread or anything else edible was sealed with them and you gave it to someone to eat, he will delight in you with a great love. If those numbers are written on your clothing, your garments cannot be taken away from you;[\[363\]](#) and if you write them on banners that are put in the street to draw business, they will draw business to you.

The lesser of these numbers is 220, and the greater is 284.[\[364\]](#) The way to use these numbers is as follows. Write the smaller and the larger number in the figures of al-Khwarismi. Give the lesser in food to whomever you wish; you should eat the larger. The one who receives the smaller will be obedient to you as the lesser is obedient to the greater, and you will be delighted by him because of the marvelous property and power of the aforesaid computations. These computations may be done similarly with raisins, and pomegranate seeds, and eating whatever other fruit you wish. This is done by the number, and not by the figure.[\[365\]](#) I have experienced the aforesaid computations many times, and have found truth in them as narrated above.

This king made twelve festivals for the people of Egypt[\[366\]](#) in the twelve months, that is, one in each month. Then he made a house wholly surrounded by images, and these images used to cure the people of Egypt of all infirmities. In the head of each of them the infirmity assigned to it was portrayed. The people of that place very often used to cure themselves of their infirmities by those images in the following way. They would approach the images, and describe their infirmities to the image assigned to the same infirmity, from which they wanted to be healed; and at once they were healed. The same king also made an image in the form of a man laughing, and this was the virtue and power of that image; anyone who was oppressed by sorrow and melancholy would look at that image, and at once he would be cheerful and laughing, and the thoughts that troubled him would be handed over to oblivion. All in all, the effects of his images proceeded so that that the people of that city used to worship the king as though he was a god.

The same king also made bronze images in that city with two wings extended, and these were entirely covered with gold. Then he set them in place in the city. Their virtue was that all who passed by them, man or woman, who had committed adultery, uncovered their natures, nor were they able to pass by those images without uncovering themselves. All who uncovered themselves, fornicators and fornicatrices alike, were led into the presence of the king, and were truly known to be guilty of that crime, and punished justly according to the laws of that city. For this reason both the men and the women of that city used to shun that form of wickedness.

The same king also made an earthenware vessel that he filled with water, and his entire army used to drink from it without decreasing the water in it. This king lived in the time of Alexander the Great, and it is said that he presented this vessel with some other marvels to him. The vessel was constructed by the artificial magisteries of science, the properties of nature, and the knowledge of the strengths of the spirits of the planets and the fixed stars.

In this same way was made the pillar that Acaym king of India made in the gate of the city of Nube, which was made of black marble and was completely full of water. No matter how much was taken out of it, the water never decreased; and this was because it attracted the moisture of the air by virtue of the magistry by which it was made. The king constructed this work for the benefit of the people, on account of the distance of that city from the banks of the Nile and its closeness to the salt sea, and because of this latter it happened that by the sun's rays, from the water of the sea, drew up gross and humid vapors, from which the most subtle were purified of their salt in the air, and by the most suble magisteries of geometry and the science of magic, used to descend into that pillar as though they condensed out of the air. It was for this reason that water was never lacking in the pillar, because of the aforementioned attraction, which happened in the same way that the bloodstone attracts whatever is put around it.

Beyond these, the Hindus have other great marvels, some of which I propose to relate presently. For prohibiting every motion of the body. Take a human penis, and chop it into pieces, and stir it into powdered opium, scialte nuts, and a little azerneec. Then put it into a lead vessel to putrefy, and beware of it. When you extract it from putrefaction, you will find it liquefied and as though reduced to oil. If you give a little of this oil in food or drink to anyone you wish, all his senses, motion, and spirit will be closed and stupefied, nor will he be able to move any part of his body. The Hindus used to perform many wonders with this oil, mixing it with other things, giving it in food, and revealing that which they desired and that which was outside their customs. They would give it in food to whomever they wished, and by this they would demonstrate what they wanted never to be revealed, and would even transform men into whatever figure or form they wished.

That you may appear in the form of any animal you wish. Take the semen of a man who is complete in all his members, and put it in an egg (that is, in the shell) mixed together with the semen of any animal you wish. Seal the egg well and leave it to putrefy in hot manure for three days. When this is complete, take it out of the manure, and in the egg you will find the similitude of an animal. Take it out and put it in sesame oil, and leave it for three more days. That animal will drink that oil during those three days, and while it is still living, let it be ground in that same oil. If you light a lamp with the oil, anyone who anoints his face with it will appear in the form of the animal whose semen you used. This was considered among the Hindus to be a noble secret, that they would never reveal among anyone but themselves.

That a man should be unable to leave a city. Take a man's semen and a little of his blood, and cook it with twice the amount of honey until all the semen has dissolved into the honey. Then cook the honey until it is well browned. Give this food to whomever you wish, that is, to someone who intends to set out on a long journey. Whoever eats of it will not be able to leave the city that day; rather, he will remain there as though rapt and insensible.

A great wonder of magic. The Hindus also make another composition, with which they used to perform great works of magic. This is its composition. They took a sow, and closed her up in an empty house. One room of the house they prepared with iron and tin so that she could not leave the house. In the same house, next to the sow, they would put a boar in a room prepared the same way, and once this was done, they remained in that place for 24 days. They would begin this work when the Sun entered the first degree of Capricorn. Each day they would give them crumbled wheat bread soaked in milk to eat, as much as they wanted. At the end of those 24 days the sow, having the greatest desire to couple with the boar, would be moved by so great a motion that from her flowed a great quantity of female seed,[\[367\]](#) similar to coagulated cow's blood.

The Hindus would make great artifices by collecting this seed; they would put it in a lead vessel, seal its mouth well, and put it in manure for 24 days to putrefy. At the end of those days they would remove it from the manure, and when the aforementioned vessel had cooled, they would open it and find in it an animal that moved. They would feed it for three days with nuts and milk, as we have said above concerning the sow. At the end of the three days they would drown it in oil, with which they would perform great marvels of magic, giving it in food and lighting lamps with it and anointing faces and bodies with it, and many other marvels that are not worth relating because of their prolixity. We ask, however, that those who perform the foregoing keep it as the greatest of secrets, and do not reveal it to anyone except to someone else who is expert in it.

Chapter Twelve

Rules Necessary in this Science

Those who intend to involve themselves in this science ought to know that it is by the works and experiments they do in this world that profound and secret sciences are known, and by works and experiments doubts are solved.[\[368\]](#) This is because when anyone accomplishes his desires, his doubts are settled. You should indeed be greedy in all the things, and about all the things, that we have taught you so far, and you should be faithful in the operations themselves, and continually observe the ways of the sages and the habits of the ancients in the operations of this science. From unlawful foods and pleasures you should stay as far as you possibly can; indeed, you ought to think of the salvation of your soul and the love of God as assiduously as you can, because desire and love attract spirits and incline you to follow spiritual effects, and complete and reveal all their properties furthering the thing that is desired.

If that orientation be toward God, Who is the beginning and end of all things and the perpetual and eternal Lord of Lords, then that love will be durable and perfect. If that love instead is fixed on corporeal things, that love will be unstable and a corruptible and terminating love. The will is divided into different kinds, for there is a love which is accompanied by health and honor is that love which is fixed on God the sublime and exalted, and to this kind belongs the love of fathers, teachers, and holy men; likewise the love of piety and the love of children. There is a love which is advantageous and helpful, and this is the love of people who delight in helping one another freely. The will, when it is most acute, is called love, and as we have said above, when we put another ahead of God, that ought rightly to be called corruptible love.

We base our entreaties on God Himself, that He may so illuminate your mind and spirit that His profound sciences may be opened to you, and that He may protect and defend you from the conspiracies of the common people and of evildoers, and that you will not reveal any of your secrets to the ignorant, because it is thus that they become the murderers of holy men and prophets.

Now the properties that are proposed and the examples that are given in the books of the prophets concerning this science, if you were to try to deduce them by experiment, would seem to be of a fraudulent nature, nor would you be able to deduce the effects promised by them in eternity. If you understand them, however, in the manner we have said (that is, with the right attitude and steady faith and an understanding of the causes of effects), then they will be seen to be noble, high, and precious, and of a nature remote from the merely animal in man. If we ought properly to obey our parents, who gave life and being to us, we ought even more to obey the prophets and saints who gave us examples, that by their rule of life our souls might be saved and we be led to perpetual life. When virtue is found in our bodies, on account of the perfection of the elemental bodies, then that virtue cares for and governs our bodies in their figures and effects, and it is not separated from them until its proper time.

This is what the prophets call nature. They call it natural because virtue of this kind is the cause of the government of bodies for a determinate time, in whatever accords to the natural division of each one. For this reason it is called nature by them, because nature is the primary innate principle of all animals and plants.

Here is an example. A stone that is thrown falls back down by its nature, and this is not by the size of its body, because other bodies are not similar to it in size, but rather this effect happens in an opposite way, as in the case of fire, which ascends more quickly the larger its body is; this is understood to be the principle of this manner of motion, and this is called nature. Furthermore, they call this motion "nature," and again, they say that the nature of an element is its form and natural shape.

For this reason physicians use this noun, "nature," for the complexion and the innate heat and for the forms and figures of the body and for motion and spirit, and it is used according to whatever their intention is. Now in truth this noun, "nature," is an equivocal name, because it is used for every body and all its properties, and for the humors, the elements of heaven, and the virtues that God has placed there that are the causes of generation and corruption, movement and rest, in all things that are moved and made to rest. For this reason above all, the sages have defined it as the end and beginning of motion and rest.

The philosophers have said that corporeal form cannot exist in bodies except by the mediation of heaven between them and spirit. Plato defines it thus: nature is a body perfect for making beings. Galienus says: nature is the natural heat helping the body and removing corruptions and detriments from it, insofar as it is able; and when the virtue of the body concurs with it and makes it apt for government, conduct, and so on. Abenteclis says: for it is a simple body having one form and one figure, and in it is power and life, but it itself is the form of life, as appears in children, to whose nature a certain magistracy preserving life is given by nursing, sleeping, etc.; and when it is taught to artificial things, the work of the magister is accomplished. I have recounted the foregoing only to clarify the light of your intellect, because I have striven in all things to be instructed and learned in the creation and contemplation of every manner of being that may be found in the universe. By doing the same, you will have an adept mind, by the intellectual conjunction of the possible with the agent. Thus it is completed.

This finishes the third book of Picatrix; the fourth book follows.

Book Four

Here begins the fourth book, in which is revealed the properties of spirits, and those things that are necessary in this art, and how they may be helped by images, suffumigations, and other things.

Chapter One

By what virtue and force spirit proceeds, and what are the properties of spirits, bodies, sense, intellect, and soul, as well as the differences between them

The ancient sages agree in this, that God disposed five things and ordered them by degrees, putting the noblest in the highest degree, that is, prime matter and prime form,[\[369\]](#) which is the primal source of all; second, perception or intellect; third, spirit;[\[370\]](#) fourth, the nature of heavenly things; and fifth, the elements, and things made of the elements. First, however, he placed in his highest heaven a circle where no other god and no other lord but Himself could remain, and He ordained that all other light should emanate from there; and thence, by His power, he distributed and spread knowledge, and the nobility of the other virtues that pertain to that virtue.

Perception and intellect He put in the first circle below that one, from which they descend similarly to the way light descends from that one; and thence, by His power, knowledge and the nobility of virtues that pertain to it are emanated. Next below He placed the circle of spirit, from which spirit is emanated similar to the way light emanates from the first; knowledge and the nobility appropriate to it (that is, that which proceeds from the circle of spirit, as well as from the circles above it) flow forth by means of it. Then in order below spirit he placed nature,[\[371\]](#) which proceeds similarly to the first; and by His power the nobility appropriate to it was generated in it by those things that are above it.

It is therefore clear that the first form is more noble and in every way more subtle than perception, as perception is more noble and subtle than spirit, and spirit than nature, and nature than the elements. Each of the aforesaid He put one above another according to their proper measure of distance, as though to say that the first is absolute, pure in itself, and free from all grossness; while the second has in it a little more grossness or materiality than the first, and less than the third, and so by degrees descending to the elements and elementary things. This is because that prime essence shines more brightly in itself, while other things lacking its purity, down to the necessary endpoint, return to it as they create species, that is, as subordinate genera, they return to the most general genera, as each receives nobility from its superiors and distributes its power to its inferiors.

Presently He created and formed the heavens, and placed the heaven of spirit in the midst of four other heavens, of which the two above it, those of the prime essence and intellect, are luminous and clear, and the two below, those of nature and the elements, are shadowy and obscure. But the heaven of spirit, as a subordinate genus, receives the knowledge and nobility appropriate to it from the superiors and distributes them to the inferiors.

In the end, spirit is conquered and illuminated by the two heavens above it, and receives from them light, knowledge, and nobility. Spirit itself is most fully formed when it reaches toward the heights, and resides in the place where it was made and created, and whence it receives fortune, goodness, and light; this place is called paradise. But spirit conquering the two heavens below it is shadowy, miserable, and unfortunate spirit, and descends to the lowest things, and resides in a place where it is held captive and can find no rest; this place is called Hell.

Again, this same spirit created animals and vegetables and all solid bodies. These do not receive perception and knowledge from the prime form; the latter distributed very little to them, since they were not appropriate to it. They, however, are conquered by the two lower heavens (that is, those of nature and the elements), and reside on earth, where they exist, remain, and are created. All the aforementioned proceed from the divine power and virtue.

Here is an example. Trees are born in the earth, their beginning is their roots, and their ends are the branches, leaves, and fruit born from them. Their roots draw in the vegetable virtue from the moisture of the earth, while the twigs draw it from the air. Those trees in whose nature the earthly material dominates the aerial have roots longer than their branches, and conversely, when air predominates over earth, the branches grow longer than the roots. Therefore, to confirm the aforesaid, we see with our senses trees and other vegetables born in the earth that have roots longer than their branches, and vice versa; and there are trees whose roots dry out but not their twigs, and vice versa.

We see the same thing in birds, among whom those whose nature is more appropriate to the earth fly more heavily, while the more their nature is assimilated to air, the more lightly and swiftly they fly. The same is true of human beings who, the more their nature is compounded of the subtle elements and the more it is purified of grossness and feeds on lighter foods, the more subtle and spiritual, and the more able to understand spiritual things, they become; while to the contrary, the more that human beings are composed of earth and the grosser elements, and feed on coarser food, the less able they become to ascend to spiritual things, and the more accustomed they naturally become to gross and corporeal perceptions. By this it is clear that evil proceeds from corporeal things, while good proceeds from spirit.

Matter, however, is divided into two parts, that is, spiritual and corporeal. The spiritual portion is the first matter, which is the supernal world, and the first form, which is the spiritual first element (that is, sense, soul, nature, the elements, and the beginnings of every kind that are first purified of matter), and the first unity, which remains indivisible as it is a unity, a point, and the like, and that which cannot be divided by time, as the instant of the beginning of a line, which is a point. Corporeal matter is that which is composed of the elements, such as animals, trees, and the like.

Furthermore, matter is either simple or composite. Simple matter is everything above the heavens, and composite is everything that exists below the heavens, and thus can be perceived by sight and experienced. Bandaclis the sage said that all matter that can be perceived by the five corporeal senses is corporeal matter and entirely composite, and when it is of this kind, it is corrupted and changed, becoming a localized thing lacking a location.[\[372\]](#) All matter that cannot be perceived by the five corporeal senses is called simple matter, pure, spiritual, luminous, stable, and exalted.

All matter that can be perceived by one of the five senses[\[373\]](#) is intermediate between simple and spiritual matter, on the one hand, and composite and corporeal matter on the other. Thus what is corporeal is held by corporeal bodies, and with these they pass through changes of time and color, while what is spiritual remains with light and exalted spirit, and with these endures for infinite ages. You, however, who propose to study this book should consider how you may lead your soul to the degree and understanding of the blessed spirits, which you may do if in all your doings you strive to follow the spiritual part, the cognition of which differs from that of beasts.

The sages disagree, however, about the properties of sense and its divisions.[\[374\]](#) For this name, sense or intellect[\[375\]](#), is used by them to denote four different things. In the first sense, it is used to describe reason, because humanity, distinct from all other animals, who lack sense and discretion, is disposed to receive knowledge and the secret labors of the masters; and the property of sense is that it is disposed to the acquisition of knowledge. Sense appears from this as a divine light infused by God into the heart, which disposes it to see and understand things exactly as they are. This is the opinion of one party of the sages who discussed this subject. Thus Seusdalis said that the word "human" is equivocal, that is, it refers both to people in whom intellect is active and to people in whom intellect is lacking.

The second opinion. Sense is that which is recognized by knowledge and apparent to the senses, as in children who are able to perceive very little of the secrets of nature, but who apprehend nature as though this was naturally granted to them: for example, in numbers, they recognize what two plus one is, and that two bodies cannot simultaneously occupy the same space, and that it is impossible for one body to be in two places at the same time. One party among the sages, speaking of this, assert that those who deny this opinion demonstrate its truth.

The third opinion. Sense, according to another opinion of the ancient sages, consists of that which has been proven by long experience. Those who lack cognition or sense thus ought rightly to be called imbeciles, fools, blind, and stupid.

The fourth opinion. Sense, according to others, consists of natural cognitions whereby are understood the profundities of eternal things, from which the corruptible things of this world descend. When these natural cognitions are found in some person, we say that he has the sense to overcome and conquer his bestial nature, and is assimilated to the spiritual and eternal. This is the property by which human beings are distinguished from other animals.

Thus the two prior are natural and the two latter are acquired by study and learning. Thus a sage said: "I see that sense is of two kinds, that is, natural and acquired." The acquired cannot be had in any way other than by means of the natural, just as the light of the sun is little help to an eye that is naturally defective.

Here we proceed to another, higher distinction of sense.[\[376\]](#) The ancient sages divided sense into six parts, of which two are comprehended by words, that is, the general sense and the universal sense, so that we speak of the natural and universal spirit; which they understand in this way, that all things are divided into three parts, that is, the body, the natural sense, and the spirits of intelligences and the angels who move the heavens. Of these the first and lowest obtains its place from the two latter, the second we consider the most noble of all, and the third we know to be the medium between them.

The reason why we say the second is nobler is that it is purified of all material dependence; while separated intelligences and the angels who move the spheres are intermediate between these, since they move the heavens, by the motion of which the active senses work their effects. The general sense, however, is that which we have described above in the division of sense, that which is removed from form or matter, because when we speak of man in general, this is understood to mean the reason of rational men or the reason of which all men are capable, by which they are distinguished from all other animals. This they call the general sense.

Universal sense, however, is expressed in two ways, of which one is more appropriate to the word, for by it is understood the genus of the whole universe.[\[377\]](#) The second kind of reason is that which, according to the way the explanation of these names is understood, is a kind of property apart from material things and all their parts, which is moved naturally and not according to accident. Of this genus the lowest grade is active sense, which is assigned to human spirits and the higher sciences.[\[378\]](#) This genus is the principle of all things that follow the first principle; and the first principle governs everything.

The second of all, according to this intention, is the ninth sphere, which goes around once each day and night carrying the other spheres which are caught up in it. By reason of its magnitude and capacity, which contain all other bodies, it is called the body of the universe.[\[379\]](#) Thereafter, according to this opinion, the universal sense is a substance equally distributed in all its parts, apart from matter. It moves itself, desiring to assimilate itself to movement. Its movement has been discovered to be the beginning of everything. Thus the founder of the Law said that the first thing created by God was sense, which by divine aspiration began to move.

The general spirit, however, is called many different things, and these all have names corresponding to their subjects, and all of them are assigned as spirits to their proper bodies. The spirit of the universe is the sense of the universe. Thus every substance that is wholly incorporated in the moving heavenly bodies overflows, and this is according to the stillness of sense. The relationship between the spirit of all and the sense of all, however, is equal to that between our spirit and our active sense. The spirit or intellect of the universe is the principle by which natural bodies are perceived, and the grades thereof in receiving perception accord with the grades of sense in all things, and the perception of the one is assimilated to that of the other.[\[380\]](#) The foregoing are the rules that have been found concerning sense.

Aristotle said that the sense of the sensing spirit is received from that which is sensed. If anyone asks in what way the spirit understands, the answer is that the rational spirit discerns by the light of the senses, when it desires to know anything, and when it receives this same light, it rejoices therein and achieves its intention. Its light extends over all perceptible things until it is closed in sleep, wherein all sensing spirits are stupefied and relaxed, and to which all intellectual spirits are subject. If someone objects to this, saying, "Who knows whether the spirit understands something while it is sleeping?" I answer that something remains from the spirit, even as heat remains from fire after the fire has been extinguished. According to the unity of the sense with the body, it can be terminated, despite the view of one party of the sages.

Empedocles said that sense is not able to be terminated because it is a simple substance, and simple substance has neither genus nor difference because it is not separated. A definition cannot be completed except by genus and divisions.[\[381\]](#) He says further that sense is divided into two, that is, a general sense that contains all things virtually and is not fatigued thereby (and is itself all things in itself in its own substance, and is coextensive with time, which does not precede it by a single instant); the other is a noble and selected sense, which is purified and consoled, which is only found in the human body; and then only when it has been purified to its proper purity and consoled for its sorrow. It is the light cast by the light of the general sense.

The soul is a spirit of divine intelligence, which divine intelligence created and placed in the body without any medium; and He planted it in those bodies which follow the light of the Sun, because it is by the Sun that, by means of rays, He touches the bodies themselves. Souls are ordered in natural forms according to their effects; and from Him come the capacities of sensation, estimations or cogitations, imaginations, stillnesses, memories, and the like.

One party among the ancient sages determined this: Nature is a durable motion by which corporeal agents are perfected or completed, and live their potential.

Chapter Two

What vigor the spirit of the Moon brings to this inferior world, and what ought to be done with each of the seven planets

You should know, however, that one party among the Chaldean and Egyptian sages said that the Moon pours out and transmits the influences of the planets to this composite world. Because of this, they did workings, sacrifices, and prayers to the Moon herself upon her ingress into each sign. Here I have opened to you the same workings of other nations, and what is said here is translated out of the Arabic language.

How one can speak with the spirits of the Moon, and first, when she is in Aries. When you wish to attract the virtue and power of the Moon when she is in Aries, at the hour when she is completely risen, because that is better and more useful for your petition; in that very hour, put on a crown and go to a green and watery place near the banks of a river or running water. Take with you a rooster with a divided crest, which you will behead with the bone of another rooster, as you must not in any way touch that rooster with iron. Turn your face to the Moon, for this is a very great secret among them.[\[382\]](#) Put in front of yourself two iron thuribles full of burning coals, in which you should cast successively grains of incense, so that the smoke rises up toward the Moon. Then stand upright between the censers, and say: "You, O Moon, luminous, honored, lovely, who with your light shatters the shadows, you ascend in your rising and fill every horizon with your light and beauty. I come to you humbly, seeking wealth, for which I humbly ask you." Here state your petition. Then take ten steps forward, always looking at the Moon, and repeating the aforesaid words. Carry one of the thuribles with you, into which you should cast four ounces of storax.

Then burn the leaf. At once, as the smoke rises, you will see before you the figure of a handsome man dressed in the finest clothes, standing between the thuribles, to whom you should address your petition, and it will be fulfilled by him. At any time after this, when you wish to ask something of him, repeat the working just given, and the aforesaid form will appear to you and answer your questions.

When the Moon is in Taurus. When the Moon is in Taurus, and you wish to attract her virtue and power, you should know first of all that the Moon has diverse effects and diverse powers in each one of the signs. When you wish to do this work, go to the same kind of place as was said of the other sign, [\[383\]](#) and bring with you one rooster and one thurible with fire. Dress yourself in linen garments dyed with alayeron or pomegranate rinds, and wear a hood upon your head. You should have one gourd full of water in which nut wood has been boiled. Take some of the water in your right hand, pour it into your left, and wash your hands, arms, and face with it. Be careful that the hood does not fall back from your head. Then wash your feet with the aforesaid water. Then take a new rush mat or reed mat, on which no human foot has ever stepped, and let this mat be wrapped entirely in a linen cloth painted green and red. From the place where you are standing, or from the cloth that covers the mat, jump and land with both feet on the aforesaid mat, and say: "Ribharim ribharim caypharim caypharim dyaforim dyaforim." [\[384\]](#) Repeat these names twenty times. Then stand upright, and go back to the gourd of water already mentioned, and again wash your hands. Then behead your sacrifice, and saying the same words again, burn it. Continually, while you perform this working, suffumigate with incense and mastic. Then you will see the figure of a man, to whom you may ask your petition, and what you desire shall be accomplished.

Something that appears in this working reminds me of a certain person who had a friend who lost everything he had and fell into great poverty. He said that the lord of his friend's ascendant was Saturn, and Saturn was an infortune to him and the source of his poverty. He showed his friend how to pray to the Moon when she was in Taurus. The friend did the whole working, and there appeared to him the form of a man, to whom he asked his petition and described his poverty. It seemed to him that the man took him by the hand and led him to a certain ditch, and told him to dig there. He did so, and found a treasure there which made him a rich man.

When the Moon is in Gemini. When the Moon is in Gemini and you wish to attract her virtue and power, go to a high place where the winds blow. Take with you a rooster, and the aforesaid suffumigation, and a ruler of yellow brass three cubits [\[385\]](#) long and a thurible of the same brass, in which you light a fire and fan it with the ruler; and in the midst of the fire put a pound of storax. Hold one end of the ruler over the fire (that is, while the smoke rises) and point the other end toward the Moon. Then put on the fire three ounces of incense and a little amber, and hold the ruler in the smoke as we have already said. Then sit before the fire in the thurible and take the ruler in your hands, and make a circle with it, in such a way that you are at the center of the circle. Then take seven heaps of dried beanstalk, and put them in seven places around the circumference of the circle. Divide your sacrifice into seven parts, and put each part onto one of the heaps of beanstalk. When this is done, kindle the fire with the ruler in the aforesaid beanstalks until the sacrifice is burnt. Thereafter, stand in the middle of the circle and say, "You, O Moon, refulgent and luminous, honored in your realm and gathered into the place and degree of your exaltation, because you govern this world by your power and spirit-- I call to you and I ask of your spiritual power that you will do this for me." Then state your petition; supplicating and praying, prostrate yourself to the ground and say "abrutim abrutim gebrutim gebrutim" [\[386\]](#) twenty times. Then raise your head above the ground, and you will see a form as described above, to whom you should speak your petition, and it will be accomplished effectually.

When the Moon is in Cancer. When the Moon is in Cancer, and you wish to attract her virtue and power, climb up to a high place, where there is a spot elevated above an ample plain. Then look to the right and to the left, before you and behind you, listening, and holding a turtle-dove in your hand. Behead it, and take four feathers from its right wing and the same number from its left; cut off its beak, and burn it completely. Then take the aforementioned feathers, mix them with two ounces of colocynth and four ounces of storax, and put all this in a single pan. Then take two ounces of white behem, which must be added to the ashes of the sacrifice and mixed with the juice of birthwort, and out of this make the figure of a man riding on a lion.

When this is done, rise up and raise the image before you, and light a fire, into which you should put your suffumigation, and say: "You, O Moon, who are full of light, replete with benevolence and beauty, and equal in your altitude, I pour out my prayers to you and send my petition." When this is done, make a circle in the earth, and in the center thereof put the image you have made, after writing on it the name of that which you wish to turn aside. Then go back and repeat the same words, and prostrate yourself to the ground. After this, rise up, and take six ounces of vinegar, and dissolve the image completely therein. Add one grain of nutmeg, a quarter ounce of amber, four ounces of gall-nut, and one and a half pounds of storax, and put it over a fire until it is well boiled. Out of it make pills weighing one ounce each, and suffumigate with these to the Moon for seven nights (that is, burning one pill each night), and save the rest. The sages who have labored at this work have said that, if you suffumigate anyone you wish with this suffumigation, and they breathe the odor, they will never be able to disobey your commands. Many who have practiced this science, when beginning a journey on which they faced lions, bears, serpents, scorpions, and other noxious animals, were freed from experiencing any harm from them through working with the aforesaid suffumigation.

When the Moon is in Leo. When the Moon is in Leo and you wish to attract her virtue and power, go to an uninhabited place, and carry seven thuribles with you, which you should place in a circle on the ground in such a way that one cubit separates each thurible from the next. Between each thurible and the next put a goose's egg on which is written these figures:

Then take a needle of yellow brass three palms^[387] in length, which you should hold in your right hand; upon your head you should at all times have a yellow hat, made of wool in the Arab fashion, and you should wear a shirt of wool, dyed yellow. In the center of the circle, behead a rooster with a divided crest, as we have described in the sign of Aries. Then burn the meat of the chicken in the thuribles. Take some of its blood on the point of the needle, and let it drip from the needle into the thuribles and onto the aforementioned eggs. When this is done, count two thuribles from the one in front of you, and take the egg after that thurible, and put it before you, and strike it repeatedly with the needle, suffumigating with incense and yellow sandalwood, saying "Hendeb hendeb"^[388] fifty times. Then there will come to you the tangible form of a superior man, to whom you should address your petition; and it will be effectually accomplished at once.

When the Moon is in Virgo. When the Moon is in Virgo and you wish to attract its virtue and power, take thirty thrushes and behead them, and cook them until they are well done. Take them out when their feathers fall out of them, and salt them moderately and save them for use. Do this thirty days before the Moon enters into Virgo. Thereafter, each day eat one of them, after suffumigating it with four drachms of crocus; and after you have eaten it, you must not eat anything else until six hours have passed.

Do this every day for thirty days, during which time you must also abstain from wine; at the end of this time, wash yourself in the water of an eastern spring, and from the water of the spring take some in a jug of medium size that was made while the Sun passed through the fourth degree and the Moon was in the seventh degree of Aquarius. Seal the mouth of the jug with wax that has never been touched by fire.

When this is done, betake yourself to an ample place, and carry before you a thurible containing a quarter ounce each of incense and crocus; and say, "You, O Moon, are beautiful and positioned in aspect and copious in giving, great and high; your light illuminates the shadows and sends forth spirits, and your beauty gives joy to the heart. I beseech you and confide such and such a matter to you." Then take the aforesaid jug in your left hand, and say, "Haphot haphot," and dig with your right hand in the dirt, and continually say the aforesaid word while you dig.

Do this until you have made a pit a cubit deep, and set the jug in it with its mouth pointing to the south side of the pit. Then fill the pit again with earth until its surface is level with the ground. While doing all this, say the aforementioned name continually. Afterward, draw the figure of the thing you want on a sheet of lead with a golden needle, and bury it at the top of the aforementioned pit. When you have done this, your petition will be fulfilled at once.

When the Moon is in Libra. When the Moon is in Libra, and you wish to attract her virtue and power, gird yourself with a cord plaited from rushes of the sort that grow in water, go to the eastern bank of a river, and burn your sacrifice by the bank of the stream next to where the current of water runs, facing the Moon the whole time. In your hand you should hold a brass slingstone^[389] made when Venus was retrograde in Taurus and Mercury was in Aries. Do all this five times, going to the bank of the stream and returning each time. When this is done, strike the water of the stream with the slingstone, that is, when the sacrifice is burnt, and say: "You, O Moon, high and honored! To you I offer and send this sacrifice, and I do this in order to receive your grace, because you have power to grant to me my petition and to fulfill my desire." Then light a fire of wild olive wood, and throw storax onto it, and run in a circle around the fire as fast as you are able. Then you should prepare yourself in the place where you made the fire, and make a line in the earth from your feet to the fire, and on the line write this name: ganeytania ganeytania. Then take the earth in which you wrote the name, and mix it with earth and water that is not moving; and from this make two images, the other being in the form of anyone you wish.^[390] Let the images embrace one another, that is, if your working is for love, and if it is ordained to another purpose, make them in that manner. Let the making of the aforesaid image or images be done in the hour of the Moon, as quickly as they can be, and whatever you ask will be fulfilled.

When the Moon is in Scorpio. When the Moon is in Scorpio and you wish to attract her virtue and power, rise up when the Moon is in the thirteenth degree of Scorpio and go to a place in which there are many dense trees, and many waters. Make a square figure on the ground, and cover it with the leaves of nut trees and leaves of citrons and pines; sprinkle all of it with rose water. Then put a new silver thurible before you, and in it put some lignum aloes, storax, and incense, as much as you can. Then dress yourself in a garment of pure white in which no other color is mixed.

When you have done this, set before you two clay thuribles full of water, and take a little clay pitcher, with which you should transfer water from one thurible to the other, and from the latter, pour water onto your sides with the pitcher. Make your sacrifice of animals pertaining to this sign. When this is done, stand on your feet, and four times prostrate yourself, and in each prostration say, "Seraphie seraphie."^[391] Then sit down again, and cast onto the top of the fire lignum aloes and incense, and put storax into whichever thurible you wish. Then prostrate yourself another four times as before. Then a man of seemly and perfect form will appear to you, whom you should ask whatsoever you will, and it shall be fulfilled as you desire.

When the Moon is in Sagittarius. When the Moon is in Sagittarius, and you wish to attract its virtue and power (and the great sages considered this working to be a very strong and perfect work, and many of them practiced this working of Sagittarius to find treasures), and when you wish to do this, perform the following working when Mercury is in the fourth degree of Cancer. At that time melt ten pounds of brass, and out of it make five images in the form of dragons, and do this while Mercury remains in the degrees of the same sign.

When the images are completed, proceed to a clear flowing stream, and divert water from that stream by five small channels that you make, which flow out one after another along the course of the stream wherever you wish. In each of these channels put one of the five images made in the form of dragons, as described earlie, so that the water flows into their tains and out of their mouths. Then take five wineskins and place each one at the mouth of one of the dragons, so that the water flows into the wineskins from the dragons' mouths, and leave them there for an hour. Then take the wineskins away from the mouths of the dragons, and let the water from those dragons flow out onto the earth for another hour after that. Again, return the wineskins to their original places (that is, each one of them to the image at which it was first situated), and allow the water flowing from the mouths of the dragons to flow into them for another hour. At the end of that hour take them away as before, and proceed to work in the same way until they are completely full.

When they are full, go twenty palms back from the river with them, and when you have walked that far with them, the wineskins are to be placed on the ground in a circle. Each of them is to be pierced with a needle; and in the middle of the circle make a pit, into which the water going out of the wineskins may flow, and next to each wineskin one of the dragons is to be put. When all is completed in this manner, rise up and run back to the bank of the river, looking continually at the Moon, and take into your mouth as much of the river water as your mouth can hold; and run back to the place of the aforementioned wineskins, and sprinkle the wineskins and dragons with water from your mouth. Near each of the dragons place a thurible full of burning charcoal, into which you should put amber and lignum aloes, nor should the smoke be extinguished at any point while the water flows from the wineskins.

When all the water is gone, take the dragons, put them in the wineskins, and bury them in the pit mentioned above, and cover them with earth. When this is accomplished, stand up at that place, and behead your sacrifice facing fifteen trees; and raise your head toward one of the trees, and as you do, say, "Harmum harmum."[\[392\]](#) Say this word fifteen times, once to each of the trees, and then your petition will be fulfilled at once, because a man of beautiful appearance and good disposition will appear to you, who will lead you to the place in the four quarters of the world where you will find your desire.

I say truthfully to you and I had a friend once, who did this working as I have given it here; and when the working was completed, a man appeared to him who asked him for his petition. He responded that his petition was this, that the man should show him an image by which lost treasures could be found. It seemed to him that the man took him by the hand, and led him to a certain place, where the man gave him the bronze image of an elephant which held an iron key between its forefeet and hind feet. It seemed to him then that the man said, "Take the elephant, and wander wherever it leads you, and in the place where the key falls from between his feet, you will know that treasure is to be found there."

My friend took the elephant in his hands; and when he had proceeded, holding it, for a distance of four cubits, the key fell from between the feet of that elephant. At once he stopped, and dug a pit there, and in it he found that there were stairs. Descending them, he found a great house full of vessels of gold and silver, as well as precious stones. He took as much of the treasure as he could carry, and returned with an elephant, and thereby was able to carry the treasure away with him.

When the Moon is in Capricorn. When the Moon is in Capricorn and you wish to attract its virtue and power, when the Sun appears in the sign of Cancer, you should go into a house only just large enough for two men, and cover it over for seven days with fragrant boughs (that is, each day you must renew the covering with fresh boughs). In each of those seven days, you shall suffumigate the aforesaid house with lignum aloes and incense. At the end of the seven days, go into that house dressed in a beautiful red garment, and you will see that in the house is a covered table or something like it; and when you wish, you may uncover it, and say, "Heyerim heyerim falsari falsari tifat tifat." [393] Then leave the house, and proceed in a circle around the house seven times.

Then suffumigate the house with two ounces of lignum aloes in a silver thurible for the space of one hour. Then go outside it, and again go around the aforesaid house seven times as before. When you have done this, offer up your sacrifice of a chicken, as we have said many times already, and then again enter the house. There you will find a man sitting, to whom you must say three times: "I conjure you by the lovely and luminous Moon, adorned and honored, that you speak to me." Speak with him then, and ask him for whatever you wish, and it will be effectually accomplished.

Now all that which by the operations of these chapters do, for the most part, may be done in order to acquire love. One of my close friends once had a handmaiden that he sold. After he sold her, he fell back in love with her, and asked the man to whom he had sold her if he could buy her back again, but the man refused to return her. Seeing that he would not be able to get her again in this way, he did the aforesaid work as just described; at once the man who owned her took a strong dislike to her. He sent a message to my friend asking him to buy her, according to his desire, for the price that had been agreed. Seeing, though, that the man was unhappy with her, my friend recovered her for a more modest price. The foundation of this working, however, and others of the same kind, is that the one who performs them be of good deeds and a follower of natural effects and far from all evil deeds; also let him be clean and clear from all voluptuousness and as secret as he possibly can be.

Here, however, I wish to recount something that happened in our own time to one who wished to attract the virtue of the Moon, who performed this working for reasons of necessity, but spent a certain night living in a manner contradictory to this operation. On the night when he actually performed it, there appeared to him a man who had something in his hand, which he put in the mouth of the would-be magician; and at once his mouth was sealed up, so that he did not seem ever to have had a mouth. Thus he lingered for forty hours full of the greatest terror, at the end of which he perished utterly.

When the Moon is in Aquarius. When the Moon is in Aquarius and you wish to attract her virtue and power, first you ought to read what all the ancient sages agreed, which is that the rules for these workings are those things that have been found to be useful in them. Therefore the rules and the workings joined together have the most effective results, and proceed straight to the desired end. When the rules are not added to the working, the greatest peril to body and spirit results, and when those who perform these workings do not know how to do them, there occur the greatest and most terrible dangers, which are frightful even to describe. This, I say to you, is to be taught and reproved: for no one should dare to meddle in this work unless they are of good memory and good quality.

When the Moon is in this sign, then, and you wish to work, take the heads of three male ducks, which have been put on the fire in aged wine many years old until they are well done, and then grind them in an iron or lead mortar until they are all reduced to a single mass; and this is to be done when the Moon is in Cancer. Then add a pound and a half of cinnamon, two ounces of sandalwood, a pound and a half of dry storax, four ounces of incense, and a small amount of dragon's blood. Mix it all up along with the wine in which the heads were cooked; from it make forty pills, which you should put in an iron skillet over the fire until they are completely dry.

At night, after you have done this, go into a field when the Moon is in Aquarius and her light is complete. [\[394\]](#) Set before you fifteen thuribles, which may be of brass or silver, but it is considered better still if they are of gold; and all of them should be full of burning coals. Into each thurible cast one of the pills, and offer up a rooster in sacrifice, as above. While the smoke rises, a certain man will appear to you, who will now be visible to you and now be hidden, and this will happen quickly, very quickly. Then you should take three of the aforesaid pills, and cast them into the fire, and say, "Hantaraceret hantaraceret." [\[395\]](#) Repeat these words ten times. Then you will see that man clearly, and make your petition to him; and it will be effectually fulfilled.

When the Moon is in Pisces. When the Moon is in Pisces, and you wish to attract her virtue and power, take one and a fifth pounds of hemp juice, and the same amount of the sap of the plane tree, and mix them together. You should extract these fluids from the plants when the Sun is in Virgo and Mercury is luminous and direct in motio; and the extraction should be done in a marble mortar. When this is done, add four ounces of mastic, two ounces each of amber and camphor, one ounce of alkali, [\[396\]](#) and ten ounces of sarcocolla. All these are to be well blended together, and to them you should add half a pound of the blood of a deer beheaded with a brass knife.

When all this has been mixed together, put it into a glass vessel. Then go to a place where there is a spring of flowing water, and carry the aforesaid glass vessel to the spring by its handle. Then take one thurible, and put it on a stone in the midst of the water of the aforesaid spring, so that there is flowing water all around the thurible. Then set fire burning in the thurible; and as it burns, open the mouth of the glass vessel, and empty the aforesaid vessel into the fire, that is, a little at a time, until all of it has been poured out into the fire. Then offer your sacrifice. The servant of the Moon will then appear to you, to whom you should make your petition, and it will be brought to you effectually.

Great miracles and great effects, according to the Hindus, are in suffumigations, which they call calcitarat; and with them are worked the effects of the seven planets. These suffumigations ought to be used according to the nature of the planet to which the petition corresponds.

First, of Saturn. When you wish to work by means of Saturn, fast for seven days, beginning on the Lord's day. On the seventh day, that is, Saturday, behead a black crow, and say, "In the name of Anzil, [\[397\]](#) who is placed with Saturn. You, Anzil, who are the angel of Saturn! I conjure you by the Lord of high heaven that you will hear my petition and my desire." Then work with a calcitarat for what you will.

When you wish to work by means of Jupiter, fast for seven days as above, beginning on a Friday. At the end of those days, that is, on Thursday, behead a lamb and eat its liver, and say, "You, Roquiel, [\[398\]](#) the angel who is placed with Jupiter the fortunate and good, and in the greater fortune, perfect and lovely! By the Lord of high heaven, I conjure you that you will receive my prayer and petition, deigning to grant that which I ask you to perform." Then work with a calcitarat for what you will. The figures of Jupiter are these:

When you wish to work by means of Mars, fast for seven days beginning on a Wednesday. At the end of the seven days, that is, on Tuesday, behead a spotted cat, and say, "You, Zemeyel, [\[399\]](#) angel of Mars, you are strong and powerful and the lord of burning fire and warriors and lawsuits! I conjure you by the Lord of high heaven that you receive my petition and do such and such for me, so as to accomplish it effectually." Here speak your petition, and work with a calcitarat for whatever you seek. These are the figures of Mars:

Now when you wish to work by means of the Sun, you should fast for seven days as before, beginning on a Monday. On the last day, that is, the Lord's day, behead a young calf and eat its liver, and say, "You, Yebil, [\[400\]](#) angel of the Sun, the light of Him who is the goodness of the world, lord of radiance and light; he who is perfect fortune, and by him misfortune and detriment are made. I conjure you by the Lord of high heaven that you do this for me, and fulfill this my petition." Then ask for what you wish, and work with a calcitarat for what you desire. These are the figures of the Sun:

When you wish to work by means of Venus, fast beginning on a Saturday until the following Friday. On Friday, behead a white dove, but on the fourth day eat its liver, and say, "You, Anbetayl, [\[401\]](#) angel of Venus, fortunate and beautiful! By the Lord of high heaven, I conjure you, that you do this for me and accomplish my petition." Ask for what you wish, and work with a calcitarat for what you seek. These are the figures of Venus:

When you wish to work by means of Mercury, fast for seven days, as above, beginning on a Thursday. On the last day, that is, Wednesday, behead a black and white rooster and eat its liver, and say, "You, Arquil, [\[402\]](#) angel of Mercury, lord of noble and good qualities! By the Lord of high heaven, I conjure you, that you will do and fulfill this for me." Here say your petition, and work with a calcitarat. These are the figures of Mercury:

When you wish to work by means of the Moon, you should fast for seven days beginning on a Tuesday. On the last day, that is, Monday, behead a sheep and eat its liver, and say, "You, Cahil, [\[403\]](#) angel of the Moon, whose key is goodness and whose principle is rapidity! By the Lord of high heaven, I conjure you, that you do this for me and accomplish this my petition." Say your petition, and work with a calcitarat for that which you desire. These are the figures of the Moon:

All of the aforementioned sages of old knew these workings, and in them are many effects in working magic, that is, in miraculous suffumigations and images. Many of the Chaldeans, who dwelt in the Promised Land and who at that time were called Capti,[404] were virtuosi in these workings. Of these workings, a great many are found in the book called The Chaldean Agriculture. Abenvasia, who translated this book, published all these works. We, however, in this book of ours, intend to recount some of them.

Chapter Three

What the Chaldeans held to be the profundities and secrets of this science, and what they said about it

The Chaldeans, indeed, were those magi who made themselves preeminent in this science and these workings; and they are held to have been entirely perfect in this science. They themselves assert that Hermes first constructed a certain house of images, from which he used to measure of the flow of the Nile at the Mountains of the Moon; but this house was made of the Sun.[405] He used to hide himself there from men in such a way that no one who was with him was able to see him.

He also it was who built, in the east of Egypt, a city twelve miles in length, in which he built a certain citadel that had four gates in its four quarters. At the eastern gate he put the image of an eagle, at the western gate the image of a bull, at the southern gate the image of a lion, and at the northern gate he built the image of a dog. He made certain spiritual essences enter into these, which used to speak in voices that issued from the images; nor could anyone pass through the portals without their permission. In that city he planted certain trees, in the midst of which he set up an arbor that bore the fruits of all generation.

At the summit of the citadel he caused to be built a certain tower, which attained a height of thirty cubits, and on the summit of it he commanded to be put a sphere, the color of which changed in every one of the seven days. At the end of the seven days it received the color it had at first. Every day, that city was filled with the color of that sphere, and thus the aforesaid city used to shine every day with color.

Around that tower, in a circle, water abounded, in which many kinds of fish used to live. Around the city he placed diverse and changing images, by means of which the inhabitants of the city were made virtuous and freed from sin, wickedness and sloth. The name of this city was Adocentyn.[406] Its people were most deeply learned in the ancient sciences, their profundities and secrets, and in the science of astronomy.

I have seen, however, a certain composition to conceal people, which is made in this way. When you desire to do this, take one rabbit on the 24th night of the Arabian month,[407] and behead it facing the Moon, and continually looking at her. Suffumigate with the suffumigation of the Moon, saying the words of the Moon given above; and then say: "I call you, angelic spirit of magic and all that is hidden, you who are called Salmaquil! By this I supplicate you, who distributes your virtue and power and strength in this work, that you will deign to give what I ask of you, out of those things attributed to your power."

When you have said this, take the blood of the aforementioned rabbit, which you should mix with its bile. You should bury its body so that nobody is able to see it, because if you go away and anyone uncovers it in the daytime, that is, when the Sun is elevated above it, the spirit of the Moon will kill you. The blood, when you have taken it and mixed it with the bile, should be taken away with you and kept for use.

When you wish to hide yourself and be seen by nobody, take some of the blood and bile mixed as above, in the hour of the Moon, and anoint your face with it; and do not cease to say the aforementioned words of the Moon, because while you say them you will make yourself totally hidden from the sight of others, and in this way you will be able to achieve whatever you desire. When, however, you wish to be seen and become visible again to others, cease to say the same words, and wash your face, and anoint it with the brain of the aforesaid rabbit, and say, "You, O spirit of the Moon, reveal me and make me appear to people." Then everyone will see you. This is among the works of the Moon, and is considered one of the great secrets and profundities of this science.

Chapter Four

The images and reasonings that greatly further this science

All that has been said up to this point in this book of ours, we have repeated from the sayings of the ancient sages and their books discussing this science and work, and extracted from these same sources. He who reads these books, however, and closely studies them, and grasps all that we have said up to this point, will truly understand and recognize the labor that we have done in compiling this book out of diverse books dealing with this science, which are the foundations of this work.

One of the most perfect books of this science that we have found is a volume that was revealed by Hermes the sage at the founding of Babylon, and in this was a book of aphorisms called The Secret of Secrets.[\[408\]](#) From it we have selected 45 aphorisms[\[409\]](#) which are considered of great value in this science and these workings.

The first of them is this: If you work on those things which pertain to a planet, and draw upon those things that are of the nature of the planet with which you desire to work, and do not depart from this, you will have the greatest assistance in attracting the strength, virtue, and power of that planet.

2. Ask from the Sun to be feared and have glory, the command of armies, courage, rule over lords, the destruction of kings, the lighting of fires, and the virtue of shining light into shadows.

3. Ask from the Moon agility of motion, the movement of waters, the virtue of making known what is secret, extinguishing fires, diminishing whatever can be set in motion, and separating those who are of a united opinion.

4. Ask from Saturn the hindering of motion, the concealment of purity, the destruction of cities, humility of the heart, and quieting of waters.

5. Ask from Jupiter increase of riches, beautifying of dreams, fleeing from sloth, forsaking sorrows, labors and strife, and making journeys safely either by sea or by land.

6. Ask from Mars the conquest of enemies, fortitude of heart, causing evil animals to hunger and prepare themselves, lighting fires, arranging wars, and having victory over enemies.

7. Ask from Venus the desire for copulation, the virtue of causing loves and enthusiasms and expelling sorrow and sloth, invigorating the appetite, increasing generation, multiplying children, extinguishing fire, and being safe from animals.[\[410\]](#)

8. You should make many suffumigations, have perfect faith, fast often, utter many prayers, choose a place appropriate to the work, and observe the aspects of the planets. These are the foundations of magical workings.

9. Your petition will be quickly fulfilled if the planet to which you make your petition is the lord of your nativity; without this, it will be harder for your petition to proceed to its proper conclusion.

10. Spirits have the power to strengthen the effects of a planet and ameliorate its qualities, or to the contrary, to lessen and worsen its effects and scatter its powers.

11. If the ascendant differs from the nature of the petition, the petition will not be fulfilled, nor will prayer attain that which it seeks.

12. The images of the fixed stars are considered more enduring in their effects than the images of those things that are capable of retrograde motion.[\[411\]](#)

13. If you do a planetary working with the aid of some fixed star of the same nature, it will be more complete and more perfect because it will have the vigor of the planet and the endurance of the fixed star.

14. When the ascendant, the petition, and the planet are of one nature, and you aid yourself therein with a fixed star, and you have firm belief and will, your petition will swiftly be fulfilled, and it will be strengthened from the vigor of the planet.

15. The fixed star Altair assists with movement, while Vega helps with rest.

16. Diligently study the conjunctions of the planets, for this work is very greatly augmented by them.

17. In the aspects of the planets, as much as in their conjunctions, the foundations of images consist.

18. Put the significator at the midheaven, in its house or exaltation, and see to it that there is a fortitude on the ascendant.

19. Assist your work with the Sun when you wish to conquer and surpass someone; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

20. Assist your work with the Moon when you wish to retain something; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

21. Assist your work with Saturn when you wish to bring down something, and to cause evil; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

22. Assist your work with Jupiter when you wish to ascend to good things; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

23. Assist yourself with Mars when you wish to win, in peace as well as in war; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

24. Assist yourself with Venus when you wish to seek love and friendship; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

25. Assist yourself with Mercury when you wish to know and understand, or to expel moisture; then your petition will more swiftly be completed and will increase.

26. Delay in results from a petition comes from an error in your performance of the working, or your lack of faith, or disorder in the structure of the working.

27. Workings done with the suffumigations and prayers proper to them are better than those in which the suffumigations are insufficient and the will is divided.

28. The light of the Sun and the projection of its rays interfere with the spirits of the nocturnal planets.

29. The darkness of night and the stillness of motion interfere with the spirits of the diurnal planets. Thus you ought to comply with each planet according to its timing, and according to that which is proper to it.

30. A heavy planet, while it is slower, has a more powerful effect than a lighter planet, though the latter has quicker effects.

31. You should not seek union from Mars, just as you should not seek separation from Venus; do not seek anything from the planets that deviates from their natures and their paths.

32. You may work with comets in those things that pertain to them, when they appear, in the same manner as fixed stars.

33. Seek from Mercury what is governed by the sign in which it is placed, and invoke the Moon along with it. In this way you will have two qualities.
34. You should invoke Mercury for illnesses of the head, according to their diverse qualities.
35. In workings of Mercury, you may seek quickness of the tongue when he is in his own house.
36. It sometimes happens that those things that pertain to Mars are received by the Sun, and likewise that the things pertaining to the Sun are received by Mars.
37. It sometimes happens that those things that pertain to the Moon are received by Venus and the things pertaining to Venus are received by the Moon.
38. The Sun abhors those things that pertain to Saturn, and the things that pertain to the Sun are abhorrent to Saturn.
39. Venus abhors those things pertaining to Jupiter, and the things that pertain to Venus are abhorrent to Jupiter.
40. The Moon abhors things pertaining to Mars and Mars abhors things pertaining to the Moon.
41. Jupiter abhors things pertaining to Mars, and Mars abhors things pertaining to Jupiter.
42. Mars also abhors things pertaining to Venus, and Venus abhors things pertaining to Mars.
43. Mercury abhors things pertaining to Jupiter and Jupiter abhors things pertaining to Mercury.
44. It may be seen from the opinions of the sages that the two infortunes are inimical to each other because of the diversity and discord between their essential natures.

All these things you ought to know and understand perfectly. We have chosen these aphorisms out of the works of the aforesaid sage. We have also chosen the following ten aphorisms from the book of Ptolemy named The Centiloquium.[\[412\]](#)

The first of these is: The astrologer can hold back and oppose many of the effects of the stars and their natures if he knows them and their works and understands their effects. He can make it happen those things receptive to the stars receive his influences before they receive those of the stars.

2. The spirit of the magician furthers the effects of the heavens just as the harvests of nature, that is, in the way that harvests are furthered by plowing and cultivating the earth.

3. The forms of this composite world are obedient to the forms of heaven, and from this, those who are learned in magical arts command that forms be made when the planets are in the equivalent celestial forms, when they wished to understand this science.

4. You may make use of the infortunes, and help yourself with them to achieve your desires, just as physicians are helped by carefully making use of poisonous substances in combination with others.

5. The combination of two substances in one thing embraces both substances and their nativities. If there is a similarity in them, there will be a union between them; and whichever one of them is in the stronger place will gain the primacy and lordship, and whichever is in the weaker place will be its servant and receiver.

6. Friendship and enmity are received from the places of the Sun and Moon, in their origin and permutation, and from the harmony or diversity of the ascendants of the friends or enemies. Obedient signs, however, are stronger in friendship.

7. In founding a city, make use of fixed stars, and in building a house, make use of planets. The inhabitants of a city founded when Mars or another star of its nature is at the midheaven, though, will perish by fire and sword.

8. All that is and becomes in this world, that is, by means of generation and corruption, is caused by the 120 conjunctions[\[413\]](#) that the seven planets make. In all the effects of these conjunctions, the receptive form is to be observed; for from this form, the effect is completed.

9. The Sun is the source of the animal power; the Moon of the natural power; Saturn of the retentive power; Jupiter of the power of growth; Mercury of the power of judgment; Mars of the power of sharpness and anger; and Venus is the source of the power of desire.

10. Mars, Mercury, and Venus in nativities signify the will and manners of those nativities and display their works and magisteries.

In the books of philosophy published by Plato we find the saying that none besides Jupiter reveals the truth. In another place he says that as blood, choler, black bile, and phlegm are the elements of the body, the virtues of these elements proceed from the planets, and so the action of one humor on another and the reception of one humor by another in the beginning of generation is from the planets. In still another place, he says that when truth is lacking in the science of astrology,[\[414\]](#) it is because the time has not been determined, or the place, or it happens because of discord between the active factors, or the astrologer has made an error. On this account, however, the demonstrations of astrology are different from those derived from omens or the flight of birds, because in these latter, what is to come reveals itself. Because of this, both that which occurs, and that which is not appears.

In the book of philosophy by Hippocrates we find: When Jupiter is the lord of the solar year, in that year there will be few illnesses and much health, and the generations of animals will be multiplied.

We find this in the books of Aristotle: Kingship is attributed to Saturn, justice to Jupiter, eagerness to Venus, judgment to Mercury, labors to the Moon, and pride to Mars.

You ought to know, however, that we recite all the aforesaid in this place only so that you will learn and understand what the aforesaid sages used to think concerning the profundities and secrets of this art, and that all of them were as one in this, that from these things they were able to attain the goal they desired.

Johannicius son of Isaac translated the book of Aristotle, the master of the Greeks, which I have seen, and I propose to repeat here some of what he said concerning the sayings of the wise and the profundities of their judgment as well as the conclusions of their intellects, which you ought to understand. There is a certain thing in the first volume of his book which I have read, and I will repeat part of it here.

Some of the sages, discussing this art, have said: Every working and every magistracy has a door through which, by understanding, they may be entered; and each of them has a stair, by which an ascent may be made to the thing desired. They have also said this: None may attain what they seek without order and discipline. And this: When you whine about something, a danger is born in it.[\[415\]](#)

All the wise philosophers in this science have said: The art of magic must be given by God and by the celestial virtues. They that say this say also that no one can be a magician unless he is illuminated by knowledge, because of the difficulties of the art, as well as the profundities that he must be able to understand. Yet this work and science, which has been perfected by the sages, and which must be studied thoroughly in the right way, is revealed to everyone.

The beginning of this science is the knowledge of the figures of the stars ascending in the heavens, and to know what figure is represented by them, and is revealed apart from others, and that it is not figured by them except to perfect another figure by augmenting its members. When, however, you have learned these figures and their natures, according to the nature of the terrestrial things that pertain to their nature, that is, in the figures of living things according to their harmony and proportion with celestial figures, you will be able to work. If you carefully attend to the proper harmony, and harmoniously join figures together and prepare them, they will be the first matter and foundation of this work.

When images are fashioned in this way, they will be lasting and complete in their effects, and if they are not fashioned in this way, their effects will be destroyed by the destruction of their terrestrial material and the destruction of the composition thereof. Durability comes from the fixed stars, but images have a better nature and a better effect when they are made with the planets, and the effects are more durable when a planet aspects a fortune, which augments the same with the strength and potency it draws to Earth from the heavens.

There are certain words among the names of God that make spirits descend from the heavens to the Earth. Those who work with these names and words, if they are not wise and learned in the nature of spiritual and celestial things, will be killed by the descending power of the spirit; and for this reason no one ought to work with these names except those who are known to be wise and have received grace. In magical workings there are also words that work in the same manner, but these magical words and names are not perfect unless the virtue, commandment and grace of God are joined to them. When this is done, the highest heavens descend and are joined to terrestrial matter, all the way down to the center of the Earth.

An image primarily works according to the natural substance from which it is supposed to be made, but it cannot be made without words that have magical virtues. As far as you can, see that there is no enmity or discord between natures and figures in the properties of the work. For example, a magister who makes the image of a lion ought to be brave and vigorous, nor should he fear any animal that exists in nature; on the contrary, he ought to be a man who has encountered a lion, and knows and understands its nature, and realizes that others may be led by it into anger and ill will. Here, however, the ancient sages are not entirely in accord; but when the foregoing things are done as we have said, they will achieve the desired end.

Likewise, when you wish to create such an image, you should do this at a time when the corresponding animal is active and when its nature is invigorated; for in this way the power of the image will be strengthened. Likewise, see to it that during the time in which you make the image, no accident happens to you. For example, with the lion: do not make the image of a lion at a time when a fever happens to one; for in this case the work if the image will be deficient in virtue.

All the motions of the heavens are moved in terrestrial figures by the virtue of God. For this reason you should observe the motion of the star from which you wish the image to receive durability of virtue, so that it is not hindered while the image is being made. Likewise, you should observe two figures, that is, the degree of the sign of the planet that governs the work of the figure, and the motion thereof, so that they are not hindered by anything, because when the planet moves freely in its heaven, the virtues of the image are moved, proceeding, returning, rising, and setting in the same way. Likewise pay the closest attention to conjunctions, oppositions, and aspects in constructing images, and be sure that their figures are manifested in heaven, and the contraries to the same be hidden. You should know that if you do not observe the aforesaid rules in constructing images, their effects will be imperfect.

Geber Abenhayen, speaking of this science, said: The work of images is similar to the effects of nature, nor can it be done without the necessity of knowing the things pertaining to the stars among animals, trees, and stones; understanding the aspects of the planets and stars, and also the signs, to terrestrial places; the science of astronomy, the motions of the heavens, the rulerships and exaltations of the planets, their longitudes and latitudes, the mansions of the Moon; the nature of places on earth and their waters, soils, rains, snows, and their lands, seas and seasons, and what places are far from the equator; which living things generate more of their kind, and which effects of living things, whether reptiles or others, are more permanent; and when living things are not generated and when they are generated; for in constructing images with this knowledge, the work will be easy, because no difficulties will arise therein.

In making the aforesaid natures (that is, in workings with images) it should be kept in mind that images made of stone are more durable than those made of vegetable or animal substances, because wood burns readily and animals putrefy. The effects upon animals are twofold, that is, one is to gather them and increase their number, and the other is to disperse and repel them. These are appropriate for different times, as they involve different motions, that is, there is a time for gathering and growth, and a time for dispersing and repelling. This may be considered under the heading of the opposition of degrees. In stones a certain supreme secret is hidden, that is, when any animal, that is, if you want it to depart, is hot in its nature, the stone ought to be cold; if the animal is moist, the stone ought to be dry, and vice versa. From this it should be understood that if you wish vipers and wasps to flee, the work ought to be done in cornelian and diamond and the like; but if they are cold by nature, such as scorpions, beetles, flies, lice, and things similar to them, work with hot stones such as malachite and crystal, and in bronze and gold and the like.

This is for the working to make them flee. Workings to draw and increase them ought to be done with things that are harmonious and pertinent to them, as in working with vipers, you should work with gold and bronze and similar things. All this happens because of the harmony of complexion, the direction of movement, and the diversity of conjunctions and substances. The figure and form ought to be in the form and figure of the animal for which it is made, as a figure for mice in the shape of a mouse, one for serpents in the shape of a serpent, or one for scorpions in the shape of a scorpion.

I say to you further that, if the quantity of stone of which an image is composed is large (that is, between an ounce and a pound), the virtue and power of it will be able to reach from the place where it is for a hundred leagues. If it contains a combination of things in its figure, however, its nature will have no motion or effect except that which terminates in its own place, though its motion or effect will not be limited to those of its substance or the nature of the bodies that compose it, for spirits have a wider range than those bodies that contain little spirit.

Plato said this: bodies and spirits are contraries, because out of the life of each one proceeds the burden of the other. He wrote after this: You ought to endure the death of your body for the sake of the life of your spirit, that is, the body should be the handmaid of the spirit, and should serve the spirit in its generation and in all its works. Do not allow your spirit to serve your body in any way, nor kill the dead on account of the life of the living, nor kill that which is living out of love of the dead.

They then asked him: how is it that the spirit that moves the heart is killed? To this he responded: Seeing that nature, by its powers, moves the rational and animal spirits according to the manifest similarity of nature that is in them, according to the body, this is therefore the spirit that ordains friendship, love, and victory. At times thereafter, nature joins the divided parts, and at other times, it divides the united parts. Thence, when nature is moved in a uniting motion (I mean to speak here of the conjunction of parts), then two spirits are joined in the love that is proper to spirit, and they are united with the rational intellect. That which is spiritual is first, and thereby it may behold the cause of this world; and it is thus made pure and simple. When nature is moved by a separating motion, however, it attracts to itself an animal spirit and enters into friendship with the corporeal.

Thus in the fulfillment of its victory the rational spirit rejoices and reigns on account of its similarity to the subtle, by which, because of its rational ordering, it is affected. The animal spirit likewise rejoices when parts and hearts are divided, on account of its similarity to the division of natural parts. This is because spirit, when it is in itself, has marvelous forms which a spirit attracted toward nature cannot have; and thence the motive power of nature helps in its bodily substance (I mean to speak here of the bodies of hearts, and their weight), and thus perishes the moving spirit of those figures that are not able to be attracted by reason. Spirit attracts them instead by figures and subtle motions and visions of the eye and other members of the body.

You, however, who propose to labor at this science, should accustom your spirit and your thoughts to those things in which these men used to exercise themselves, and so struggle with your spirit that you may attain the things that the aforementioned men attained. This indeed is what the ancient sages used to teach about spirit, waking and sleeping, saying: Make your spirits accustomed to visions, because they can occur to you often, and by them may be gained in sleep what you will hardly ever be able to attain while awake.

This should be understood: when the manifest senses are awake, the hidden senses are debilitated, nor are they able to accomplish their effects. When the manifest senses sleep and do not function, however, then the hidden senses function, according to the vigor of contemplation, imagination, memory, and judgment that exists in the spirit. Then the vigor of judgment is simple, nor is it impeded by any impediment. Then, heat is hidden away, and while it is hidden, the superfluities of the body melt away. You who seek after this science should know, however, that when you accustom your spirit to the aforesaid, then in time, visions will be made manifest to you, and it will be necessary for you to understand in seeking them.

Chapter Five The ten sciences that are necessary to this art, and how this science is helped by them, and what is the foundation of the science of magic

The ancient sages who discovered this art, not without searching with continual labor and testing all things, while waking and sleeping, persevered until they attained what they desired. In following this path, they learned and understood two conclusions, and the first of these is that there are ten arts you must know, of which five are considered necessary to the student of law, and five to the student of philosophy.[\[416\]](#)

The first of these comprises agriculture, seafaring, and governing the people, because these are the principal arts in governing cities and kingdoms. These cannot be learned except from the ancient sciences, which may be found in a great many books.

After this is the art of leading soldiers, commanding armies, engaging in combats and battles, calling animals and birds, and deceiving them.[\[417\]](#) These may also be found in a great many books.

After these are the civilized arts by which people are helped; and among these are grammar, the division of languages, legal reasoning, making reasons and rulings understood,[\[418\]](#) and all that proceeds from these, such as writing and everything that pertains to them, buying and selling, and so forth. These may be found in a great many books.

Thereafter follows arithmetic, and all books by which numbers and similar things are known. Next in order is geometry, which consists of theory and practice; from this comes surveying, lifting heavy objects, making machines, leading water from one place to another, aerial instruments, and making and using burning mirrors. Next comes astronomy, by which the course of the planets and the judgment of the stars are known. After this music is distinguished, under which is included singing, playing, and writing notes.

After this is dialectic, which is divided into eight books, into which Aristotle the sage invites us to enter.[\[419\]](#)

After this is medicine, which is divided into two parts, that is, theory and practice.

After this follow the natural sciences, which Aristotle and other wise philosophers have set forth. About this, a great many books can be found, which require many glosses and much exposition; of these the first is called the Oydus of Nature; second, the Book of Heaven and Earth; third, the Book of Generation and Corruption; fourth, the Book of Signs that Appear in the Heavens, fifth, the Book of Minerals, sixth, the Book of Vegetables; seventh, the Book of the Motion of Animals (that is, from one place to another).[\[420\]](#)

After this follows metaphysics, of which Aristotle wrote in thirty books. Whoever thoroughly understands and perfectly learns these things is a complete sage, and will achieve perfection in the things he desires.

After this, the two conclusions we have mentioned follow directly out of the aforesaid ten arts; for whoever does not know these ten arts cannot attain to these conclusions. From what we have said so far, you ought to rouse yourself, and ascend by necessity to the knowledge of all the sciences listed above, because when you make yourself perfect in them, you will attain what the ancient sages attained, and you will understand the workings of the sages and the spiritual sciences, and you will accomplish what they used to accomplish. And when your effort toward spirit equals that which used to be in your animal powers, you will receive all this from the grace of the Highest. This is that which is comprehended in the secret sayings of the prophets.

From this follows love; for in love, the greatest powers are found. Note, however, that love is twofold; there is love acquired through virtue, and love imbued with vice. It is of love acquired through virtue that we speak here, and you ought to seek to acquire none other. Love imbued with vice is corporeal love of a flawed and material form; from this kind of love, therefore, you ought to flee as far as you can.

It is said in the books of the wise that the proportionate and harmonious binding of spirit consists primarily of love. The human spirit is divided into three parts, that is: the animal spirit, the natural spirit, and the rational spirit. If the natural spirit of a man has conquered the others, he will be a lover of such things as food and drink, and nothing else; if the animal spirit has conquered the others, he will be a lover of nothing but conquering and surpassing others; while if the rational spirit conquers, he will be a lover of nothing but intellect, goodness, and knowledge.

This happens, however, only because a certain planet presides over his nativity, and such a planet is called the lord of the nativity. Thus you should know that if the Moon or Venus is the lord of someone's nativity, that person will be a lover of women and enjoyments. If the Sun or Mars is the lord of the nativity, that person will be a lover of overcoming and defeating; but if it be Jupiter or Mercury, such a person will be a lover of knowledge and learning, and understanding good things, and goodness and justice. Because of the foregoing, whatever someone is will be as visible in his nature as in his love.

Love which turns toward terrestrial things is acquired by sight, and by means of sight it continues to grow, as wheat in the earth grows from its seed, and as a tree when it is planted, and as animal sperm when it is received by the womb. Sight, therefore, is like a raw material in this, for in sight is found the principle of this kind of love, so that by being near the beloved, and beholding her face, this kind of love grows and increases, and when the lover is united with her, their spirits are made one. This is corporeal love between two spirits, in which the harmony of friendship in them is called love. If it is love in the rational spirit, however, the lover will be delighted by that which is of the same kind, that is, wisdom, knowledge, goodness, stable virtues, and eternal things, of which it is said there is no end; and this love of goodness, nobility and exaltation is deservedly attributed to the rational spirit. The other loves of which we have spoken are evil and deserve to be forsaken, because in them is wickedness of spirit, and from such friendship and such unification of spirits, and the continuation thereof, it may be seen to be corrupted and destroyed.

Plato, in his book On The Soul,[\[421\]](#) says this: dry and melancholic complexions and dry fountains of infirmity and corruption are factors which must be seen in order to be conversant with them. By them, one becomes similar to a dry animal who remains in hot, dry, mountainous terrain. Such places destroy and corrupt whoever comes near them or lingers in them, and do so very quickly; and they even destroy and corrupt by their appearance those who look at them. According to this, one who looks with malignity in his complexion and spirit destroys and corrupts that at which he gazes.

Chapter Six

How the suffumigations of the stars ought to be made, and certain compositions necessary to this science

A certain sage from the land of India, who was exceptionally well versed in this science, combined composite suffumigations and terrestrial natures with celestial natures. The Hindus used to work with suffumigations in all their workings and effects, and by them they used to attract the spirits of the planets and make them enter into whatever they wished, and by this means made them accomplish whatever they desired. Such workings, however, are not properly done by themselves, but they are convenient for their singular effects in the workings appropriate to each of the planets, of which we have so often spoken in this book. Accordingly, these workings are to be combined with suffumigations.

The Suffumigation of Saturn. Take the fruit of mandrake and dried olive leaves, 100 ounces each; grains of black mirobalan and dried black pepper, ten ounces each; the dried brains of black crows and cranes, 30 ounces each; dried blood of pigs and apes, 40 ounces each, all well ground and mixed together. From them make pills weighing half an ounce each, and while making these, invoke the spiritual powers of Saturn, that is, with that which we have given in Book III of this volume, chapter 6. Then compress them and save them for use.

The Suffumigation of Jupiter. Take flowers of balsam and myrtle, both dried, ten ounces each; shelled nuts and shelled hazelnuts, both dried, four ounces each; brains of chickens, doves, and geese, all dried, 40 ounces each; dried blood of peacocks and camels, 20 ounces each; nutmeg and camphor, 1/2 ounce each, and diligently see to it that the blood we have mentioned in these suffumigations is not extracted from the hearts of the animals. All these, having been well ground as said above, are mixed together; and do everything as we have said above concerning the suffumigation of Saturn.

The Suffumigation of Mars. Take red asafoetida, xenab, and terebinth, 40 grains each; giant fennel and red auripigment, four ounces each; sparrow brains and dried scorpions, 20 ounces each; 40 ounces of leopard's blood; and ten ounces of grease rendered from a red serpent. All these being well ground, mix them together, and do everything we have said above with the others.

The Suffumigation of the Sun. Take ten ounces each of spikenard flowers and red and yellow sandalwood; six ounces each of cypress, thyme, and red cassia wood; two ounces of costus; 20 ounces each of eagle brains and blood, and cat brains and blood. Let them dry, and do everything with them that has been set forth above.

The Suffumigation of Venus. Take laurel twigs, pomegranate seeds, and frankincense seeds, eight ounces each; 20 ounces each of mastic and poley stems; four ounces each of henbane stems and storax; two ounces of sodium carbonate; 16 ounces each of sparrow brains and goshawk brains, and 40 ounces of dried horse brains. All these having been well ground, mix them together. and do everything with them that has been said before.

The Suffumigation of Mercury. Take 20 ounces each of henbane flowers, indigo leaves, and assari; four ounces each of amber and toad testicles; two ounces of red ammoniac; 20 ounces each of the brains of jays, hoopoes, and tortoises; and 40 ounces of donkey's blood. All these, being well dried and well ground, should be mixed together; and do with them everything that is done with the others.

The Suffumigation of the Moon. Take 100 ounces each of persimmon leaves and cinnamon leaves; 20 ounces of dried orris root and storax; ten ounces of cumin; four ounces of fat rendered from a white serpent; 20 ounces each of the brains of a white rabbit and a black cat, both dried; and 40 ounces of fox blood. All this, being well ground, should be mixed together, and you should do everything that you did with the others. Remember that the aforesaid confections of all the planets ought to be mixed with whipped honey, and pills made of them, as described for Saturn.

Whenever you make these, work with the power of the planet for which the composition is made, that is, with the spiritual power discussed in chapter 6 of Book III. Likewise, when making these compositions, continually and without ceasing say the words and prayers of that planet. Be careful also that no one else sees the suffumigations, and that the suffumigations themselves do not behold either the rays of the Sun or those of the Moon; and keep them in a chosen place, and store them in a metal vase, and this vase should be made of the metal of the planet to which the work pertains. If you do not do what is said here, the work will be ruined, and you should know that failure in this work occurs because of the operator. I will explain the remedy for all of this to you, which is that you follow these instructions so that you do not ruin the work.

A sage from the land of the Hindus, however, in a book that he wrote, revealed a certain wonder that I wish to repeat to you here; it is among the operations of Mercury, and among the profundities and secrets of the spirit of that planet, that is, of the spirit of knowledge and understanding and learning. You should know that this is one of the wonders the Hindus have in knowledge, secrets, and profundities.

When certain Hindu sages desire to preach to the people, they used to anoint themselves and their associates with this mixture; and by its virtue, spirit would abound in them, and gave them grace and virtue and fortitude above all others, so that the people used to obey them. The composition was of this kind. Take suet of jays, fat of sea crabs, suet of beef, and dried hoopoe blood, 40 ounces each; 20 ounces of amber, ten ounces each of dried pomegranate seeds and sydrac seeds, and 50 ounces of costus. All this, being well ground, should be mixed together, and as said before, while you work upon it, draw down the spirit of Mercury into it, continually repeating the prayer of Mercury as we have given it in this book of ours. When you have done all this, keep in in a vessel made of fixed mercury; and with this composition the sages already mentioned were able to do all that was just described by anointing themselves and suffumigating with it.

These are among the wonders and the secrets of their workings. When the sages of the Hindus wished to preach to the common people, they used to anoint themselves and their associates with this ointment, that by virtue of the ointment the intellectual virtue of the spirit was increased in them, and their words were devoutly received by all, and people used to be obedient to their sermons.

This next confection, however, which is for the spirit of Saturn, is made in the following way. Take 40 ounces each of pig grease and bear grease, 20 ounces each of red pepper and lupine seed, ten ounces of myrobalan seed, and 30 ounces of dried elephant blood. All this, being well ground, should be mixed together, and do everything in the order that we have said above. While you are making it, attract the spiritual and celestial virtue to it, that is, by saying the prayer of the angel of Saturn as we have given it in this book. They thus showed this confection to the spirits so that other people would not hear them and so that they would be obedient to the magicians.

I wish here to teach you a certain thing, without which the work of the suffumigations and unguents of the planets is not perfect. In this work, it is necessary for you to act so that the attraction of the spiritual virtue of the planet is completed most perfectly; this is kept as a supreme and profound secret. When you desire to collect the blood and brains that we have mentioned for these suffumigations and ointments, behead the animals as has been said above, and make of them a sacrifice, because by sacrifice and suffumigation the attraction of the spirits is more swift. When you wish to make such a sacrifice, put the planet whose spirit you desire to attract in its exaltation and free from the infortunes. But you should not permit the aforesaid confection to be seen by anybody, and you should keep it in a vessel of lead.

This next confection protects those who make suffumigations from being harmed by the spirits of the planets. The virtue and power of this confection extends to all workings involving the planets and speaking with their spirits; additionally, it has the greatest virtue against poisons, because it defends and protects people so that they are not harmed by the aforesaid. This composition is made in the following manner.

Take six ounces of scorpion brains, four ounces of the brain of a white dog, eight ounces each of peacock brains and quail brains, four ounces of sparrow brains, two ounces of goshawk brains, eight ounces of the blood of a male hedgehog, and 20 ounces each of donkey brains and hoopoe brains. Mix all of the aforesaid brains together and allow them to dry. Then grind them, and add to them four ounces each of white and yellow sandalwood, cinnamon, and spikenard; one ounce of giant fennel; 20 ounces of amber; six ounces of ammoniac; ten ounces of frankincense; four ounces of nutmeg; two ounces of camphor; 16 ounces of quie (which is a certain kind of gum); and four ounces of mandrake. All of this, being well ground, should be mixed together, and blend it with oil of centaury. Make seven round pills out of the confection, and dry them in the shade.

While you are making this confection of the planets, do not cease saying their prayers and those of their angels. When you have made the pills as we have said, keep them hidden in a vessel made of all seven of the metals of the seven planets,[\[422\]](#) because the spirits of the planets remain with them continually. Whenever you desire to perform a working of any of the seven planets, or any other celestial working, keep one of these pills with you while you do it, for while you have it with you, the spirits of the planets will not be able to harm you. The ancient sages used to protect themselves from the aforesaid danger with this mixture, and thence you should know that it is most secret and most useful; therefore keep it well and hide it.

The ointment that follows is found in the books of the sages, which call it the Ointment of the Sun. The virtue of it is to receive grace, honor, exaltation, and love from kings, soldiers and aristocrats. Take one phial of glass, and put into it the best oil of roses, pure and clear. On the day of Mars, standing upright on your feet, face the Sun, which should be in the signs of Aries or Leo and in the degree of the ascendant, with the Moon aspecting him with an amicable aspect. Then take the aforesaid phial in your right hand, and holding it, with your face to the Sun, say: "May God bless you, planet, replete with your light and goodness! How beautiful and good you shine forth in your origin and your resplendent spirit! You are indeed the Sun, and you rule the cosmos with your light and your spirit and your vigor. You are the candle of heaven, you are the light of the universe, you are the maker of all that is generated, and these powers are infused into you by God. For you are the Sun, who searches the four corners of the cosmos from your turning heaven. To you light and beauty are granted by divine power; you grant your luminous light or life to the Moon unveiled from her beginning to her end.

"I ask of you therefore that you grant to me, in this oil, friendship, benevolence, and a friendly reception, so that my friendship and the will of all hearts shall run together, by which I shall be able to have love and grace from kings and greater and lesser persons. Let this be true of me. I ask you and conjure you by your dominion that the friendship and love for me in their hearts, tongues, and thrones shall be everywhere, and put me in the places of their joy, so that my appearance and friendship shall please them in all the joys of which they are accustomed to partake, and seeing my presence there they shall honor me and be happy.

"I conjure you, Lord, by the angel Ancora,[\[423\]](#) who dwells in the fourth heaven, and by Anehutyora, Actarie, Ahudememora, Behartyon, Actarie, Ahude,[\[424\]](#) that you shall place love and benevolence from the hearts of kings, lords, and great persons in this oil which I hold in my hand, that they may seek me eagerly, and that I may not have an enemy in the universe, and indeed, that all may please me and love me obedient to my will, nor shall they transgress against my precepts, but rather seek my grace.

"I conjure you, Lord, by Behibilyon and Celyuberon,[\[425\]](#) who dwell in the fifth heaven, that you will open the hearts of these persons to me and bind their tongues so that they are unable to say anything evil of me, nor be able to find anything of that kind in words or deeds, and make this binding for now and forever. I conjure you, Lord, by Zauceb,[\[426\]](#) who is the angel of the sixth heaven, that you stop up the mouths of my enemies, or even more, that you pour love for me and delight in me into their hearts.

"I conjure you, Lord, by Barhaot,[\[427\]](#) who dwells in the seventh heaven, that you grant toward me love, goodwill, a good reputation and a good reception in the hearts of the whole universe, and grant to me a good reception and perfect love from all people, as well by day as by night, by your spirit and grace. I conjure you by the name that gives life to all loves and friendships, and that unites and conjoins the hearts of all lovers, that you will pour enduring love and benevolence toward me into all their hearts for now and forever. Amen."

Say this prayer twelve times, and observe the foregoing conditions. Thereafter keep this oil very carefully. When you wish to enter into the presence of kings, lords, and exalted people, anoint your face with this oil, and what you wish, you will attain, and you will see marvels in your friendly reception by the aforesaid. This working I found written in the books of the Hindus, and it is continually in use in all manner of business among them.

Chapter Seven

The things of the magical art found in the book The Chaldean Agriculture which Abudaer Abemiexie translated from the Chaldean language into Arabic

In the book The Chaldean Agriculture, which Abubaer Abenvaxie translated from the Chaldean language into Arabic, we have found many workings of the art of magic and a great many other things of the same kind, which we have written in this place.

On a certain page of this book, it is recounted that a gardener, while he slept one night beneath a laurel tree, heard this laurel speak to him and say, "O man, see if in this garden of yours there is a tree that surpasses my beauty and virtue; for indeed you will find no one who can say that he has found a tree better, lovelier, more honorable, and more precious than I am." To this the gardener responded, "Why do you say this, and what signifies this saying to me?" The tree said, "That you will recognize me as such I speak to you, and that you will honor me above other trees. Know that I am honored and prized by Jupiter, who delights in me and honors me. Therefore I speak to you, that you will honor me above other trees, and worship me at opportune times, for I will reveal to you a marvelous working suitable to others (and most useful to those who may come after you). Therefore rise up in the middle of the night and put oil of laurel seeds[428] on your hands, and you should also anoint your face with it. Then stand, raising your face to look toward the heaven of Jupiter, and say: "O Jupiter, who is the fortune of fortunes! I ask you by the praise and honor that this laurel tree offers to you that you will grant me fifteen more years of life after this day." When you have done this, until the aforesaid time you will remain safely alive. Truly I say to you that if you do this working, you will find it to be true, nor will it fail you, and in this way you may help yourself. By this working you will be able to know the honor and love that I have from Jupiter, and how much he delights in me and permits me."

In the aforementioned book, in discussing the properties of this tree, it also says this: Adam the prophet said that if you take fourteen seeds of the laurel tree, and grind them to a powder when they are perfectly dry, and put the powder in a very clean dish with wine vinegar and beat it with a stick of fig wood, when you wish someone to be possessed by a demon, give that person some of this powder in a drink. He will appear to be greatly vexed by a demon, but no one else will be able to perceive it. The cure: give him three ordinary radishes with all their leaves, and make sure none of them are left uneaten; when they reach his stomach and remain there for a little while, he will be cured of the foregoing.

It is proven above in the same place, concerning the laurel tree, that if you take the leaves of the laurel and raise them in your hands after touching them to the ground, then put them over your ears, while they remain there, you will not become drunk, nor will you have a headache, no matter how much unmixed wine you drink.

Of this tree, in the same book, it says: Take laurel leaves and lime or vitriol[429], one pound each; let them be pulverized together and mixed with strong vinegar. If you anoint your hands with this, you will be able to take red hot iron in your hands because of the ointment, without suffering any harm.

Again in the same book it says: if you take boughs from the ash tree and cook with its leaves, all the insects that are in that place will gather around.

Abenvasia also recounts that the sages of magic have said that the sap of trees, their fat, and their oil, all the aforesaid exist in every kind of tree, and if one works with these words and ceremonies, they quickly received the virtue of spirit and of the ceremony. Sap indeed is more disposed than the others to receive this; for this reason those who work with tree sap using words and ceremonies, and changing the words, put anything in a drink, destroy and damage the hearts and bodies of the sages.

A certain sage, however, has said that myrtle has a power in magical ceremonies worthy of praise when it is mixed with other things. The Chaldean sages assert that those who work with this tree fashion figures of diverse animals out of its roots in the place where it grows, asserting that these are no small foundation for magical ceremonies, because from them a man who looks on them may be made in effect and spirit to have their proper form, figured and posed in their similitude. Again they say that they take the roots of this tree at someone's birth, and make from them the figure of a man or a woman, writing on it the name of the person of whom the image is constructed. From the roots they make other figures, that is, of lions, serpents, scorpions, and every other kind of noxious animal, mixed with the other forms aforementioned and placed upon them, and that they do the aforesaid at a specific and opportune time, when the planets and fixed stars are properly positioned to accomplish the foregoing. Those for whom they do these workings in that place become ill and are seen to be cruelly afflicted by some demon, losing their senses and suffering many other infirmities.

In that same book of The Chaldean Agriculture it is recounted that this tree praises itself above other trees, saying: "I am the tree of gold, and my color is like unto it; and by me people are liberated from 98 illnesses, and are cured. My oil fortifies the heart and cleans the gums, and by it the spirit is made glad, and there is no other oil that does this better than mine. I am the blessed tree. Whoever takes my branches or leaves or fruit and places them in his house will not suffer from wretched miseries or from sad thoughts, and for all the circle of that year in all his relationships he will live fearless and alert. I am indeed above all others the blessed tree; for whoever watches the Sun rise in the morning, carrying me with him in his hands, will rejoice and be glad that day. For I am the tree of Saturn, weightiest of planets; I am the tree of the greater name and great Saturn; I am the tree that makes the sorrowful rejoice; I am the tree that removes misfortune from the unfortunate; I am the tree that populates desert places, and by me the regions of Persia and the land of the black people are made fertile. I have the first among days, and the highest and most honored among planets, and the oldest among cities, and the strongest and most durable among castles, and the greatest and longest among rivers, and the coldest among winds, and the clearest among parts, and the highest among heavens, and the oldest among trees, and I obtain the noblest among qualities and the highest among relics."

Concerning this, however, a certain sage named Zeherith, who was one of the three who composed the book of The Chaldean Agriculture, said this: If anyone on the first day of the lunar month, and the first hour thereof, takes olive branches with green leaves and no yellow leaves, and carries them to his house, and keeps them until the beginning of the next moon; at the beginning of the next moon, as before, let him again take branches to his house, carrying them as before, which he should keep in the place where the first branches were. Then let him take the first and burn them until they are blackened by the heat, and he will be protected from all the evils and impediments of Saturn, and will be wholly free of them, and will be alert and joyful in his spirit and qualities, and will in no way grieve or suffer, and will profit by his work, and live a fortunate life, and will be virtuous, nor will he die except of old age. Again, he says that if anyone mixes the aforesaid olive branches with palm branches in order to work as we have said above, all who dwell in his house will be healthy until they die, and from them all cold illnesses will depart, and the light and sight of their eyes will be increased every day if they look at the aforementioned branches.

Whoever takes a fresh olive pit and cleans it of all outward dirt, perforates it, threads it on a strong black silken thread, and suspends it from that thread around the neck of any animal, that animal will not be afraid to wander alone at night, and will be alert, and will be made docile toward people. If any person is timid, and carries the aforesaid around his neck, fear will depart from him; if he is weeping, his tears will be taken away and he will receive good solace; and if he suffers from evil thoughts, they will flee away from him and good thoughts about all things will replace them.

If anyone takes nine of the aforesaid pits and cleans them of all external moisture and oil, and holding them in his hand, let him watch the Sun when he rises in the morning, and one after another holds them up as though to throw them in the Sun's face, and while doing this says: "O you Sun! Have mercy on me, and free me from the infirmities that I suffer." Let him do this seven times, with 49 of the aforesaid seeds,[\[430\]](#) and he will be cured wholly of his infirmity, even if that infirmity has lasted a long time.

If you wish that an angry person be freed from the anger he has toward you, take seventeen of the aforesaid pits, well cleaned, and wash them well in hot water and, after a little while, in cold water, and dry them very well with a clean and attractive cloth, and then anoint them with olive oil. Then put them in your left hand. Stand above a flowing river, looking at the water, and say: "O you running water, who is the contrary of burning fire! Appease such a person's anger toward me, and remove from him the ill will he has toward me; let him be so pacified toward me that he may wholly cherish me and love me." When you have done this, throw one of the aforementioned seeds into the middle of the flowing water; and say these words seventeen times in turn, and each time throw one of the aforesaid pits. When you have completed this, the anger of the one who bears it toward you will depart from him; even if it is the anger of a great king or some other great lord, he will be pacified and delight in you and receive you honorably.

If anyone takes a vessel of crystal or clear white glass, and filling it with good clear olive oil, places it before the Sun every morning and, on an empty stomach, continually observes its shadow and gazes into the oil, his vision will be invigorated and all infirmities will depart from his vision and eyes, and his heart and will will rejoice, and he will be loved and very well received by everyone who sees him.

If anyone plants flowering mallow, and continually surrounds himself with the same, and looks at its flowers, sadness and ill will and evil thoughts will be cast out of his heart, and he will be very well received.

If you wish that a spring of running water, the flow of which has diminished, will recover the same, do the following. Have a virgin girl, young and beautiful, go to the spring carrying a drum, and standing over the outflow of water, let her begin to beat the drum softly, and let her go on beating it for three hours. At the beginning of the fourth hour, another lovely and beautiful virgin should go to the same place, bringing with her a tambourine, which she should start beating, following the same beat as the drum. They should do this for the space of six hours; nine hours will pass in all, at the end of which the water of the spring will increase. Do all this in a single day, or at most in three days, and that spring will be made fit for use.

Again it says: Lovely virgin girls dressed in garments of diverse colors and carrying diverse instruments (whatever instruments they wish) before the opening of the spring go singing and drumming. Then they go around the opening of the spring at a distance of two cubits doing the same. Then over a distance of 21 cubits, one after another, they approach it drumming and draw back from it singing. They then return to circling the opening of the spring as before. Then they work by drawing back from, and then approaching the spring, that is, drumming and singing as has been said. When all this has been completed, the water of that spring will be increased that day or the next.

If anyone takes mallow leaves well ground and mixed with olive oil, and anoints his hands and body with it, if he puts his hands among bees or wasps, they will not sting him or harm him, nor will they do him any hurt.

If you wish to exterminate fleas, take white lead, quicklime, and the roots of bitter melon, grind them well and add an equal amount of asafoetida; all this should be tempered with water, and an equal amount of salt mixed with it. If you sprinkle this mixture in your home, all the fleas that dwell there will perish.

For improving vines. Take chickpeas and anoint them with olive oil, cook them, then grind them very well, and cast around a pound thereof about a vine when the fruit is becoming sour, and the sour taste will naturally depart from the vine.

For removing sorrow. Take chickpeas which you have set in the light of the Moon at night, when her light is increasing; in the morning, before the sun rises, anoint them with olive oil, and put them in water to soften them for the space of two hours. Then cook them. From all those to whom you give these to eat, all sorrow, ill will, evil thoughts, and every kind of melancholy will depart, and their hearts will rejoice in the highest virtue, and they will become joyful and alert in all things.

When clouds appear that look as though they carry hail, and someone wishes to protect his harvest from hailstorms, let him have many associates with him, of which some should carry silk, and some should have nothing in their hands, and let them go out into his field; and one by one let them throw the silk at the clouds, while the others who are without silk go about clapping their hands. All of them should make high-pitched cries, of the sort that farmers make when they want to make birds and noxious animals flee; they should do this very often. Remember, however, that there ought to be an even number of them, and the more there are, the better. This has been proven and found true by very many.

Take pure steel (that is, iron from Andanica[\[431\]](#)) and make of it a highly polished mirror. Go toward the clouds, carrying the mirror in your hands and raising it toward the clouds, shouting in a loud voice, and the tempests will depart from that place.

In a certain book edited by Geber the sage, concerning tempests and other things, I found this written. Make a mirror of gold or gilt silver, and suffumigate it with hair from a woman's chest, which you moisten with your semen, then suffumigate it with threads from her garment. After you have washed yourself, look into it, and you will make her image appear in the mirror, followed immediately by yours; or first yours, then hers. This experiment is something that Ptolemy of Babylon said, and three sages from India found it in Egypt; and they proved that this mirror ought to be made when the Moon is in conjunction with Jupiter, and gilded or furbished when the Moon is with Venus. But I wish to tell you the composition of the mirror, and how it is to be worked and kept, for this reason, that all the nature of humanity enters into it. Temper the mirror with live and natural blood; then suffumigate it; then write on it the names of the seven stars, their seven symbols, and the names of the seven angels and seven winds. Now the names of the seven stars are these: Zohal, Musteri, Marrech, Xemz, Zohara, Hotarid, Alchamar. And these figures are written in a circle around the outer edge, and they are in a ring. Next are written within a polished and gilded circle the names of these seven angels: Captiel, Satquiel, Samael, Raphael, Anael, Michael, Gabriel. When this is done, the names of the seven winds are written on the unpolished part, and these are the powers of the wind, of whom the names are these: Barchia, Bethel almoda, Hamar benabis, Zobaa marrach, Fide arrach, Samores maymon, Aczabi.[\[432\]](#)

Then suspend the mirror for seven days in silk above water, and suffumigate it; and let it be suspended from a red staff. For three nights suffumigate it with good odors; the best may be found in the Book of Moses. If you gaze into this mirror, and keep it well, you will see that in it you will gather men, winds, spirits, demons, the dead and the living, and all will obey you and be at your command. Do your work in this manner: the suffumigation is of the seven things proper to man, that is, blood, semen, spittle, ear wax, the tears of the eyes, feces, and urine. Suffumigate with this, and instruct the winds as you wish; and they will do your will. Keep this, and you will experience all that I have said to you; for you will have power over winds, men, and demons, and they will come obediently to you. Do this over a basin of water or over some other clean vessel full of water. And you will behold this, and it will be fulfilled as you have asked.

The sage whom we have already named (that is, Zeherith) has recounted nineteen experiments which are written below. The first is to protect vineyards from bad weather. Take a tablet of marble or wood, and on it make images of vines and grapes, do this between the 22nd day of October and the fourth day of December (that is, on whatever day among the aforesaid you wish); and put the tablet thus made in the middle of the vineyard. This image is proven to protect vineyards from the weather.

For chasing noxious animals from a vineyard. Take equal parts of the feces of a black dog and the feces of a wolf. Let them be mixed with human urine, and leave them thus for seven days; at the end of which, sprinkle this wherever you wish in the vineyard. No noxious animal, such as bears, wolves, foxes, serpents, and the like, will enter into that place. Do the aforesaid for three days in succession.

For making serpents flee. Take tartago wood and suffumigate with it in a place where serpents gather together, and at once they will flee from there.

For the same. Take ammoniac and asafoetida, one ounce each, and strong wine vinegar that has been boiled on the fire, and while boiling it dissolve the aforesaid gums until they are well mixed. Then let it be taken out and formed into lozenges, which you should save for use in a glass vessel. When you wish serpents to flee from anywhere they are, suffumigate that place that you wish to purify with the said lozenges, or others of the same sort, and you will have your intention.

For making reptiles and mice flee. Take xenab, deer's horn, axenus and leopard's tongue. Let them all be pulverized and mixed with very strong wine vinegar; let them be tempered and cooked together until the result is the consistency of oxymel.[\[433\]](#) Then mix it with powdered pomegranate leaves. Make pills out of this, and save them for use in a glass vessel. When you do the working, suffumigate the place with these, and it will be purified of them.

For killing mice. Take equal parts of litharge[\[434\]](#) and ceruse,[\[435\]](#) and pulverize them. Add to one part of this mixture, four parts of flour, and mix it all with a little oil. Make it into pills, and anoint them with aged cheese several years old that has a good odor. Put these in a place where mice are accustomed to go; all those that eat of the pills will quickly die.

For the same. Take a bronze vessel, and put into it the dregs of oil in which black hellebore has been mixed. Put this same vessel in the house where mice are accustomed to go. The odor of the oil will draw them to it; and when they have taken a little of the oil, they will suddenly fall over as though drunk.

For killing scorpions. Take radish leaves and put them on scorpions, and they will bite themselves until they die.

To make a lover forget his beloved. Take fava beans when the Moon is in either of Saturn's rulerships, and put them in wine for a day and a night to soften them; then let them be cooked in the same wine. When they are cooked, let them be given to the lover to eat, and he will forget his beloved.

That wasps and bees do not sting you. Take dry powdered asparagus roots, and mix them with sesame oil. Anoint your hands and feet with this; afterwards, you will be able to safely enter the place because you will be able to remain safe from injury from them.

A deadly poison. Take the juice of an herb that is known in the land of Armenia, the leaves of which are similar to palm leaves except that they are finer, and with it anoint the point of a spear or any other weapon, and if anyone is wounded by being struck with it, in the day or the one following it, he shall die. To cure this, take human feces, fresh or dried. If you get it fresh, give the patient two ounces of it in a drink with oil of roses, or oil of violets, or the two mixed together; by this potion alone he will be able to escape from it. If you get the feces dried, give him four ounces in a drink with the same amount of dried roses. As I recollect, I believe that this herb is called alcondiz, because from the juice of that herb a deadly poison is made when iron is dipped into it, and afterwards blood is shed in wounding someone with the iron.

Another deadly poison. If anyone consumes a pound of monkshood seeds, he will die within four hours despite any remedy given afterwards except fresh human feces given in a drink. You should know that human feces, fresh or dried, generally counter every poison,[\[436\]](#) except the bite of the deaf adder, which are not healed by them alone. It is very necessary that a plaster of radishes, well crushed, be put on bites of this snake, and the pain will be soothed.

A theriac for every poison. Take three ounces of laurel wood, seven ounces of its leaves, and two ounces of its fruit. Let this be dried and well powdered, and to it add six ounces of human feces. Mix it together and incorporate it with honey and wax, and be sure that the weight of the latter is no greater than the former. Keep this confection in a golden or silver vessel. This is a universal theriac against every poison, and it prevents graying of the hair.

If you put a laurel bough in a house where a frightened infant is being nursed, putting the bough above its cradle, the infant will be freed from fear. If you plant a laurel tree inside a house wherever you wish, fear will be removed from the house, and its inhabitants will be happy, joyful, and rest well, which are properties of the aforesaid tree.

The seeds of the darnel damage the head and make the eyes darken and remove vision and cause sleep. Some accursed people take equal parts of darnel seeds, crocus, olibanum, and wine lees, and if anyone drinks of this confection, he will sleep, and his tongue will become so dry that he will not be able to speak, nor will he be able to stand up. If you add to these things four other things, which are these: mandrake, wild lettuce seed, black pepper, and henbane seed, if you give this confection to anyone, he will be drunk and will lose his senses and will be completely out of his mind. Abenvasia, speaking of the foregoing, instructs that this confection should be kept secret, nor should it be revealed to any wicked person.

In The Chaldean Agriculture, speaking of this same herb,[\[437\]](#) he says that in it exist many marvelous properties, that is, if you put a handful of it into a basin and put snakes in it, they will rise up on their tails as though they wished to jump; and that if you put this herb next to a mirror placed so as to stand in the sun, it will be burnt.

For healing morphews. When the Sun sets and you are about to go to sleep, take as many fava beans as you can hold in your hand and say: "You, Sun, precious and high lord, I ask that you take away this morphew from me, and make it vanish from my body and my chest and from whatever place it may be." When you have said this, throw one of the aforesaid beans behind your shoulder; and repeat the foregoing words and do the said action until all the beans are gone. Do the foregoing seven nights in a row, and do this when the Moon is waning.

For catching birds. Take fava beans and darnel seed, and put them in wind to moisten for a day and a night; then take it and put it in a place where cranes, crows, and other birds are able to eat from it. Those who eat of it will fall to the ground as though dead.

For taking away warts. First count how many there are, and take the same number of chickpeas. When the Moon is conjunct the Sun according to its proper motion, you should warm the aforesaid chickpeas somewhat at the fire. Then upon each one of the warts put one of the chickpeas, and leave it there for a little while; then take it off the same, and let it be put in a black cloth and tied up with a thread. Stand upon a high place, throw the chickpeas behind you, and return to your home without any backward glance or step toward the chickpeas.

For separating two people from each other. The seeds of a certain tree that is called sebestan have many properties in workings of magic, among which there is a working for separating two people from each other and putting discord and even enmity between them; for indeed the property of these seeds is to separate friendships and altering the will in such a way as to make it bear ill will toward others. The words of Zeherith the sage extend this far.

Abenvasia recounts that all the Chaldeans, great as well as small, men and women alike, on the first night of the month of March used to put in their beds under their heads one piece of cheese and four dates and seven grape seeds and an equal number of grains of salt, in a fitting cloth. They used to say that a certain old woman who was a servant of Venus used to say that on that night everyone in their beds ought to feel under their bellies and look beneath their heads. If they found emptiness under their bellies and did not find it under their heads (because of the portion of cheese, dates, and raisins, as said above), they used to pray to Venus at once that a certain man who had been sick all that year, and had been hindered in all his works, would be sustained for the following year. All the Babylonians also used to do this without fail.

He also said that the power of Saturn and Mars was combined in a certain fruit similar to a melon, which is called "batecas;" and it is used by those who perform astrological operations. Again he says: if anyone puts the seeds of the batecas in a human skull, and buries it, and covers it well with earth, and waters it, from it will grow citrulls.[\[438\]](#) Whoever eats these citrulls will experience an increase in vigor, memory, and intellect. If you put these seeds in the skull of a donkey and bury it, and keep them moist with water as above, it will bear citrulls, and anyone who eats of them will become silly and foolish, and his vigor, courage and intellect will depart from him.

In the same book it says that the Chaldeans use the roots of this herb in one way, its leaves in another, its stems in still another, and its seeds similarly in another, and in each of them are marvelous and beautiful effects in the art of magic. This happens because it swiftly attracts and readily received all those things that Nature herself has placed in it. When it is mixed with human brains, those who eat of it will accomplish wonders.

It says later in the same book that if the same seed is placed in the head and belly of any animal, and the seed and the animal buried together in the earth, it will bear citrulls that will work marvels, and they will be similar in their effects to the animal in whose head or belly the aforementioned seed was placed, as described above. Whoever eats of them and mixes them with his own nature, they will work wonders in the body of those who eat them.

Again in the same book it says that if someone takes one mandrake root and buries it in the same place as these batecas seeds, they will work many wonders, which I omit at present because of the tedium of writing so long a passage; in that book, however, it is contained in full.

A certain ancient sage who was ahead of his time in philosophy recounted twelve miraculous workings, which I intend to write down at this point. The first is that, if anyone puts a human skull in a seed bed, and in that place the seed of batecas has been planted and covered with earth, and this seed is cast into soil prepared for it, and thereafter each day it is watered with a mixture of lukewarm water and human blood, it will once again bear citrulls. Those who eat them will see many terrifying as well as other marvelous things.

Again it says: if someone takes in his hand the root of an onion, watching the Moon at night when she rises in the first hour of the night, and stands on his feet facing the Moon, saying the words and prayers we have given in this book, and offering the following conjuration: "I swear by you, Moon, that if you take from me pain and infirmities of the teeth, that I will never eat any part of an onion;" then let him cook the onion he has in his hands, and eat it. Whoever does this every month when the Moon is disposed as aforesaid will be protected against all infirmities of the teeth.

That a chicken will follow you around. Take the leaves of a garden onion, and fold them up one inside another. Give them to whatever chicken you wish for three days in a row, that is, three times a day; and you ought to begin this working on a Wednesday. Thereafter the chicken will esteem you and follow you.

That every hard body be softened. Take sal alkali[\[439\]](#) and galbanum, ten pounds each. Put them in a vessel with three times as much water as both together, and let it remain there for seven days, at the end of which you should strain the water through a cloth. Then heat the water, and put into it the same amount of alkali and galbanum as before. Again, let it remain there for seven days, and then strain through cloth. Then reheat the water, and into each ten pounds of water put half a pound of ammoniac and two ounces of atrament. Let all this be put on a gentle fire or warmed well by the Sun; leave it for ten days, and then let it be cooked for one entire day; then strain it, and it is made. If you put bone, horn, stones, or any hard metallic body into it, and allow it again to be heated by the Sun, while covered entirely with sheets of lead, what you put into it will be softened to the consistency of paste.

For the same. Take cedar tips and mix them with red wine vinegar, and mix them very well, until they are blended together. Into each pound of the same put three ounces each of sal ammoniac and powdered sea salt; let them be mixed well, and leave them in the sun for three days, stirring each day. When you have done the foregoing in this way, put into it any hard body you wish, and it will be made so soft that you will be able to work it as you wish.

For the same. The sage mentioned above said that sulfur softens every metallic body, and its work with every stone and metal is marvelous.

For provoking uncontrollable laughter. Give ten ounces of powdered crocus in a drink to anyone you wish; it will cause him to start laughing uncontrollably, until finally he dies.

The herb of the lion destroys all trees and plants that are around it, nor can any tree or any other plant grow in a place where herb of the lion grows. It can only be uprooted in this way. Let a virgin girl approach it, carrying a white rooster with a divided crest; and circling the place where the plant is, let her make the rooster strike the plant with its wings. By that striking the herb will be dried up.

If a cat approaches any place where spikenard is, and it smells the odor of the spikenard, it will not leave that place, but will seek for the spikenard and cry as loudly as it can, this is one of the marvels of plants and the places where they appear.

Every place has different properties, that is, there are trees and animals attributed to it that are rarely found elsewhere, as seen with balsam, which is said to grow in Egypt alone, and ebanus which grows on the island of Huac and not elsewhere, and the tree that is called "the tree of the black people" and only grows in the country of the black people, and the tree bearing olibanum, which is found in the plain of Hamen, and the muse tree which is only known in the western lands, and many others which are in some places and not in others, that is, according to whether or not the place is appropriate to them. The property of lands and places are from the harmony of waters and airs; but the first causes of all these is in the line of heaven transiting over that place and from the vigor of the stars found therein. For from the vigor and nature of the stars existing in that line will be the production of animals and trees in that place, which are not able to be produced in other places.

In the western seas there is a certain island named Cadiz, in which a certain herb grows in the springtime; and the cattle of that island eat that herb. If anyone drinks milk from that herd, he will become drunk as though it were wine; and he will be made as merry by that milk as by wine.

In France a certain tree is said to grow, and if anyone stays under it for the space of half an hour, he will die; and if anyone touches it or takes anything from it, he will die instantly.[\[441\]](#)

Likewise in France, in the southern part, a certain small tree is said to grow, and it is the size of a cabbage, but its leaves are like those of rue. If anyone takes the root with the branches and leaves of this same tree, and puts them in cold water and leaves them for an hour, the water will become as hot as if it stood by the fire; and when it is taken out, at once the water will be as cold as before.

In the land of India there is said to be a certain tree which cannot be burned by fire. There is said to be another tree there which, if you take a branch and put it on the ground, it will move like a serpent.

In the same place is said to be another tree from which, in spring and fall, voices similar to human voices are heard to issue, and the roots of that tree are shaped like human beings.

In the land of Bequien is a certain tree that lights up at night like a candle.

It says also that costus, which is found in the land of India, emits more odor than any other thing, and it is the suffumigation they use for images in the houses of their ceremonies. The Chaldeans say that it is the best of all things for making offerings and suffumigations to images of Venus, and many work with her images using it. Zeherith the sage included this tree in the book The Chaldean Agriculture. He said that some of the Chaldeans used to mix nutmeg, holly, moist and dry storax, rose and myrtle flowers, as well as frankincense, with this herb; and all of them mixed it with crocus. With this mixture they used to suffumigate their clothing, images, and faces on their high holy days,[\[442\]](#) saying that the odor of this suffumigation destroys all infirmities and turns impediments away from them.

It says further that a suffumigation of the myrrh tree or its branches prevents epidemics. Again, they used to make a suffumigation of the wood of the same tree, as well as its gum, to which they used to add incense, nutmeg, holly, and storax, saying that this suffumigation made Venus gracious. When they used to burn this suffumigation with sacrifices to Venus, and with her prayers and conjurations before her book and images as we have said in this book, playing their instruments and saying the aforesaid conjurations of Venus, they would ask from Venus whatever they wished. When this ceremony was given to Venus she would fulfill all their petitions. They did not do the foregoing unless Venus was free of all other planets and in her power and virtue, so that she was not impeded[\[443\]](#) by anything, and especially by an aspect or conjunction with Mercury, because among the other impediments to Venusan aspect or conjunction with Mercury takes the highest place. Zeherith the Sage said that the addition of crocus and costus to the foregoing suffumigation adds power to it, and the work will be completed more quickly.

We have related all these marvels of trees in this our book because plants are one part of the inferior world of the elements, subject to generation and corruption. Generation and corruption, in turn, are divided into three parts, that is, in animals, in plants, and in minerals. Plants are the medium between animals and minerals because plants correspond to animals in living, growing, and reproducing, and to minerals in corporeity and insensitivity. Thus plants are more useful to human life than animals or minerals. Those things that are useful to human life and health from plants are seeds, roots, stalks, bark, leaves, flowers, and fruit; from minerals, human beings also take what is useful to them such as salt, alum, stones, and metals; from animals, meat, fat, bones, blood, and other components of animal bodies are used.

It is therefore manifest that plants are situated closer to humanity than are minerals, and among plants are trees, which exceed the other plants in goodness, scent, properties, usefulness, or some other thing. It is clearly similar in minerals, that is, in precious stones, which are considered more excellent than other stones, and likewise among metals, among which gold prevails over all. But the noblest and most precious of all corruptible things is the rational animal, that is, man, to whose perception and industry all things are made subject until the end. This elementary world exists because of the elements; the elements because of nature; nature because of spirit; spirit because of intellect; and intellect because of God Himself, upon whom all the heavens and nature depend. To Whom be blessings for the infinite ages of ages. Amen.

Description of Another Operation Which Kills by the Sound When It Is Heard from Ibn Washiyya's Book of Poisons

Take half of a skin of a lamb which was medium in age and size. It must be damp; if not, sprinkle just enough water on it to wet it. Then pulverize equal amounts of gallnut, pomegranate rind, and inner bark of the oak. Spread the pulverized materials on the skin and set it in the sun. Burn equal amounts, in a total quantity sufficient to tan the skin, of the following: wood of myrtle, pomegranate wood, and wood of the oak. When they are burned and in ashes, gather these ashes in an earthenware container. Sprinkle a man's urine on it until it is wetted and set it in the sun until it is dried well. Then boil these ashes with what covers it in potable salted water of the well. When all the ashes are dissolved in the water, freeze it; it will freeze as a sharp [acidic] salt. Take this salt and tan the skin with it upon which you scattered gallnut and the others. Its tanning is good. Dry it well in the sun. Then take a sharp shoemaker's knife, and peel it so that it may be well pounded to achieve the thickness of vellum or a little thicker. Then, from the skin, cut off two pieces the width of one cubit or a little more. Cut the two pieces in a round form, in a size which is equal to a drum upon which it will be placed. Put them in the inside of an earthenware jar.

Hunt for three vipers or big snakes and then throw them on the round pieces hidden in the jar. Cover the jar well and do not feed the snakes at all. Leave the jar which is well covered from a Tuesday until the end of the following Tuesday. Then uncover the jar. Throw to the snakes the pomegranate rinds which have been pounded with similar things, opium kneaded with good wine and shaped as delicate hazelnuts and dried. The snakes hasten to swallow these hazelnuts. When they have eaten them in sufficient amount, the jar is covered; if some remain, they are left with the snakes in the jar. Then the jar is left for three days and nights. It is then uncovered again and you will find that the snakes have died. Take them out and throw them into a furnace so that their bodies may be burned there. Then take the two round hides and make a drum using the walnut wood. On the latter, place the two round hides firmly, making it adhere with glue and paste. It is strengthened with the embalming agent which was made from gall-nut rinds, or from the black wool in which the snakes or Hanit, according to Dozy, is used to dry up moisture. vipers were wrapped. This is applied also to the rinds in which the snakes or vipers were wrapped. Then cremate the snake or viper. Take some bat's urine which has become concentrated and dense; then counter-act it with the urine of man. Put it in the hot sun for a day and then pulverize it in urine until it is dissolved and integrated. Then take a feather from the wing of an owl or a black crow. Anoint the two hides and the wood of the entire drum with urine dissolved in urine until it is all soaked and you are certain that no more wetting is possible. Then set it in the sun. When it is well dried anoint it again. Do this operation three times, then dry it very well in the sun.

Then take a stick from the olive tree which will make a sound on the drum when the stick strikes it. Set the stick and the drum apart. When the sun sets on a Tuesday evening, take the drum and the stick and set them down facing Mars. If the moon adjoins Mars, then it is best; otherwise while Mars is rising. Then take the stick with your left hand such that the outside of your hand with the stick and the drum agree with Mars, and say,

"O God, the powerful, who makes one thirst violently, the arrogant, the killer of all, who flings factions and disturbances among people! O God who delights in shedding blood and [spreading] death, the high position of the peace is thine now and for all time in regard to me and thy slaves. Kill with this drum who hears its sound quickly, immediately! O the destroyer, the arrogant, the killer, the cruel, the blood-thirsty, the troublous to mankind who impairs their health, reason, and action, kill with this drum everyone who hears its voice!"

Repeat your word, "Kill with this drum everyone who hears its voice," eight times, then say, "O God of death, God of fire, God of heat, the destroyer with strength and power, who sends everyone death and killing and the corruption of life to everyone who hears the sound of this drum. That is this drum." Repeat your words, "It is this drum" forty times. Then, in a censer, smoke seed of laurel, seed of mustard, and storax. When the smoke begins to appear, stand upon your feet and make the stick agree with Mars. Then say,

"Hear me O God of the sky, earth, and blue, brown, and green eyes. Thou must hear me and kill everyone who hears this drum except the one who protected himself from thee, and from sound with the power of Jupiter opposing you, and whichever way he is afraid of thee, O God of evils, of glory of evils, and that strengthens evils day and night. Now, I stand before thee in the darkness of this night. I fear thee, and hope from thee, and ask of thee, and understand thee that when thy names are used in prayer, then thou hearest when it is asked on them. Thou givest. O God, the powerful, the violent, hearest my prayer! Amen, amen, amen!"

Then set down the drum and stick before Mars until it sets and until morning breaks, until you see that the sky is quite bright. Then take the drum and the stick with which you strike the drum. If you wish to kill one, strike the drum with it when the moon is associated with Saturn, while it confronts it from every direction except the opposite one. The situation of the opposite direction is not appropriate for this. Sing while you strike it with the words which praise Mars. Whoever hears this voice dies either on the same day or after three hours following the darkness of night have passed.

Chapter Eight

The virtues of other things which Nature does by her own properties

In this part we will recount the marvelous properties of simples, trees, animals, and minerals. First is the emerald; when it is seen by the kind of viper that has a head resembling a weasel's, the viper's eyes suddenly go blind. Further, when serpents' eyes are hurt, they rest their gaze upon fennel, and at once they are healed. Eagles carry a diamond to the place where they raise their young, so that the chicks will be protected from serpents. When bears see the eyes of mice, at once they flee from them.

When the bones of a hoopoe are put in hot water, the parts from the bottom of the bird sink, while the others float on top of the water.

When an owl dies, one of its eyes stays open and the other closes. If the closed eye is placed over someone, he will sleep and cannot be awakened while it remains over him, while if the open one is placed above someone, he cannot sleep unless it is taken away. If someone who suffers from gout places the claw of a vulture above himself, he will be freed from the gout, that is, in this way: if the gout is on the right side, he puts the right claw of a vulture over himself, and likewise for the left.

In the land of Horazen is said to be a very white stone named assiffe that cannot be ground down. When this stone is put on anyone's stomach, it heals whatever infirmities of the stomach might be present.

In the river Algeriche are found white, spotted, black, and mixed stones, and if they are rubbed together, they provoke a flood in that river which will not cease while the stones are being rubbed. For this reason no one is able to enter the river or walk on its gravel at night because of the rubbing of the stones; from that friction, floods issue as said above, and at night we cannot perceive them by sight.

The eagle-stone sounds inwardly as though it had another stone inside it, but when it is broken, nothing is found, and each of the parts sounds as above. This stone is red in color like the soil of Cabros. The virtue of it is wonderful in childbirth; for if a woman giving birth takes it, she gives birth at once without danger and with little pain.

There is a certain animal the size of a fox, and similar to a cat in form and appearance. This animal puts out fire by its coldness, nor is it killed or burned by fire. The mouths of ostriches are not burned by fire, nor is its stomach, into which hot iron may be put; for it digests iron in its stomach and takes no harm from it, and indeed is nourished by it. If you take all the feathers from whatever bird you wish, and make of them a single mass, if you rub that mass over a cloth or your hand, whatever body of modest size you touch with it will be drawn to it and suspended above the ground.[\[444\]](#)

There is said to be a certain stone named behet, which is of a color like the color of marcasite, [\[445\]](#) and it shines beautifully. Anyone who looks at it even once will remain in continual laughter until he dies, nor is there said to be any remedy that will cure such laughter. On this stone there is said to be a certain bird named alpersit. It is the size of a sparrow, and is black, but its neck and legs are red. When this bird rises from the stone, the stone loses its virtue, and if, after this, someone sees it, he will not be harmed by it.

The fava bush has thick stalks, and when they are broken, the beans become hard. If you put this stalk on a person possessed by a demon, he will be freed from the demon; by the odor of the stalk, the demon will depart from him.

If you burn deer horn before serpents, they will die of the odor. Ants are killed by the odor of cumin. Scorpions will flee from the odor of crocus, nor are they able to remain in a place where it is. Flees avoid the odor of chalk, and if you put hot salt in your house, they will flee from it. If you suffumigate with poley, insects will flee at once.

In pools of water there is said to be an algae that cannot be burned with fire. This herb is similar to a green plant, but is not one. It is named pond lentil. Stems of jujube make neither light nor flame when they are burned.

The vulture carries the leaves of alexinz to the place where its chicks are, so that they may be protected from harmful animals.

The stone atarac is among the things that are inseparable, and is a stone that cannot be broken in any way; both large and small stones of this kind exist. If you put little pieces of a certain stone called algemest[\[446\]](#) in a bottle of wine, no one who drinks from that bottle will become drunk at all, nor will the wine harm him. If you put small pieces of another stone called atambari into a vessel, however, and any kind of drink is put in that vessel, whoever drinks of it will become drunk, will lose their senses and intellect, and become worried and sad.

The lodestone attracts iron. If you anoint it with an onion, it loses its virtue; if you then put it in sheep's blood, it regains its virtue.

In the river of Cerich is said to be a certain kind of serpent. If any man sees one of them, the man will die; while if the serpent sees itself, it will die.

If you put a pig upon a donkey and the donkey urinates while this is the case, the pig will die at once.

When hail appears, if a woman who is menstruating casts herself upside down on the ground, uncovering herself completely and raising her thighs toward the cloud, hail will not fall around her on the field or the harvest.

If a dog climbs on a mountain or a high place, and beneath it a certain animal called addabum goes past, and the shadows of the two animals touch each other, the dog will fall down and that animal will kill it.

If someone with a quartan fever sits down on a wolfskin, he will be healed of the fever.

If you put fifteen figures above a woman in labor, she will give birth easily and without danger. Put nutmeg seeds above someone with a quartan fever, and he will be healed of the fever.

If you put elephant feces on a tree, the tree will bear no fruit while the feces remain there. If you put the same feces on a woman, she cannot become pregnant.

There is a stone that draws urine from people with dropsy, but when it does so, it loses its virtue and is destroyed thereby.

With the stone called ligia, quicksilver is congealed and made into a single body.

If you put a spider's web on someone who has a quartan fever, he will be healed in a short time. If you combine it with the web of a cantharides beetle, he will be healed swiftly from everything.

Asps and vipers who hear the cry of the ostrich will flee from that place.

When you mix (...) [\[447\]](#) with silver extracted from copper and purified of it, and with it strike a place where birds gather, the birds will not be able to depart from there, and thus will be captured.

If you touch any meat with the head of the sea-rabbit, it will be turned into tiny pieces or into paste. If you put gold into mouse feces, it will be burned as though it were lead; and when it has thus been burnt and reduced to powder, if you put it in cat feces, it will be restored and flow back together. When gold is combined with any corporeal power, it is destroyed. If it is combined with marcasite and sulfur to be melted by itself, gold will be purified and refined.

The stone malachite softens gold. If you put it together with gold and melt them, its combustion will take it away from the gold; whereas if you put borax with them, the effect will be better. If you quench gold in the juice of the leaves of quipos, it will be made apt for sophistication by many repetitions, losing its original infirmity; [\[448\]](#) thus the salt of it becomes red. If you put silver above the smoke of sulfur, it will become black, and when you put it in salt, the blackness goes away and it becomes white.

Anoxatir has the property of drawing out of every body all the moisture that exists inside and outside it. Niter cleanses all bodies of moisture, and clears their surfaces. If you mix gold with the stone azure, it will increase the beauty and clarity of the gold. If you put it over fire, the azure stone will turn to flame and will depart, and will produce infirmities of the eyes. When marcasite is burned in sulfur, it enters into the Great Work; and from it is made the material of the work. Magnesia has in its body an admixture of lead, and without it, glassworking cannot be accomplished. Tutia gives a red color to gold, and takes away moisture from the eyes and frees them from all moist ailments. Best of all is white tutia. If you rub your teeth and gums with powdered crystal, the teeth will be made firm and the gums freed of corrosion.

Ashes of burnt sea crabs take away illnesses of the eyes, and fortify the sight. If a dog eats a camel's spleen, it will die at once. If you put the dried feces of a dog fed on bones on an apostume of the throat, the apostume will dissolve and be healed at once. If you put the shell of a female turtle over a pot, it will never boil.

The gebore tree is of two kinds, namely, male and female. If you give any woman five ounces of the female tree in a drink, she will have a great appetite to lie with a man; and the same will be done to a man if you give him the same amount of the male tree in food or drink. He will be greatly irritated, nor will he be able to be rid of the irritation unless you give him two ounces of vegetable ash in a drink. If anyone takes the flowers of this tree in a drink, he will continually break wind, nor will this cease as long as it remains in his stomach. If you give anyone the flower of the female tree in a drink, he will sleep three days without waking; if you wish to awaken him, give him hot water with olive oil to drink. If you grind the leaves of this tree and distemper them with sulfur water, it will heal wounds in a single day if you put it on them.

If a serpent or scorpion is tied with the bark of this tree, it will die at once.

Salt heals the stings of scorpions, wasps, and serpents. Purslane eaten one day after another constricts the blood, and when chewed, raw or cooked, it heals bites at once.

If a ram sees a lion, it will die at once of natural causes.

A tarantula will die if it sees a scorpion, and a serpent will die if it sees an owl.

If anyone takes a ring of azure or of the stone cornelian on which these 26 figures are carved, and wears it on his finger when he goes before a king or some other aristocrat, he will be received nobly and well, and whatever he asks from him or them will be fulfilled with effect. Be very sure, however, that you do not get any of these figures wrong in any way; because if there should be any mistake among them, the ring will not work effectively. This is one of the wonders of this art. The figures are these:

These figures are found in the book of Queen Folopedre.

If you put this ring on a tarantula bite, and then bathe it with the patient's saliva, he will be cured at once. If you rub a tarantula bite with the leaves of the herb called yambut, one after another, it will be healed in an instant. Catran mixed with salt heals wounds made by a serpent. If a man anoints his penis with catran and lies with a woman, she will not become pregnant. Eating hazelnuts heals tarantula bites; thus anyone who carries hazelnuts with him will not be killed by a tarantula bite. If someone who is bitten by a mad dog puts chewed bitter almonds on the wound, and eats them, he will be healed of the wound. If you put the herb called southernwood on a viper bite, it will be healed instantly; if the juice of this herb is sprinkled through the house, fleas will go mad, and if they fall into that juice, they will die.

If you burn tarantulas, and mix the ashes into bread and give it to someone who suffers from the stone, the stone will break, and that person will be healed. Flour of the seeds of the herb named vetch will heal bites from a mad dog if it is put on them.

Chapter Nine

Images whose virtues perform marvels, that were found in a book that was discovered in the church of Coredib and the book of Queen Folopedre; and a description of all the rules necessary in working with magical images

We find in the book that was discovered in the chamber of Queen Folopedre, composite images that accomplish wonderful effects and marvelous works by their properties and virtues. We propose in this book of ours to make mention of these, so that this science may not be deficient in anything.

For healing the bites of reptiles. Take the bile of a kite dried in the shade, and mix it with an equal part of fennel juice, and store it in a glass bottle. This powder may be applied to the eyes, and it will cure and heal the bites of tarantulas, vipers, wasps, asps, and other reptiles. If the bite should be on the right side, let this powder be put on the left, and if the bite is on the left, let the powder be put on the right. When you wish to do this, add an equal amount of water; and do as we have said three times in succession.

That asps leave their holes. Take shards of glass and filings of yellow brass. Melt them in a crucible, and add red azernec^[449] and red magnesia; then take this from the fire and break it into little pieces. Then take the head of a kite and its bones (specifically, the kite that is found in the land of Egypt), and mix it with black galbanum. Melt it again on the fire, and let it be mixed with the other medicine; when this is done, take it off the fire. Make out of it a sistrum, which in our language is called a rattle, and let a grain be put into it of the diamongs that are found in the land of Egypt. When you have done this, strike with it on the mouths of the holes of vipers, serpents, and other reptiles. When serpents hear the beating of a sistrum compounded in the aforesaid way, they will leave their holes at once without endangering the one who plays the sistrum. The property of the aforesaid bird (that is, the kite already mentioned) is that, when it cries and asps hear it, they are driven from their holes and are killed by its voice.

For gathering mice in one place. Take the juice of the leaves of white grape vines, squill juice, borax, henbane, and red Indian tutia. Powder the borax and tutia, and mix them with the aforesaid juices; and make pills the size of a chickpea, and let them dry in the shade. When you wish mice to gather together, put one of the said pills on burning coals. When mice smell the smoke, they will all gather at that place, and you may do with them as you will.

That fishes will gather together at the place you choose. Take millet, which you should allow to rot. When it is rotten, combine it with fat, powdered fava beans, and bull's blood, and mix it well enough that it all becomes a single mass. Then put it in a reed, and fit it with a hempen thread. Then cast the reed into a place where there are fishes; all the fishes in that place will gather around the reed, and you will be able to take them with a net if you wish.

For catching birds sleeping in trees. Take fat of land turtles, lirim seeds, sweet myrrh, and condisum in equal parts. Powder them all and mix well together. Make a mass of it with donkey's urine, and make of it pills the size of a chickpea, which you should allow to dry in the shade. When the working is performed, take an earthen vessel full of burning coals, and place in it one of the said pills, and with this suffumigate a place where there are birds; and cover your nostrils with silk so that you do not smell the smoke. All the birds who smell the said smoke will fall to the ground as though dead, and you may catch them at will. If you wish to heal them, wash their feet in hot water, and they will be healed.

For the same. Take mandrake and ammoniac, and mix it with the juice of green hemlock. Make pills from it, and allow them to dry. Suffumigate with them under a tree where there are birds; but do this when the weather is calm and without wind. All the birds who smell that smoke will fall to the ground as though dead.

For sharpening vision. Make a crown out of the roots of a certain tree called catlam, which I believe is the same as gobore, and put it on your head. While you carry it on your head, your sight will be so invigorated that you can see the smallest things far away. When you take it off your head, your sight will return to its original state. If you anoint morphews with the juice of the leaves of that tree mixed with wine vinegar, they will instantly be cured.

That someone will not become drunk. Make a vessel of brass as subtly as you are able. Then take equal parts of wine alcohol distilled in an alembic, cabbage juice, and juice of cypress, and mix them all together. When this is done, quench the vessel in the foregoing mixture until it has absorbed a pound of it; then take the same vessel out of the mixture. When you wish to drink, anoint the vessel with oil of bitter almonds, and drink from it as much as you wish, and you will never become drunk.

That flies will not approach a table. Take fresh condisum, yellow auripigment, and dried earth of Cofan, grind all of them well and pulverize them completely, and then mix them with squill juice. Anoint the table with it, and also anoint your hands. From the aforesaid mixture, make an image in the form of a fly, and put it on the table, and as long as it stands on the table no fly will remain there.

For expelling asps and reptiles. Take a leopard skin, which is tanned and softened like leather, and from it make a blanket. No venomous beast will be able to remain in that place.

For banishing asps. Take round aristolochia, and mix it with the flesh of a racanus, which is a large green lizard. Grind this together very well, and add to it the gall of a lion. Make pills of this; when you wish to work with them, distemper one of the pills with water of anoxatir, and with it write on paper or parchment that which you wish to write; and tie this up in a cloth. All asps will flee from anyone who carries this cloth with him, and if any asp touches the said cloth, it will die at once.

That vapors will rise up like fire. Take the root of the herb that is called cotrop; this herb shines at night as though it were a candle. Grind the root well with the brain of a deer and the gall of a cow, and make pills of it. If you put one of them in a fire of dung, marvelous smoke will rise, by which the whole sky will appear to be red, and vapors will rise that will appear similar to flames of fire. All who see this will be frightened. You ought not to do this, however, except when the weather is cloudy and still.

If this light is in front of you, you will see nothing, but if it is behind you, you will see everything that is in the house. Take dolphin fat, and a wick rubbed all over with powdered azer nec and aziniar. Put the fat into a crucible made of brass, and in the crucible put the aforesaid wick. Light it; it makes a light such that, if anyone holds it in his hand, he will see nothing, but if anyone has it behind him he will see everything that is in the house.

That a woman will not become pregnant. Make the image of an ape in brass, and perforate it through the spine; into the opening, put scammony. When you want to lie with a woman, tie the said image to your thighs, and the woman will not become pregnant.

That dogs will not bark at you. Take mandrake root, and when it is well ground, mix it with a bitch's milk. Make the image of a dog from it, and dogs will not bark at you, but will all flee from you.

That iron will be turned into water. Take equal parts of the herb called comesir, squill, and green pomegranate husks. Let all be well ground, mixed together, and distempered with wine vinegar; and distill it with an alembic. Repeatedly quench iron in that vinegar, and it will be turned to water. Let it stay thus for an hour and a half; and then take away the vinegar. You will find the iron shining and running and gathered together in one.

That cloth will burn without fire. Take golden marcasite, which you should grind very finely; and mix it with the strongest wine vinegar. Distill it with an alembic into a glass vessel, and then bury it in manure and leave it there for the space of 14 days. Then take it out, and again put it in bran for the same number of days. Then take it out and with it anoint any cloth you wish, and that cloth will be burned by it as though by fire.

A water that burns, and appears entirely red. Take lime of Cyprus, which you have roasted well in a hot oven, and leave it there for one night. In the morning, take it out, and you will find that it has become completely red. If it is not, let it remain there for another night until it becomes red; and when it is red, take it out. Grind it well, and pour distilled wine vinegar onto it, the quantity thereof being five times the quantity of the lime. Then put it in a glass vessel and leave it for three days, and mix it three times each day. Then set it to boil, or better still to foam; from it will issue a red water the color of jargoons.^[450] Put the water in a crucible, in which you should put a lighted wick. This water will burn; and by its light the whole house will appear to be red in color (that is, the color of jargoons), and the whole house will sparkle like a jargoon.

For making green tarantulas that kill by biting. When you want to do this, fast for a whole day until nightfall. At night, take the herb called wild basil, which you should chew well; and put what you have chewed into a glass jar, the mouth of which you should seal well. Put it in a dark house where neither the sun nor any other light is visible, and let it stay there for forty days. Then take it from there, and in it you will find green tarantulas which, if they bite any man, they will kill him. These tarantulas have a property: if you put them in olive oil in the sun, and let them stay there for 21 days or some similar time, they will die and be dissolved into the oil. If you anoint tarantula bites with that oil, they will be healed; and if a drop of it falls on a tarantula, it will die in an instant.

For making red serpents. Take the webs of large spiders, and put them in donkey's milk in a glass jar. Leave them there for three days, and they will be consumed and vanish from the milk. Let turtle fat be added to it, and let it be mixed well, until it takes on the consistency of brains. Let all this be put into a red linen cloth, and buried in manure for seven days; at the end of which you will find red serpents. If you put them in a place where there are frogs, the serpents will be made in the form of dragons, for frogs in the land of Egypt are inimical to dragons; because when they see dragons they bite them, and proceed to wound the dragons until they die.

For making insects flee. Take one hair from the mane of a virgin mare, which you should take the first time a stallion mounts her. Then make knots in the form of insects in that hair, as many of them as you can, until it looks like a bunch of grapes. Then take the said hair, and put it in a vessel of yellow brass, the mouth of which you should seal up tightly, and bury this in the middle of the house. Insects will not be able to enter that house while the aforesaid vessel remains there.

To make a light from whatever wood you wish. Take fat from a sea dog, and mix it with oil of laurel, soap, and a little sulfur, until these are well mixed together. If you smear this on any wood you wish, a light will be ignited in the form of a candle, nor will it be extinguished until the wood is consumed. The foregoing working is from the works of Antiochus.

For causing wolves and all noxious animals to flee. This work is done with a drum specially made for it, which is composed thus. Take a sea hedgehog; cut off its head, and extract its spines. Skin it, and prepare and anoint the skin as you would any other skin. Then take the skin, and stretch it well over a frame drum or a kettledrum of brass, and save it for use. When you desire the aforementioned beasts to flee, beat the said frame drum or kettledrum at night, because all evil beasts will flee from its sound, and all reptiles that hear it will die.

That frogs will depart from a lake. Take the fat of atimzach and mix it with wax. From it make a candle with a wick. Burn the candle in any place you wish; and the croaking of frogs will be wholly extinguishes.

To catch tarantulas. Take agnum castum and white cardellum, and break them up together. Add to them red galbanum and bezoar stone finely powdered, and blend all these with the juice of sarza. Out of this mass make the image of a tarantula, and out of what is left over of the confection, make pills, which should be dried in the shade. Then put the aforesaid image before you, and cast the pills into fire as a suffumigation; all the tarantulas in that place will gather together before the image. I believe, however, that the virtue of the suffumigation has greater influence than the image in the foregoing.

We have taken all the aforesaid images and confections from the book The Chaldean Agriculture, and have decided to copy down this much of it so that this book of ours may be more complete. You who intend to read this book, however, should keep it as secret as you can, and do not reveal it to anyone unless he is worthy, apt, and disposed to this art. Such people are few in number; nor will you be able to discover these secrets unless you yourself are one of them.

Always remember the aphorisms and teachings that Zucrat the sage taught his students at the end of his life. First: let your natures be so disposed and ordered that you perfectly understand this art, and those things pertaining to it, in and of themselves; you will thus gain the greatest assistance in your work. Second: let your secrets and purifications be displayed only in your hearts when the times are not safe, remembering that just as the times will change for the worse, they will also change for the better. Third: that it will never occur to you, when you have gained wealth and power, to despise and take for granted what you have done. Fourth: to ask little from your friends and create good will little by little, as a child grows, nor to display to them your love or your benefits suddenly, or in any way other than little by little; for if someone desires something from you and receives it all at once, his friendship will not endure, but he will be more likely to become an enemy. Fifth, as far as you are able, to avoid deceitful and shameful dealings, for by them nobility is lost and goodness corrupted. Sixth: rejoice in your friends, and do not ask from them everything you have a right to demand; keep this rule and your friendships will endure. Seventh: do not continually criticize your friends for the things that they do; for you will be disposed to do such things, and similar things, yourself. Eighth: do not respond insultingly to anyone who seeks something from you; for such requests are a distinct sign of blessings upon the good things you have received from God by means of His grace. Petitions from the poor, especially, you should fulfill effectually to the extent that you can, if they are made in a becoming manner; and in doing so, you ought to give thanks to God unceasingly for the station and power to which He has guided you, so that you are able to benefit those who seek you; for when this is the case, it reveals a right and laudable intention and prosperity in God. Ninth: know what things are good and natural for the powers, because by this your own virtues will be known to them, and they will delight in you; for they will delight in you to the same degree that you delight in them. These precepts Zucrat the sage taught to his pupils at the end of his life; they are the foundations of the usefulness of magic.

I will also explain the seven teachings that Pythagoras approved. First: you should balance all things by proportion, and keep them in their proper disposition. Second: govern your friendships and loves, and act on them as far as is healthy. Third: do not light a fire in a green place, as a sword will cut it off. Fourth: govern your desires and appetites and measure their importance correctly by their effect; thus your body will be maintained in perfect health. Fifth: make yourself accustomed to the straight and equal; thus the love and friendship of the people toward you will increase. Sixth: observe the times and employ them as lords and judges do, observing what is required in the world for the preservation of life. Seven: do not harm or contaminate your spirits or your bodies; rather, observe a proper temperance, so that you will always be able to work with them according to the necessities of the times.

Here, however, are the 28 Mansions of the Moon according to Pliny.

The first mansion is for destruction and depopulation and this Mansion is called Alnath. While the Moon is passing through this Mansion, make the image of a black man with his hair wrapped and encircled, standing on his feet, having in his right hand a spear in the manner of a warrior. Make this image in a iron ring; and suffumigate it with liquid storax. Make a seal with the ring in black wax and say: "You, Geriz, kill N son of N, or N wife of N, quickly and speedily and destroy them." Heed this and it will be as you wish. Know that Geriz is the name of the lord of this mansion.

The second Mansion is Albotayn and is for the removal of anger. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, take white wax and mastic and melt them together over a fire. Then remove this from the fire and make the form of a crowned king. Suffumigate it with lignum aloes, and say: "You, Enedil, drive away this anger from me, and let me be reconciled with him, and let my petition be satisfactory to him." Keep this image with you, and it shall be done. Know that Enedil is the name of the lord of this Mansion. .

The third Mansion is Azoraye (that is, the Pleiades) and is for the acquisition of all good things. Make the figure of a seated woman with her right hand over her head, and wrap it in cloth, suffumigate it with musk, camphor, mastic and aromatic oils. Say: "You, Annuncia, make it so." Make the image in a silver ring with a square table, and put it upon your finger and it will be as you wish. Know that Annuncia is the name of the lord of this mansion.

The fourth Mansion is Aldebaran and is for obtaining enmity. Take red wax and when the Moon is passing through this Mansion, make the image of a knight riding on a horse, holding a serpent in his right hand, and suffumigate the image with red myrrh and storax. And say, "You, Assarez, make it so and fulfill my request," and ask for things pertaining to hatred, separation and ill will. It will be completely done as you have requested. Know that Assarez is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The fifth Mansion is Almizen and is for receiving good from kings and high officials. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion a figure from silver and in it sculpt a head without a body, and above the head write the name of the lord of this Mansion and your petition and suffumigate it with sandalwood, and say: "You, Cabil, do such and such for me and let my petition be granted and let me receive good things and the best from the king and his councilors." When you have done this carry the seal in a box, and your request will be fulfilled. When you wish to see something when you sleep, place the talisman under your head at night when you sleep, thinking always in your mind about what you wish, and you will get an answer for what you seek. Know that Assarez is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The sixth Mansion is Achaya and it is for putting love between two people. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, make two images from white wax, make them embrace each other, and wrap them in white silk. Suffumigate them with amber and lignum aloes, and say: "You, Nedeyrahe, bring together so and so and so and so, and place between them friendship and love." It will be as you wish. Know that Nedeyrahe is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The seventh Mansion is Aldira and is for the acquisition of all good things. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion a seal of silver, and sculpt the image of a man clothed in robes and with his hands extended to heaven in the manner of a man who is praying and supplicating; in the breast of the image write the name of the lord of this Mansion. Suffumigate it with sweet smelling things, and say: "You, Siely, cause such and such to happen, and grant my petition." Ask for whatever you wish that pertains to good things. Carry the image with you and it will be as you wish. Know that Selehe is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The eighth Mansion is Annathra and is for gaining victory. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion from tin the image of an eagle with the face of a man, and on its breast inscribe the name of the lord of this Mansion. Suffumigate it with sulfur, and say: "You, Annediex, do such and such for and grant my petition." When this image has been completed in this fashion, take it with you into battle and you shall be victorious and shall prevail. Know that Annediex is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The ninth Mansion is Atarfa and is for causing infirmity. When the Moon has passed into this Mansion, make a lead image of a eunuch holding his hands over his eyes, and on his neck inscribe the name of the Lord of the Mansion. Suffumigate the image with pine resin and say: "You, Raubel, make N son of N die of sickness or N son of N's blood to flow." Ask for which one of these two that you wish, it will be completed if you follow the right path as we have explained above. And know that Raubel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The tenth Mansion is Algebha and is for the cure of infirmities and to make childbirth easy. When the Moon is in this mansion, fashion from gold or brass the head of a lion, and above it write the name of the lord of this Mansion. Suffumigate the image with amber, and say: "You, Aredafir, lift up sadness, slowness and infirmity from my heart and body and whomever consumes or drinks liquid in which this seal has been washed." And on whatever day you have suffumigated it, then it shall be carried to the sick or the infirm and wash it with another substance to be consumed against illness or for women who have had a difficult birth. Know that Aredafir is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The eleventh Mansion is Azobra, and it is that you will be feared and receive good things. When the Moon is in this Mansion, make in a table of gold the image of a man riding a lion, holding a lance in his right hand and holding the ear of the lion with his left hand, and in front of this figure write the name of the lord of this Mansion. Say: "You, Necol, bring glory to me that I shall be feared by men, and so that their fear shall cause them to tremble when they behold me; and quiet the heart of the king and of lords and of men of high estate that they may grant me honors and dignities." Carry this tablet with you, and it shall be as you have requested. Know that Necol is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twelfth Mansion is Azarfa, and it is for the separation of two lovers. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion in black lead the image of a dragon fighting with a man, and in front of this figure write the name of the lord of this Mansion. Suffumigate the image with the hair of a lion mixed with asafoetida, and say: "You, Abdizu, break apart and separate such a one from such a one." Bury this image in the place that you wish, and it shall be as you desire. And know that Abdizu is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The thirteenth Mansion is Alahue, and it is for the liberation of men who are not able to come to women and for putting love between men and women. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion from red wax the image of an erect man (that is, with an erect penis); and let it be in all ways the image of a man desiring to couple with a woman. From white wax fashion the image of a woman. Bind the two images together face to face, and suffumigate them with amber and lignum aloes, and wrap them in a piece of white silk which has been washed in rosewater; and on either image write the name of the one you desire. If a woman shall carry these images with her, she will be most strongly desired by the man whose name is upon the image " which is to say, when he sees her. If another is tied or bound , who is not able to perform with women, if he shall carry the images with him it shall be dissolved and he will be able to perform with women. Know that the name of the lord of this Mansion is Azerut.

The fourteenth Mansion is Azimech, and it is for the separating of men from women. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion from red wax the image of a dog with his own tail held in his mouth. Suffumigate it with the hair of a dog and the hair of a cat, and say: "You, Erdegel, break apart and divide such a one from such a woman through enmity and ill will." And name whatever persons you wish, and bury the image in the place where they are. And know that the name of the lord of this Mansion is Erdegel.

The fifteenth Mansion is Algafr, and it is for the acquisition of friendship and good will. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, make in ink the figure of a seated man, holding scrolls in his hand as if reading them. Suffumigate it with frankincense and nutmeg and say: "You, Achalich, do such and such for me, and accomplish my petition." You may ask him for the joining together of friends and lovers, and any thing which pertains to them, and this image should then be carried with you. And know that Achalich is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The sixteenth Mansion is Azebene, and it is for the making of money (which is to say, in selling and buying). When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion in a plate of silver the figure of a man seated in a throne and carrying a scale in his hands. Suffumigate the image with fine odors, and set it out under the stars for seven nights, saying each night: "You, Azeruch, make such and such happen for me, and accomplish my request." Ask of it pertaining to selling and buying. Know that Azeruch is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The seventeenth Mansion is Alichil, and it is so that thieves may not enter into the house and other criminals likewise. When the Moon has entered this Mansion, fashion the figure of a monkey in an iron seal, holding his hands above his shoulders. Suffumigate it with the hair of a monkey and the hair of a female mouse, and wrap it in a monkey skin. It should then be buried in your house, while saying: "You, Adrieb, guard all my things and everything that exists within this house, nor let it be entered by thieves." When the foregoing has been done, thieves will flee from your house. Know that Adrieb is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The eighteenth Mansion is Alcab, and it is for taking away fevers and infirmities of the belly. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion from wax the image of an adder holding its tail above its head. Suffumigate it with the horn of a stag and say: "You, Egribel, guard this house of mine that no serpent may enter nor any other hurtful beast." Place the image in a vessel which should be buried beneath your house; when the aforesaid has been done, then no serpent will be able to enter nor any other hurtful creature. If the image is to relieve a fever or illness of the belly, carry this image with you and it will cure you. Know that Egribel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The nineteenth Mansion is Axaula, and it is for bringing on the menses in women. When the Moon has passed around to this Mansion, fashion from heme (which is a kind of bronze) a seal, and engrave in it the image of a woman holding her hands before her face. Suffumigate it with liquid storax and say: "You, Annucel, cause the blood to flow from such and such a woman" — name her here. And it shall be as you ask. If a woman keeps this image tied about her waist, she will give birth quickly and without danger. Know that Annucel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twentieth Mansion is Alnaym, and it is for hunting on land. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion in a plate of tin a figure having the head and arms of a man, the body of a horse with four feet and having a tail, holding a bow in its hands.[\[451\]](#) Suffumigate it with the hair of a wolf, and say: "You, Queyhuc, cause me to take all I hunt in the world, and let them come to me swiftly." Carry the image with you and you shall easily take anything in the world that you hunt. Know that Queyhuc is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-first Mansion is Albelda, and it is for destruction. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion the image of a man having two faces, with one facing forward and one facing behind. Suffumigate it with sulfur and carob, and say: "You, Bectue, depopulate such and such a place and destroy it." Then place the image in a small bag and place sulfur and carabe with it along with some hair, and bury it in the place that you wish, and it shall be as you have requested. Know that Bectue is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-second Mansion is Sadahaca. It is for binding tongues so that they do not say anything bad about you. When the Moon is in this mansion make an iron ring and engrave in it the figure of a man with winged feet wearing a helmet and suffumigate it with mercury.[\[452\]](#) And inscribe this image in iron for the safety of fugitives. And say: "You, Geliel, bind these tongues so they cannot say bad things and make me secure and let N. escape safely from his enemies." Carry this ring with you and make a seal in black wax with the ring to bind tongues. Know that the name of the lord of this Mansion is Geliel.

The twenty-third Mansion is Zaadebola, and it is for destruction and devastation. When the Moon is passing through this Mansion, fashion a seal of iron in which you should sculpt the image of a cat having a dog's head. Suffumigate it with the hair of a dog, and say: "You, Zequebin, drive out everyone from such and such a place, and destroy and devastate it." When this Mansion has come to the Ascendant, set this seal out under the stars, and the following night bury the aforesaid seal in the place which you wish to destroy. It shall be as you desire. Know that the name of the lord of this Mansion is Zequebin.

The twenty-fourth Mansion is Caadezod, and it is for the increase of herds. When the Moon has passed into this Mansion, take the horn of a castrated ram which is well cleaned and made appropriate, and in it fashion the figure of a woman with her son in her arms, in the likeness of one who is nursing. Suffumigate it with the scrapings which have been taken from the aforesaid horn, and say: "You, Abrine, improve and guard this herd." After this, hang the image about the neck of one of the rams of this herd; if you wish to work with herds of cows, fashion this image in the horn of a bull, and hang it around the neck of a bull, and the herd will be augmented as has been said and death shall not overtake it. Know that Abrine is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-fifth Mansion is Zadalahbia, and it is for the protection of orchards and crops from evil accidents. When the Moon is in that Mansion, fashion a seal in fig wood, and sculpt in it the figure of a man in the likeness of one who is planting trees. Suffumigate it with the flowers of these trees, and say: "You, Aziel, guard my crops and my orchards that any destruction or ill fortune may not befall them." Place the aforesaid image in one of the trees in the place which you wish to guard. While the image which was made continues there, destruction shall not befall the crops. And know that Aziel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-sixth Mansion is Alfarg the Former, and it is for the creation of love. When the Moon is passing through it, take white wax and mastic and melt them together; from these fashion the image of a woman with her hair unbound and before her a vessel placed as if to receive her hair. Suffumigate it with the sweet-smelling odors, and say: "You, Tagriel, bring me to the love and friendship of such and such a woman." Place the image in a small bag, and place with it also some of the most sweet-smelling of substances; carry it with you, and it shall be completed as you have requested. Know that Tagriel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-seventh Mansion is Alfarg the Latter, and it is for the destruction of springs and wells. When the Moon is passing through it, take red earth, and in it fashion the image of a winged man, holding a perforated dish in his hands, and raising it to his mouth. Afterward put it into the fire until it is hard. After this place in the vessel asafoetida and liquid storax, and say: "You, Abliemel, destroy such and such a spring of such and such a man," and name him here as you wish. Throw the image into his spring, and it shall be destroyed and the spring shall no more come forth. And know that Abliemel is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

The twenty-eighth Mansion is Arrexe, and it is for bringing fish together in one place. When the Moon has come to this Mansion, fashion of henc (which is a kind of bronze) a seal, in which you should fashion the image of a fish having a colored spine on which you should write the name of the lord of this Mansion. Suffumigate it with the skin of a sea fish; after this, tie a string around it and throw it in the water in the place where you wish the fish to come together. All of the fish in the area nearby will immediately gather together about it, and allow you to harvest them. And know that Anuxi is the name of the lord of this Mansion.

You should know that on all the aforesaid images you ought to write the name of the lord of the mansion, and your petition with it. In all those that are made for good, and to cause gathering, uniting, and generating friendship and love, you ought to write on the chest of the figure; and in all workings that are done to cause disunion, separation, and to generate enmity and ill will, you ought to write behind the shoulders (that is, along the spine of the image); while in all workings that are done to acquire glory, honor, and advancement, you ought to write on the head of that image. Thus it is finished.

The prayer of Saturn. Quermiex, Tos, Herus, Quemis, Dius, Tamines, Tahytos, Macader, Quehinen: Saturn! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of Jupiter. Bethniehus, Darmexim, Maciem, Maxar, Derix, Tahix, Tayros, Deheydex, Mebguedex: Jupiter! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of Mars. Guebdemis, Hegneydiz, Gueydenuz, Magras, Herdehus, Hewbdegabdis, Mehyras, Dehydemes: Red Mars, Baharam! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of the Sun. Beydelux, Demeymes, Adulex, Metnegayn, Atmefex, Naquiris, Gadix: Sun! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of Venus. Deydex, Gueylus, Meylus, Demerix, Albimex, Centus, Angaras, Dehetarix: Venus, Neyrgat! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of Mercury. Barhuyex, Emirex, Hamerix, Sehix, Deryx, Meyer, Deherix, Baix, Faurix: write, Mercury! Come swiftly with your spirits.

The prayer of the Moon. Guernus, Hedus, Maranus, Miltas, Taymex, Ranix, Mehylus, Degayus: Moon! Come swiftly with your spirits.

Leyequin, Leyelgane, Leyequir, Leyequerich, Leyeric, Leyerus, Leyexeris. Write these names on a glove, which you then burn; and while it burns, read the aforesaid names aloud. By this love and friendship will be moved.

This completes the book of Picatrix the sage on astrology.

Glossary

adunate: a technical term in medieval philosophy, meaning "entirely unified."

amicable aspect: in astrology, a trine or sextile aspect adverse aspect: in astrology, a square or opposite aspect almutaz: the planet ruling an astrological chart, calculated by one of several traditional methods; also called almuten.

ammoniac: Dorema ammoniacum, a Middle Eastern herb; not to be confused with the mineral sal ammoniac

angles: in astrology, the first, fourth, seventh, and tenth houses of the horoscope, also called cardines or cardinal houses

anima Mundi: the soul or consciousness of the universe, identified in Picatrix with the ninth sphere or primum mobile

Arabic parts: points on the horoscope often calculated from the relative positions of two planets and one of the house cusps

Aristotle: Greek philosopher, 384-322 BCE. During the Middle Ages, he was credited with many magical handbooks, none of which he actually wrote; nearly all references to him in Picatrix are to this pseudonymous literature.

aspect: in astrology, angular relationships between planets that bring their effects into interaction; traditionally trine (120 degrees) and sextile (60 degrees) are the amicable (favorable) aspects, and opposition (180 degrees) and square (90 degrees) are the adverse (unfavorable) aspects

azerne: either cupric oxide, CuO , or cuprous oxide, Cu_2O ; the latter is called red azerne bdellium: resin from the guggul tree, Commiphora wightii, a close relative of the myrrh tree, used for incense

benefic: in astrology, positive or favorable

bezoar: a stonelike mass sometimes found in the stomachs of goats, sheep, and other grazing animals, much used in medieval medicine as a cure for poison

black bile: also known as melancholy, one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of earth

blood: one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of air cadent: in astrology, three houses or signs away, generally from the Ascendant or other angles.

cadent houses: in astrology, the third, sixth, ninth, and twelfth houses of the horoscope calcination: another of the twelve standard alchemical processes, the act of subjecting a solid to heat until it is reduced to white ash calcitarat: according to Picatrix, the Hindu term for a suffumigation.

cardinal houses: see angles

cardines: see angles

ceruse: lead carbonate, PbCO_3

cinnabar: mercuric sulfide (HgS), a poisonous ore of mercury.

choler: see yellow bile

coadunation: in medieval physics, the fusion of the four elements in a material substance, or any other unification of separate things as one

coction: transforming a substance by keeping it at a steady heat for a period of time

collyrium: an ointment put on the eyelids.

colocynth: a species of bitter melon found in the Middle East and used in medieval medicine, also known as wild citrull.

combust: in astrology, within 8 degrees 30' of the Sun commanding signs: in astrology, the signs of the Zodiac from Aries to Virgo

common signs: in astrology, Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius, and Pisces complexion: in medieval medical theory, the balance of humors in a body; see humors confection: a mixture of magically powerful substances conjunction: in astrology, the meeting of two planets in the same degree of the Zodiac; in traditional astrology this technically not an aspect but it is generally treated similarly.

corruption: in medieval science, the process by which things go out of existence; normally paired with generation cubit: a unit of measure equal to the distance along the forearm and hand from the elbow to the tip of the longest finger debility: in astrology, a planet is said to have debility or be debilitated when it is in the sign of its detriment or fall, or in hostile aspect to one of the infortunes, or in one of the four cadent houses or otherwise afflicted.

dexter aspect: in astrology, an aspect in which the swifter planet moves away from the slower one.

dignity: in astrology, a planet is said to have dignity or be dignified when it is in a sign, term, or face that it rules, or the sign of its exaltation or triplicity, or in amicable aspect to one of the fortunes, or in one of the four cardinal houses or otherwise made fortunate.

direct: in astrology, a planet is direct when it moves along the ecliptic in its normal direction; the opposite of retrograde direct ascension, signs of: in astrology, the signs from Capricorn through Gemini

election: in astrology, the art of selecting in advance a time when a desired astrological influence is at its peak

electuary: a medicine blended with sugar or honey

elementary: pertaining to the four elements, or to the part of the universe below the circle of the Moon, where the four elements exist; see elements

elements: in medieval physics, earth, air, water, and fire, which are combinations of the qualities acting in matter rather than material substances in their own right

elixir: in alchemy, the philosopher's stone, a substance able to transmute ordinary metals into silver or gold face: in astrology, a division of 10 degrees or 1/3 of a zodiacal sign, also called a decan; each face is ruled by a planet using a variety of systems.

first matter: in medieval science, the prima materia or quintessence, the perfectly transparent and luminous substance out of which the heavens are made fixed signs: in astrology, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius

form: in medieval science, the basic characteristics of a material substance, rather than the outward shape taken by that substance

fortunes, the: in astrology, the planets Jupiter and Venus

galbanum: the resin of an Asian plant, Ferula galbaniflua, which was used as an incense generation: in medieval science, the process by which things come into existence; normally paired with corruption

genus: a general category to which one or more species belongs; see species

geomancy: an art of divination, very popular in the Middle Ages, that used sixteen figures of single and double points generated by random methods to create the equivalent of an astrological chart and answer questions gum ammoniac: the gum of Dorema ammoniacum, a Middle Eastern herb; not to be confused with sal ammoniac hayz: in astrology, a condition in which a masculine, diurnal planet is above the earth in the daytime in a masculine sign, or a feminine, nocturnal planet is below the earth at night in a feminine sign; a planet in its hayz is strengthened

Hermes: the legendary sage and magician of late classical, medieval, and Renaissance legend, also known as Hermes Trismegistus, the Thrice Great Hermes, derived from the Egyptian god Djehuti (Thoth). A vast number of magical, astrological, and divinatory texts were credited to him.

horary astrology: the art of astrological divination, which interprets a chart cast for the moment a question is asked in order to answer the question

humors: in medieval medicine, four subtle fluids, identified with blood, phlegm, yellow bile, and black bile, that maintain health when in balance and cause illness when out of balance

imbibition: the alchemical process of pouring a liquid onto a solid so that the solid absorbs the liquid impeded: in astrological terminology, a planet that is impeded is subject to a negative influence from other planets, or is in debility due to its place in the signs and houses of the astrological chart, also known as afflicted.

infortunes, the: in astrology, the planets Saturn and Mars ingress: the moment when a planet enters a given sign of the Zodiac, or reaches some other specific point in the Zodiac, such as its position at a previous time intellect: the capacity to know mental realities directly, without the intervention of the senses.

irascible appetite: in medieval psychology, the appetite or irrational drive that produces anger; it corresponds to fire and the choleric humor; see humors

litharge: lead monoxide, PbO

long ascension, signs of: see oblique ascension, signs of lord of the ascendant: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac rising at a particular moment

lord of the house: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac on the cusp of a given astrological house at a particular moment

lord of the question: the planet ruling the sign of the Zodiac on the cusp of the house governing the purpose of an electoral chart or magical working at a particular moment, the quesited house.

luting: fine clay used by alchemists to seal stoppers and lids onto their flasks; it was baked hard by the heat of the furnace, making a good seal

malefic: in astrology, negative or unfavorable marcasite: crystallized iron pyrite, FeS_2 .

melancholy: see black bile

moveable signs: in astrology, Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn nature: see quintessence

obeying signs: in astrology, the signs of the Zodiac from Libra through Pisces

oblique ascension, signs of: in astrology, the signs from Cancer through Sagittarius

occidental: rising before the Sun or another specified planet

olibanum: the resin of the Boswellia serrata tree, a close relative of the frankincense tree.

oriental: rising after the Sun or another specified planet

orpiment: arsenic trisulphide (As_2S_3), an extremely toxic pigment used in medieval art.

oxymel: a mixture of vinegar and honey, much used in medieval medicine palm: a measure of length, equal to the width of a human palm

Part of Fortune: one of the Arabic parts, points on the horoscope calculated from the positions of planets and other points; the point of fortune is calculated from the Sun, Moon, and the ascendant, and shows the location of good fortune in the chart

phlegm: one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of water

planets: in medieval astrology, the seven visible bodies that move regularly against the background of the fixed stars, the Sun, the Moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; the Sun and Moon are occasionally distinguished from the planets prelates: clergy of high rank, such as Christian bishops or Muslim imams.

prime form: the first Platonic form or idea, the form of the Good, True, and Beautiful, which in medieval Platonism was identified with God prime matter: the prima materia or original substance from which all other substances derive, identified in Picatrix as the substance or body of God

Primum Mobile: in medieval cosmology, the ninth sphere of the cosmos, which circles around the earth once in 24 hours and imparts movement to all the other spheres putrefaction: the act of leaving a substance to rot or ferment, one of the twelve classic alchemical processes

quadrivium: the four Pythagorean sciences that formed the high school subjects of medieval and Renaissance educational theory: arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy qualities: in medieval physics, heat, cold, dryness and moisture, which combine to create the four elements

quintessence: in ancient and medieval cosmology, the fifth element, the substance from which the spheres of the heavens are made; also called "high matter" and "nature" in Picatrix

racanus: a variety of large green lizard, also known as a lagarius, used in some Picatrix confections; we have not been able to identify the species reception: in astrology, a relationship between two planets, in which each planet is in a sign, term, or face in which the other is dignified

red azer nec: see azer nec retrograde: in astrology, the apparent movement of a planet in the opposite direction from its normal course; the opposite of direct

revolution of a nativity: a chart cast annually for the time when the sun reached the same position as at birth, used to predict the following year in the native's life

sal alkali: impure potassium carbonate, K_2CO_3

sal ammoniac: impure ammonium chloride, NH_4Cl sarcocolla: a resin from African shrubs of the genus Penaea, popular in the Middle Ages as incense short ascension, signs of: see direct ascension, signs of simple: in medieval medicine, a medicine made from a single herb sinister aspect: in astrology, an aspect made when the swifter planet moves toward the slower one species: a narrowly defined category of things, belonging to one or more genera; see genus spirit: in medieval physics, vital force, intermediate between consciousness and matter

succeedent houses: in astrology, the second, fifth, eighth, and eleventh houses of the horoscope

suffumigation: exposing an object to the smoke of incense, to charge it with the magical virtues of the incense term: in astrology, one of a set of sixty uneven divisions of the heavens; each term is ruled by a planet

thurible: an incense burner

via combusta: in astrology, a section of the Zodiac in the signs Libra and Scorpio, which has a malefic effect on planets placed in it; Picatrix identifies it as the section between 8 degrees Libra and 3 degrees Scorpio, while other sources place it between 15 degrees Libra and 15 degrees Scorpio virtue: in medieval thought, distinctive excellence and power, rather than strictly moral virtue vitriol of iron: iron sulphate (FeSO_4), also known as shoemaker's black.

yellow bile: also known as choler, one of the four humors of medieval medicine, associated with the element of fire

Footnotes

[180] This virtue, and the others named in this chapter, are drawn from medieval medicine.

[181] "Laws" in the original, but religious teachings are clearly meant.

[182] Ceruse, traditionally known as "spirits of Saturn."

[184] Tutia: an impure zinc oxide, a byproduct of traditional methods of making brass.

[185] This is in the original, even though an earlier paragraph assigns Greek to Jupiter and a later paragraph gives the Turkish language to Mercury.

[186] This includes the vagina as well as the penis; medieval medical theory classified vaginal secretions as the female equivalent of semen.

[187] The notory art was a branch of medieval magic designed to assist learning. Each branch of knowledge had certain notae or diagrams, and the magician concentrated on the nota for the art or science he wished to learn while repeating a specific prayer.

[190] Many of the following recipes for colors use extremely toxic ingredients that can be lethal even in very small doses. Do not attempt to use any of these recipes! The same colors can be obtained with safe synthetic pigments today.

[195] "Separated," that is, from physical bodies and the world of matter.

[196] The contradiction between this and the previous paragraph is in the original.

[197] Anger in medieval psychology is one of the appetites, the irrational drives that the wise control, and that control the unwise. It corresponds to fire and the choleric humor.

[198] This was standard medieval astrological practice. Since the position of the Sun in the zodiac can be easily tracked in tables, the position of the Sun in the sky at any moment allowed the medieval astrologer to calculate the ascendant and the house cusps.

[199] Gum ammoniac: this is the gum of Dorema ammoniacum, a Middle Eastern herb.

[200] Chaste tree: Vitex agnus-castus, a tree whose leaves were used in medieval medicine.

[201] A popular medieval image; collections of excerpts from books were called florilegia, literally "gathering of flowers."

[202] In medieval medical theory, "complexion" was the technical term for the balance of humors in the body.

[203] This is standard medieval medical advice.

[204] What follows makes it clear that this cross has equal arms, and is meant to stand upright on two legs like a letter X.

[205] That is, choose the time and date when you set up the figure by means of electional astrology so that it furthers your intention.

[206] This remarkable passage seems to echo Gnostic teachings about the cross or stauros, the instrument by which Jesus triumphed over the archons of the seven planets.

[208] That is, the incense rises straight through the celestial spheres to the sphere of the Zodiac, following the descending rays of the planet ruling the operation.

[209] This is the Kitab al-Istamatis or Liber Antimaquis, one of many medieval magical texts assigned to Aristotle, which is quoted repeatedly in the following chapters.

[210] This entire passage is reminiscent of the Poemandres, the first dialogue of the Corpus Hermeticum, in which Hermes has a conversation with a similar spiritual being. The ritual that follows is of great interest; it seems to bridge the gap between classical rituals for evoking a guardian spirit, of the sort found in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri, and early modern rituals for the same purpose such as the famous Abramelin working.

[211] This seems to be suggesting that the Latin word ymago, "image," comes from in ago, "I act in it", a standard kind of medieval analysis.

[213] Melancholia corresponds to the modern concept of depression.

[214] While Saturn rules sorrow, melancholy and the like, Jupiter counteracts them, and the powers of Jupiter may therefore be used to balance an excess of Saturnine influence.

[215] Bloodletting for medical reasons.

[216] This repetition is in the original, as are those in the lists that follow.

[217] A standard way to break into a house in the medieval Middle East was to apply hammer and chisel to masonry walls at night.

[218] According to medieval astrology, each of the world's religions came into being due to a particular conjunction of the planets, and so each faith has a ruling planet, the lord of its conjunction.

[220] Kewan in the Arabic text.

[221] "Roman" in Picatrix means the Greek dialect of the Byzantine (Eastern Roman) Empire, while "Greek" is the dialect of the Christian communities in the Muslim world. The names for Saturn in both dialects are descended from the classic Greek Kronos, and are given as Kronos in the Arabic text. These names generally suffered much garbling in their passage through Arabic and Latin.

[222] Sanasara in the Arabic text.

[227] Birgis in the Arabic text. A Roman name, Hurmuz, is also given in the Arabic text.

[229] Wihasfati in the Arabic text.

[230] That is, that the senses may be so purified so that they reflect the universe truly.

[236] Or a copper ring; the Latin word aes can mean either one. All other references to bronze in this section may be understood similarly.

[242] This is again Rubija'il in the Arabic text.

[248] Aras in the Arabic text.

[249] Islam was traditionally ruled by Venus, as suggested by the green flag bearing the evening star alongside the Moon, which is its traditional banner.

[256] Bit'a'il in the Arabic text.

[259] That is, mercury that has been solidified. Methods of fixing Mercury are important teachings in Western and Hindu alchemical tradition.

[260] Utarid in the Arabic text.

[271] The epicycle is the smaller circle that, in medieval astronomy, each planet except the Sun and Moon traced through the heavens in addition to its orbit. In modern terms, the ruling planet of the chart must be significantly further than its average distance from the Earth, but not yet at its maximum distance.

[272] The Arabic version of the Picatrix makes it clear that the rituals and invocations in this chapter are those of the Harranian Sabians.

[273] This is a remarkably good description of the ancient ritual of animal sacrifice, complete with hepatoscopy (divination by the liver of a sacrificed animal), one of the standard ancient forms of divination. The "lord of that place" is presumably the planetary god ruling the temple where the sacrifice takes place.

[274] Tamarisk seeds thrown onto hot coals burst and fly some distance. If the boy turned his back on the burning seeds in an attempt to flee, the burn marks on the clothing on his back would identify him as a coward; if he faced them bravely, he was fit for the rest of this ritual of Mars.

[275] This fascinating "experiment" is a ritual of initiation into a mystery cult of Mars for boys on the brink of manhood. There are few if any accounts of ancient mystery initiations that give so much detail.

[276] Presumably by the other worshippers.

[277] Cyprus in the Arabic text.

[278] Images of the gods; the "house" is clearly a temple.

[279] Bartim the Brahman in the Arabic text.

[280] The Arabic text says that the Brahman caste is named after this sage.

[281] Also known as The Nabatean Agriculture, a primary source for Picatrix.

[282] "Adunate" literally means "as one", ad unum, and is a technical term in medieval philosophy; the point being made is that Saturn's effects, altitudes, and magnificences are all one with his essential nature.

[283] The shift from third-person description to second-person address is in the original.

[284] Clearly the highest name of Saturn was originally written here, but was omitted.

[285] This is again Ibn Wahshiyyah.

[286] Given that the material in this chapter and the latter part of the previous one is pure Pagan planet-worship, the author's palpable panic here is understandable

[287] Barimas in the Arabic version

[288] These spirits of Saturn in the Arabic text are Tus, Harus, Qajus, Darjus, Tamas, and Darus respectively. The Arabic name of the spirit of Saturn's motion is Tahitus.

[289] The Arabic names of the spirits assigned to Jupiter are Damahas, Darmas, Matis, Magis, Daris, Tamis, Farus, and Dahidas respectively.

[290] The Arabic names of the spirits of Mars are Dagdijus, Hagidis, Gidijus, Magras, Ardagus, Handagijus, Mahandas, and Dahidamas respectively.

[291] The Arabic names of the spirits of the Sun are Bandalus, Dahimas, Abadulas, Dahifas, Ati'afas, Maganamus, Gadis, and Tahimaris respectively.

[292] The Arabic names of the spirits of Venus are Didas, Gilus, Hilus, Dahifas, Ablimas, Basalmus, Arhus, and Dahtaris respectively.

[293] The Arabic names of the spirits of Mercury are Barhujas, Amiras, Hitis, Sahis, Daris, Hilis, Dahdis, and Mahudis respectively.

[294] The Arabic names of the spirits of the Moon are Garnus, Hadis, Maranus, Maltas, Timas, Rabis, Minalus, and Dagajus respectively.

[295] The climes were basic concepts in medieval geography, regions of the earth arranged in bands from north to south.

[296] That is, the passage at the beginning of Book III chapter 7 that warns against polytheism.

[297] The Arabic text specifies that the Moon should be in her 20th Mansion, which is between 4 degrees 17' and 17 degrees 8' of Sagittarius.

[299] Thursday.

[301] These are Dahamus, Armas, Hilis, Magas, Adris, Tamis, Farus, Dahidas, Afrawas, and Ki'aqiras in the Arabic version.

[302] This is not necessarily an hour by the clock; the medieval sense of time was less exact than ours. "A long while" might be a better translation.

[304] This is Sa'ad al Bulah, 12 degrees 51' to 25 degrees 42' Capricorn.

[305] Sarcocolla is a resin from African shrubs of the genus Penaea, popular in the Middle Ages as incense.

[309] These are Didas, Gilus, Hamilus, Damaris, Timas, Samlus, Arhus, and Hataris in the Arabic text.

[310] These are Barhujas, Amiras, Hatis, Sahis, Darajas, Hatis, Dahris, and Magudis in the Arabic text.

[311] Planetary days normally begin at dawn, but Arabs and Jews both begin the day at sunset; here the standard practice has been changed to fit the Semitic custom.

[312] These are Gadnus, Hadis, Maranus, Maltas, Timas, Rabis, Minalus, Dagajus, and Garnus in the Arabic text.

[313] Ritual taboos of this kind were not uncommon in ancient Greek rituals connected with the Mystery cults, one of many elements of this chapter that show clear signs of descent from Hellenistic Pagan religion.

[315] In the days before rubber stoppers, alchemists sealed the lids on their flasks with fine clay, or luting, that was baked solid by the heat of their furnaces and made an effective sealant.

[316] The first part of the confection, made from minerals, is the body of the stone; the second, made largely from biological materials, is the spirit of the stone.

[317] This passage conceals a breathtaking ruthlessness, as oil of bitter almonds contains cyanide; four ounces daily for nine days would be more than enough to kill the patient. Presumably the point of the passage is to allow the book's owner to employ workmen for these alchemical workings without any risk that they would be able to duplicate the formulae later.

[318] That is, the world of matter, composed of the four elements.

[321] In the Arabic text, these are Argunas, Hadamijus, Finuras, Armitas.

[322] Galbanum: the resin of an Asian plant, Ferula galbaniflua, which was used as an incense [323] In the Arabic text, these are Bahimaras, Umaralis, Qadamidus, Finuras.

[324] In the Arabic text, the first three names are Haturas, Maljuras, Ulijas; the last is uncertain.

[326] In the Arabic text, these are O Dilus, Ahidas, Batrudalis, Bandulis, Wajagilas.

[327] In the Arabic text, the last three of these names are Hajadis, Qidamus, Andalis; the first is partly illegible.

[335] Spiritual spirits: spirituum spiritualium in the text. The phrase is just as strange in Latin as it is in English.

[337] The repetitions in the preceding paragraph are in the original, and may involve a scribal error.

[343] In the Arabic text, these names are Aqarjus, Gidajus, Jahilas, Jahidus.

[347] These animals correspond to the seven planets in descending order from Saturn to the Moon.

[348] Readers who consider these long lists of confections pointless should read Book III, chapter 4 again, and then study this quote attributed to Aristotle with the greatest care.

[349] The seventh confection is omitted in all manuscripts.

[351] Witchcraft: the Latin word in the text is maleficia, the standard medieval term for the magical curses believed to be employed by witches.

[352] Putrefaction, the act of allowing something to putrefy or ferment, is one of the twelve classic alchemical processes. This chapter includes several alchemical recipes dealing with the opus animalium or work with animal substances, the most secretive of the branches of alchemy.

[354] The Sun and Moon here, as in alchemical literature generally, are gold and silver.

[355] Oil of feces: the oily part of human feces, extracted by one of several alchemical methods.

[356] The "deadly illness of the thighs" is probably bubonic plague, which produces large black boils in the groin. Calcination is another of the twelve standard alchemical processes, and consists of subjecting a solid to heat until it is reduced to white ash.

[357] Calx: the white ash resulting from calcination.

[358] Combustion: in modern medical terms, inflammation, which in medieval medical theory could be caused by an excess of choler, the fiery humor, or by one of the other three humors that has become adust ("burning").

[359] Quartan fever: a relapsing fever of the kind that recurs every three days.

[360] This is a recipe for manufacturing imitation gold.

[362] Earth of blood: the dried blood solids left in the retort when all the liquid has been distilled.

[363] Garments of quality were a common target for thieves in medieval times.

[364] These same "amicable numbers" were used in a magical image in Book I, chapter 5, and the following instruction to write them in "the figures of al-Khwarismi" (Arabic rather than Roman numerals) appeared there as well.

[365] That is, you give 220 raisins, pomegranate seeds, or what have you to your target, and eat 284 of them yourself.

[366] This leap from India and Egypt is not as strange as it seems in the light of medieval geography. Most medieval geographers, Arab as well as European, believed that the Nile and the Ganges were the same river, both, after all, were infested by crocodiles, and that the Indian Ocean was a landlocked sea with the Nile curving around it through the unknown lands of the south.

[367] Medieval embryology held that females had an equivalent of semen, which mingled with the male's semen to produce offspring.

[368] This sentence all by itself does much to resolve the ongoing debate about the descent of modern science from Renaissance magical traditions, which were powerfully influenced by Picatrix.

[369] Prime form: the first Platonic form or idea, the Form of the Good, True and Beautiful, which in medieval Platonism was identified with God.

[370] Spirit: in medieval cosmology, vital force, which is intermediate between mind and matter.

[371] Note that "nature" here is a term for the quintessence, the subtle substance of which all things above the circle of the Moon is made, according to medieval physics.

[372] A fine point of medieval physics. When a composite object is corrupted, that is, goes out of existence because its component parts separate, it still exists in potential; there is simply no place where it happens to exist.

[373] That is, by one rather than by all five.

[374] The rest of this chapter is devoted to a careful examination of the concept of sense, sensus in Latin, which has no good equivalent in modern English. According to the competing definitions given in the following paragraphs, it represents (1) consciousness; (2) the inborn capacity to understand the basic rules of logic; (3) the sum of accurate human knowledge; and (4) the perception of eternal ideas as reflected in the material world.

[376] The distinction made here is, first, between consciousness (sense) in its general meaning, apart from the universe, and consciousness in interaction with the universe; and second, both of these as they relate to individual beings with bodies (such as humans), individual beings who are free from embodiment (such as God), and individual beings who exist in an intermediate state, such as spirits and angels.

[377] That is, the genus (category) of consciousness that exists in the universe as a whole, the Anima Mundi or soul of the universe.

[378] "This genus" is the category of individual conscious beings, of which human beings who are capable of the higher sciences are the lowest manifestation. The implication, already referenced in the words of Seusdalis above, is that ignorant human beings are not actually conscious.

[379] The Anima Mundi is thus the consciousness of the ninth sphere or Primum Mobile.

[380] That is, the more accurate the perception of natural bodies by the individual, the more that perception corresponds to the perception of natural bodies by the spirit of the universe.

[381] This is a basic rule of medieval logic: the definition of something must include the genus or class to which it belongs, and the differences or divisions that set it apart from other things of the same genus. A human being, for example, can be defined as a featherless biped; that is, it belongs to the genus of animals with only two feet, and its difference or division from other bipeds is that it lacks feathers.

[383] That is, of Aries.

[384] In the Arabic text, these words are "Rabqar rabqar iqam iqam taqfur taqfur."

[385] A cubit is a unit of measurement equal to the length of the forearm and hand from the elbow to the tip of the longest finger.

[387] that is, three times the width of your own palm; for most people, this will be 8 to 10 inches.

[388] These words are "Andab, Andab" in the Arabic text, and are to be said 50 times rather than 15.

[389] The sling was a common military weapon in ancient times, and ammunition for slings was often cast from lead and other metals.

[390] The first image should be made in the form of the magician.

[394] That is, on the night of the full moon.

[403] In the Arabic text, Salja'il.

[404] A fascinating tidbit. Capt, Caphtor in Hebrew, Keftiu in ancient Egyptian, was the name of the island of Crete in the days of the Minoan civilization. The Chaldeans, however, were an Aramaic-speaking people of Mesopotamia who seem to have had no connection to Crete.

[405] "The Mountains of the Moon" was the ancient and medieval name for the Ruwenzori range of East Africa, where the White Nile has its headwaters.

[406] In the Arabic text, al-Asmunain.

[407] The months of the Arabs begin on the first night in which the new moon is visible at Mecca.

[408] The Secret of Secrets, or Secretum Secretorum, was one of the more famous medieval handbooks of astrological magic; it was usually attributed to Aristotle, rather than Hermes.

[409] There are only 44 aphorisms; one referring to the properties of the planet Mercury was omitted below by scribal error at some point.

[410] The aphorism about Mercury should appear at this point.

[411] Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn at times appear to move backward in the heavens; unlike the fixed stars, the Sun, and the Moon, which always proceed in the same direction.

[412] The Centiloquium or Liber Fructus are 100 aphorisms traditionally attributed to Ptolemy, the most famous of the astrologers of antiquity.

[413] There are a total of 120 possible conjunctions between two or more of the seven classical planets, and a branch of astrological theory once accounted for everything in existence by means of these conjunctions.

[414] The text has astronomia here, but the modern distinction between astronomy and astrology did not yet exist in medieval times.

[415] In eo quod queritur, periculum generatur. Clearly Johannicius had to contend with the same attitudes in his students that more recent teachers of magic face in theirs.

[416] A great many more than ten arts are listed here, and no straightforward division into ten categories can be found in the text.

[417] The latter two belong to the art of hunting, which medieval authors often, and quite reasonably, considered a kind of warfare.

[418] That is, rhetoric.

[419] That is, logic. The reference to Aristotle in this case is correct; his books on logic formed the standard textbooks on the subject for centuries.

[420] Most of these are books on natural science by Aristotle. "Oyodus" derives from Greek hodos, "way" or "path."

[421] Plato wrote no book by this title; another medieval apocryphal work is meant.

[422] This is the famous electrum magicum, an alloy composed of silver, mercury, copper, gold, iron, tin, and lead

[425] In the Arabic text, the first of these angels does not appear, and the second is named Saljubarun.

[426] In the Arabic text, this name is Susab.

[427] In the Arabic text, this name appears as Barhawat.

[428] Or oil of acorns; the Latin is ambiguous.

[429] Lime is calcium carbonate, CaCO_3 , and vitriol is copper sulphate, CuSO_4 .

[430] There has been a scribal error here, as seven times nine does not equal 49. In all probability, the ceremony originally involved seven olive pits rather than nine.

[435] Ceruse: lead carbonate, PbCO_3 . Both this and litharge are highly toxic.

[436] It seems almost superfluous to remind the reader that the rest of this paragraph is not good advice to follow!

[437] That is, darnel.

[439] Sal alkali: impure potassium carbonate, K_2CO_3

[440] That is, its poisonous quality, dangerous to humans as well as other plants, will be dried up.

[441] This is the famous Upas tree. According to some medieval writers, it was so deadly that if the shadow of a flying bird touched it, the bird would drop dead from the air. In medieval European writings, the Upas tree was believed to be somewhere in the mysterious East; it is rather charming to find it claimed here as a tree of the distant and exotic land of France.

[442] High holy days: literally in suis pascalibus diebus, "on their Easter days."

[443] Impeded: in astrological terminology, a planet that is impeded is subject to a negative influence from other planets, or is in debility due to its place in the signs and houses of the astrological chart.

[444] Nowadays, this magical effect is credited to static electricity.

[446] Algemest: a scribal error for amethyst, which traditionally had this property. The word "amethyst" comes from a Greek word meaning "not drunk."

[447] The word that belongs here is omitted in all the manuscripts.

[448] A very complex sentence. To quench a metal is to put a hot piece of metal into a liquid; to sophisticate something, in medieval Latin (and English), is to exercise trickery on it. What is being discussed here, without saying so in so many words, is the manufacture of fake gold.

[449] Red azerne: cuprous oxide, Cu_2O .

[450] Jargoons: this word usually means "zircon," but these are not red, and "jargoon" has already been explained in Book II, chapter 5 as a term for the ruby.

[451] That is, a centaur carrying a bow.

[452] That is, with the herb named mercury; a suffumigation of metallic mercury is an unusually unpleasant method of suicide.

✻Acknowledgments✻

Tremendous thanks is due to James Nobles for his generous help in the early stages of this work. Had James not shown an interest in the project, it may never had gotten off the ground. Congratulations to Hashem Atallah for the fine work on the translation. Without his interest and unfailing patience the Picatrix in its present form would not be available. Thanks also to James Banner for putting me in touch with the translator.

Joel Radcliffe, of Ars Obscura Bookbinding, provided the original Arabic for this volume and has given excellent advice during the long process of publication. I appreciated especially Jeffery Gould's encouragement and service as well as the local history of this book. Jeffrey selflessly came to the rescue in the eleventh hour, thereby avoiding further delay in the project. Richard Brzustowicz kindly provided information on existing editions of Picatrix, many of which are currently out of print.

Special thanks to the Warburg Institute for their Arabic, German and Latin editions.

The combined efforts of these people have brought us the first English translation of the Ghayat Al-Hakim. Any mistakes herein are the responsibility of the editor.

❧Translator's Preface❧

When I was first asked to translate an eleventh century Arabic manuscript, I suspected it would be a daunting task. Arabic is a living language, with many dialects as well as a modern standard form. It has continued to grow (and sometimes shrink) as the necessities of the age required. Translating historic texts has always required a historical knowledge of Arabic as a language. Words change their meaning depending on when they are spoken or written, where they are spoken or written, and sometimes by who speaks the word. The theologian, for example, may use Arabic words with more specific intent, as a lawyer today might, than for example, the average author.

With this in mind, I was nevertheless surprised at the difficulty of translating a medieval work on astrology. Muslims have historically had a very embracing attitude to the pursuit of knowledge and the various scientific disciplines often intersected one another. Ghayat Al-Hakim was at once a metaphysical, philosophical, theological and a scientific work whose language borrowed meaning from each of these disciplines.

Translating this work became a many-layered obsession. To translate a work, you must first understand it. Although this may seem obvious, far too many works are translated as a technical exercise. Each work must be treated as poetry. What is the author truly saying? How is he or she using the words, the grammar and the syntax to convey his or her feelings? To do this, the translator must obviously have an understanding of the subject. There must be some common bond. I found that bond on a number of levels. Ghayat Al-Hakim deals with and assumes a knowledge of much Islamic theology and philosophy. However, it also deals with a science of many disciplines, which either originated in the Muslim world or were rediscovered by Muslims examining the works of those great civilizations before them, and which are no longer actively pursued. While Arabic as a language continued to develop, the science it was used to describe in this book became one of primarily historical interest.

This required me to engage in an examination of astrology on a much deeper plane than I had initially expected. Before translating could begin, true understanding had to start. I jumped into this with increasing interest even consulting with modern day astrologers to discuss concepts and terminology.

Ultimately, I feel I have provided a faithful rendition of this complex and fascinating topic. Those readers familiar with Arabic and particularly with historical Arabic texts may be surprised at the relative simplicity of the grammar and syntax used. Arabic is a poetic language and the modern day belief in conciseness and brevity were not a staple of the period. One Arabic sentence in Ghayat Al-Hakim could be the equivalent of one paragraph in English. I also endeavored to be faithful to the author by maintaining his approach and style in writing. The Ghayat Al-Hakim is a philosophical work as well as one concerning astrology, I have found much wisdom in these pages and my translation was often slowed as I reflected on the author's assumptions and on the different levels of meaning he may have been implying. It is my hope that this translation allows the reader the ability to catch at once the basic intent of the author as well as providing some context with which to examine the rich depths of the work.

Hashem Atallah

❖{Introduction}❖

This first English translation of The Picatrix, or Ghayat Al-Hakim as it is titled in classical Arabic, represents a major contribution to the corpus of Hermetic literature. The Warburg Institute, which published excellent scholarly editions in Arabic, German and Latin, decided not to do an English translation with the idea that only Medievalists would be interested in reading it, along with the prohibitive cost of a new translation. However, the continued increase in popularity of Hermetic studies as well as the growing number of English readers desiring to refer to this book, has made the publication of this English edition necessary.

Long regarded as source material the text of this Medieval work consists of four books covering the art and practice of Astrological, Talismanic and Astral Magic. The author has compiled information derived from 224 books by "ancient sages" with the intention of uniting all these diverse arts into a practical system. Although attributed to Pseudo-al-Majriti the question of exact authorship remains unanswered. The style in which the author of the Picatrix presents information resembles that of the Ikhwan al-Safa whose encyclopaedia, the Rasa'il, influenced Hermetic philosophy during the 10th and 11th centuries. Known as the Brethren of Purity, the Ikhwan al-Safa drew their philosophy from many diverse sources; Aristotle, Plato, Pythagoras, the Greeks, Persians, Indians and the Arabs [among whom perhaps Jabir Ibn Hayyam was the most famous]. There are even passages within the Picatrix taken directly from the Rasa'il, implying that the author shared some of the views expounded by the Ikhwan. Clearly, this sort of synthesizing reflects the tendencies of later Hermetic philosophers who were trying to unify all spiritual and philosophic traditions. It is unfortunate if not surprising that there is little information available in English about the Ikhwan al-Safa.

The Picatrix, like the writings of Jabir, could be an important connection between Hermetic philosophy in the West and the esoteric traditions of the Middle East. Its importance was first recognized by Alphonso the Wise in the thirteenth century, who had it translated into Spanish. Why Alphonso thought the Picatrix was worthy of his attention remains a mystery at least to the present editor. Nonetheless we have him to thank for the transmission of this work to the West and, while the significance of this document as compared to the Rasa'il is slight, it remains an important link in the history of Hermeticism. Brought out of the obscurity of the Middle East it passed through the hands of such prominent figures as Marsilio Ficino, Pico della Mirandola, Peter of Abano and Henry Cornileus Agrippa. A Latin translation made its impression on the Bard Rabelais and the Venetian Inquisition cites it as a cause for the arrest of Casanova. With such colorful figures surrounding the Picatrix, it is no wonder that scholars such as Lynn Thorndike and Francis Yates would dedicate many pages to it. Citing Henry Corbin, Christopher McIntosh suggests that it may even have influenced Johann Valentin Andrea when he wrote the Fama Fraternitatis.¹ Here we read the words of Aristotle, Plato, the Nabateans and among others, Hermes himself. Various ideas are brought together and presented as a whole system utilizing the symbolism of Arabic astrology and alchemy. Consequently we see a complicated astrological scheme united with talismanic magic and imbued with the mysteries of those correspondences to attain mastery of the Royal Art. Finally after 1000 years, the Picatrix is available for the eyes of English readers.

❧Prologue❧

IN THE NAME OF ALLAH, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. Praise be to Allah Whose guidance broke the darkness of ignorance; through His divine decree, miraculous events are created, and unto Him all shall return. With His decree, day and night became different. He creates things from nothing. He creates all beings and assigns them their allowances. He is the perfect original designer of every being; He neither treats things nor abandons them. Attributes are not sufficient to describe Him, and injustice is incompatible with Him. Words cannot adequately describe Him, and events cannot happen to Him. May Allah grant salvation to the Master of Messengers and the Seal of all Prophets to whom the Book (the Qur'an) was revealed in the unequivocal Arabic language. May Allah also grant His last Prophet, who has been recorded in the ancient Psalms, and His pure and righteous family salvation. May peace be upon him until the day of judgment.

For those who are inspired to delve into the science of philosophers in order to look for their secrets and search for their miracles, I would like to say that my motive in writing this book, which I titled The Goal of The Wise, is what I came across when I wrote the previous book titled The Rank of The Wise. I started writing this book in the year 343 when I finished editing The Rank of The Wise, and I completed it in 348. I was encouraged to write this book by the widespread interest by our generation in the book in which I talked about talismans and the art of different types of magic although they were not aware of what they were looking for or what approach they should follow. They desperately tried to find what has been made off limits for them by the philosophers who prevented them from discovering it and intentionally concealed it, made it vague and veiled it by indecipherable symbols because of the destruction it entails for the world. However, Allah, Who protects His World, forbids that from taking place. For that purpose they erected temples and sculptured pictures on them as signs to knowledge seekers and clues to researchers. They left many books replete with symbols, secrets and an indecipherable scripts that can only be understood by philosophers like themselves.

Accordingly, I sought to make it known and explain to the people the darkened path which leads to this divine conclusion and to point out what philosophers have concealed concerning this magical outcome as I endeavored to do in developing this result. I have divided this work into four books as I did in The Rank, and every book is divided into several chapters:

The First Book consists of seven chapters because the fast planets are seven. The first chapter deals with the Virtue of Wisdom. I discuss in the first book the astrological ratios and the pattern of these ratios in making talismans and how planets cast their light on other orbiting planets. Additionally, I present in the first book the vague meanings which have been withheld and concealed by philosophers.

The Second Book deals with the astrological pictures and their functions, and it explains the secrets which philosophers have concealed about these functions. This book also deals with the patterns of borrowing magic in the world of formation and dissolution as called by the philosophers of the elite. Moreover, it explains why Plato calls for finding these pictures.

❧{Ghayat Al-Hakim}❧

The Third Book is about the fortunes of the planets from the three generative origins, and it explains that there is nothing left in the world of formation and dissolution that agrees with such functions; reactions are impossible because of their fluidity and susceptibility to interaction, and consequently, nothing remains. I also mention their tempers in dealing with one another to attain the required magical function through the effect of the original or natural heat or both either by means of emanating incense or by whatever cooked food or drink that can get into the stomach.

The Fourth Book talks about the magic of the Kurds, the Nabateans, and the Abyssinians and examples of the magical tricks which are considered the best type of magic. I complete this purpose without withholding or concealing anything. I beseech Allah's assistance to help me complete this endeavor. He is my supporter, and with His support I hereby begin, Allah willing.

Book I

❧Chapter One❧

I WOULD LIKE TO ADVISE YOU, my brother, may Allah enlighten your mind, that wisdom is one of the most virtuous talents and one of the most preferred gains. Wisdom is the knowledge of sublime reasons for which beings exist, and the obvious reasons for things which have reasons for their existence. You must be certain of their existence and what and how they are. Although they are many, they ascend in order to the One Being, who caused other beings to be, whether they are far away or near by.

That One is first in reality and His Being does not stem from any other being. He is self-sufficient and thus, His Being does not gain from any other being; by no means does His Being benefit from any other being.

Fundamentally, He cannot be a body or in a body. His Being is different from all other beings and, in actuality, there is nothing in common, except the name only, although not in the concept of the name.

He can only be One; He is One in reality, and He is the One Who gave all other beings their identities by which we learn to identify them. He is the original Truth who assigns to others their truth. His truth is self-sufficient and consequently, He does not gain from the truth of others.

It is unimaginable to think that there is more perfection than His: not to mention that it does not exist, a more complete truth than His, or more complete Oneness than His. He is All-knowing of how other beings derived their essence, their realities, and their identities from Him. He is also All-knowing of how cause-and-effect gains its characteristics.

He is all-knowing of the ranks of all beings: some are first, some are middle, and some are last. The last have causes, but they are not causes per se for things below them. Similarly, the middle beings have causes before them, and they are causes for things under them as well. The first are the causes of what are under them, but they do not have causes above them. He is All-knowing of how the last ascend in rank until they reach the first, and how the order is managed at first and accepted by all beings in their ascending order until they reach the last.

This is wisdom in reality, my student; so what do you think of the one whose approach is this? Wisdom, may Allah bless you, is broad and noble, and seeking it is an obligation, as well as a virtue. It enlightens the mind and the soul with an everlasting and splendid light as they seek it and understand it and pay little attention to this mortal world. Wisdom will motivate the mind and soul to ascend from the world from which they were originated to the higher distinguished world where they shall grow and settle so that Allah may advise them of the cause-and-effect of the world and the reason for relating the cause to its effect. Allah is in their midst so that they may certainly know that He is the cause of the world, and the world is His effect, and the reason for this effect is worshipping Him and recognizing His existence. He said, "I have only created djinn and men, so that they may serve Me,"² that is to know Me. He will protect them and provide them with material subsistence so that they may thank Him and praise Him. He can bring about misery, as well as happiness to whomever He wills, and He can keep whomever He wills in His ever-lasting Grace.

Wisdom has three subjective characteristics: it grows and never vanishes, it chastises and disciplines, and it will not approach anyone who is not interested in it.

You may know that this conclusion, which I am about to disclose, would not have existed without Wisdom. It has been rightly called conclusion by the wise. To people specialized in logic, a conclusion is the fruit of analogy as mentioned in the introductions. The only purpose for presenting these two conclusions is to motivate you to seek knowledge. Knowledge can only be obtained by the wise who are well versed in all arts of wisdom: some of these arts are religious such as the science of revelation, the science of asceticism and the science of *fiqh*³, some are natural such as the celestial, the world, the universe and evil, some are theological such as the knowledge of the self and the Creator, and some are logical and analytical. Accordingly, the rank of these two conclusions on the scale of wisdom is similar to the rank of deduction on the scale of analogy. This is the best of what has been presented in the introductions. I hereby have disclosed to you a miraculous secret. This is to let you know that the outcome is the fruit of the two introductions, which is called the indicia. If the outcome is productive, it is called accumulative, whereas the Greeks call it 'syllogismus.'⁴

The introduction is composed of a theme and some information related to the theme; the theme is the subject in the philologist's discipline, and the information related to the subject is the predicate. This information may be true or false. It is certain that the introduction or the related information are not defined because what is stated in the predicate is taken or drawn from the subject, although some of it could be defined and some could be drawn. Thus, the information is neither limited or drawn, although some of it could be limited and some could be drawn. Informational statements are usually used in most cases. Most of the other styles of speech are not used by philosophers such as the imperative, informative, interrogative and vocative styles because they do not bear truthfulness or falsehood. What we have presented needs a long explanation, that is beyond the scope of this book. Whoever likes to get further information about this topic, may consult relevant sources.

❧Chapter Two❧

YOU MAY KNOW that this conclusion is what is termed as magic. Magic is, in fact, everything that absolutely fascinates minds and attract souls by means of words and deeds. This fascination and attraction are demonstrated by exclamation, following, listening and approval. They are difficult for the mind to perceive, and their causes are veiled from the simpleton. That is because it is a divine force associated with advanced reasons for the purpose of understanding it. What I am working on is a vague discipline. Its subject is a spirit within a spirit, that includes analysis and imagination. A talisman is a spirit within a body, while chemistry is a body within a body. In summary, the causes of magic are beyond the understanding of the majority and it is difficult to invent.

The fact about a talisman is that its name is reversed (The letters of the word talisman in Arabic are 'talsam' and when this combination is reversed, it becomes 'maslat' which means domination, control); it is domination because its essence is coercion and control. It functions according to the purpose it was composed for: overpowering and coercing, by using numerical ratios and placing astrological secrets in certain bodies at appropriate times and by using incenses that are powerful and capable of bringing out the spirit of that talisman.

This situation is similar to that of the second result, termed elixir, which transforms a body to itself by coercion. It is an interacting yeast that changes things from their essence; it is like poison that travels in similar bodies and consequently, changes them to its nature in order to transform a person to another by a force placed within itself. You may know, brother, that a talisman, to philosophers, is like yeast, which is an elixir composed of earth, air, water and fire, the composition of which is transformed through interaction to its condition and is reversed to its image. Another example is Alchemy, which does the same thing; it quickly transforms the body to itself and changes it from one state to another of a higher quality; a new form, new characteristics, more solid and clear of corrosion and impurity. That is how the forbearers understood it.

The term elixir means the coercing force of the forces acting on it and compelling it to be transformed into its essence and thus become similar to it. An elixir can only be some sort of a combination of animals, plants and metals. To them this combination makes up the world and with this combination the world is made up and administered; plants can not survive on their own as well as animals which need the plants for their survival. Similarly metals need fire for melting and forming in the presence of mercurial humidity. This is what I have overlooked in The Rank Book. I would like to go back to our topic to state that: magic is limited to two branches: theoretical and practical. The science of magic deals with knowing the positions of fixed planets, the location of their pictures, the manner by which they cast their light on orbiting planets and the astrological ratios. These are the elements to be known in order to achieve what you are looking for. Under the science of magic, all options and talismans were dealt with and discussed by our forbearers. You may know that he who chooses to do this, will have delved in magic. This is necessary. The best part of the scientific magic is speech. The Prophet is quoted as saying, "Verily, some of the speech is charming". Plato also said in his book Al-Fusul ⁵, "As a friend may turn into an enemy by unfortunate words, an enemy may become a friend by nice words." Is not that a sort of magic?

The practical science deals with the three generating origins and with what the orbiting planets are emanating in them from the planets' forces. This is termed as the special attributes by their authors although they do not know their causes or realities and they do not see any need to uncover the secrets of the forbearers or their (the three origins) mood in interacting with one another. The element heat is sought before the incense to get the help of the complete forces to overcome the incomplete forces, or a natural heat is sought from food. No other types of heats are sought and no help by animal or human spirits is needed. The magical tricks called nayranjat are the best type of this practical magic.

You may also know, my brother, that some of the magic is gained and some are tricks. The gained part is about what the Designer of the paths of the د, ه, and و has done. In this regard, it is noteworthy to quote The Almighty, "Take four birds, tame them to turn to thee"⁶.

The ancient Greeks specialized in the nayranjat, flipping the eye 'Tarjih'⁷, and talismans, which they called 'Syllogismus', which means bringing down the high spirits. They call the totality of the above magic. The ancient Greeks were not able to deal with this science without astrology. What is necessary to know about astrology is that the celestial equator, which is known as the crown, consists of planets. It is also necessary to know that these planets are grouped into twelve signs, which have certain implications on all beings in this world and that the seven planets have certain fortunes acquired from the signs according to their particular direction and situation. Furthermore, it is essential to know the relevant characteristics of similar signs, the characteristics of the seven planets, the two nodes and their positions in the celestial band, the characteristics of the planets' implications on all beings in this world, what happens to the seven planets individually and in their inter-relationships, as well as the authentic implications of the principles governing the behavior of stars. Moreover, it is imperative to know how to exploit the most dominant of the seven planets, the order of its dominance and how to pull out its arrows. Additionally, it is crucial to know the position of the seven planets in the celestial band. This knowledge about astrology is necessary. It is available for anyone who would like to have more information in available books. In this regard, the Wise said, "I am the One who is elevated above the seven heavens". He means that He attains them with his intellectual faculty. The Almighty also said in this regard, "And We raised him (Prophet Idris) to a lofty station"⁸.

⁸Sura 19 verse 57

❧Chapter Three❧

YOU MAY KNOW, O seeker of the truth and reality of astrology, that the celestial sphere is a physical ball perfectly circular, and so is everything contained therein at all times and in all states. Some people thought that certain events may change the circular shape of the celestial sphere at certain times. By no means will this ever happen because the shape of the celestial sphere is the cause for its shape, since its essence has this shape. I mean that it is the first to be a perfect shape, and this perfect shape is the circle because this circle is made of one line. This is the primary cause of perfection. However, this cannot be easily proved. Astrology is an essence and dividing it into angles is a man-made technique. If we start with this technique, we will ascend from it to the essential obligation.

The method of learning this subject must follow a reversed procedure. Similarly, learning the technique of angles is the approach of learning the state of the celestial sphere. Nothing of the celestial bodies in the world of formation and dissolution will have a place in the celestial sphere and no part of the celestial sphere will have a place in the world of formation and dissolution at all unless that is achieved by coercion. As we mentioned, the celestial sphere is perfectly rounded from all sides. It is formed by one curved line; there is a point inside it and all distances from this point to the circumference are equal. This point is the center and the lines refer to the beams of planets cast on the world at the center. This is the influence of talismans. It acts as if it is an edge or a drawing that has been agreed upon. Since the celestial sphere is a comprehensive ball encompassing the entire world, there is no space or living beings beyond it.

Ether is in a static state; it is the medium where other celestial bodies return. The celestial bodies are located in its abdomen in a slanting position from the center, because its center is at the side of the slanting center of the earth. The behavior of all celestial bodies is the same, and follows the motion of the celestial sphere. The heat emanating from it contributed to bringing this world to its being. The number of angles of the celestial sphere are 360, and the number of images is 360. The rules (for the management of the world) are built in because they follow certain ratios.

Some people surmised that the celestial sphere is useful, that the usefulness of ether in the higher world is demonstrated by planets and heat and that the pictures within the angles resemble the positions of the planets when they combine together.

Others believed that the pictures within the sphere's angles are the heart of astrology and the cause of all beings.

As for the angles' functions, when an angle falls within a point, any point, where one of the fixed planets is situated and at the same time one of the orbiting planets gets to that point, then you will know that is the status of that planet's influence on Earth. Examples are: ♄ moves cold and dryness; ♋ moves heat and humidity; ☿ moves heat and dryness; ♎ moves low heat and high humidity; ♊ moves low heat and dryness; and the ♏ moves cold and humidity.

The fixed planets have similar functions. Thus, if an angle has the function of a planet that moves heat and releases low dryness and humidity to its followers, and the ☉ alone was at that place, then it decides that dryness and humidity must grow and increase. Similarly, if it happens that the planet is functioning by the ☉'s force, the growth will be faster. This was a very difficult and vague subject for ancient philosophers. Vagueness, to them, is to veil the apparent meaning of the text and conceal its intrinsic meaning. This is called vagueness, so be aware of that.

❧{Chapter Four}❧

THEN WHEN THE PEOPLE needed to make talismans, they found that they must know the planets' direct ratios, affecting their spreading functions, which are the essence of making talismans. I am presenting to you some of these ratios to be used as foundations upon which further steps can be built. This, therefore, becomes the astrological subject for making talismans. The maker of a talisman must be knowledgeable of the astrological ratios and formulas, confident of what he is doing and clear of any doubt or uncertainty in what he is doing in order to enforce the function of the speaking soul whereby the will, from the same causes reaches its (the talisman's) maker to obtain the sought result. I would like to introduce you to a certain state in the space close to our world, that is, do not start any work until the ☽ is in the position of the degree that produces this function. There are certain functions for the ☽ that are apparent. I will present a group of these functions later. At this time, I would like to talk about the functions of the ☽ in relationship to its particular position, in accordance with the consensus of the Indians, especially when it is in the 28th position.

❧{1. THE HOUSE OF AL-SHARATAIN}❧

It starts from the beginning of the ☿ position to 12 °, 51 ', 26 " from it. The Indians indicate that when the ☽ is at this position, they travel and use laxative medicines. Thus, you may use this as a principle in making a talisman for a traveler and his safety. Also, when the ☽ is at this position, a talisman can be made to create discord and animosity between spouses or two friends. Furthermore, at this position, a talisman can be made to arrange for a particular slave to escape or be released, and another to sabotage a partnership agreement between partners because it is a fiery evil. I would like, at this juncture, to advise you of a principle: Let the ☽ always serve good deeds, and be safe and clear of any sinister or burning act. However, if it serves evil and sinister acts, let it burn. I want you to understand that.

❧{2. THE HOUSE OF AL-BOTEIN}❧

It consists of 12°, 51', 26" starting from the ♀ position to 25°, 42', 52" from ♀. Talismans are made at this position for drilling wells and rivers, achieving wishes and digging out buried treasures. Other talismans are made to help the growth of crops or they may be made to sabotage a marriage before it is consummated. Some talismans create excitement and stimulation because of their fiery fortune. Talismans may also be made at this position to release a slave or to worsen the situation for a captive to harm him.

❧{3. THE HOUSE OF AL-THURAYYA}❧

It consists of 25°, 42', 52" starting from ♀ to 8°, 34', 18" from ♀. Talismans at this position are made for the safety of those who travel by sea, for sabotaging a partnership, for releasing a prisoner or torturing him, for the beneficial use of chemistry and fire, for hunting, for promoting friendship and love between spouses, for destroying sheep, goats and cows, and for a slave to disobey his master until he is released. This type of talisman usually brings good luck. Thus, you may be aware of that.

﴿4. THE HOUSE OF AL-DEBARAN﴾

It consists of $8^{\circ}, 34', 18''$ starting from ♄ to $21^{\circ}, 25', 44''$ from it. Talismans are made at this position to corrupt a city, to build a building which is not expected to last or to stay in good condition, for destroying crops, for maintaining a slave under his master's control, for ruining the relationship between spouses and maintaining estrangement between them, for bringing about bad luck to a person engaged in drilling, as well as causing misfortune for a person digging out buried goods and talismans for attracting scorpions and snakes.

﴿5. THE HOUSE OF AL-HAQ'AH﴾

It consists of $21^{\circ}, 25', 44''$ starting from ♄ to $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ from ♂ . Talismans at this position are made to promote the welfare of children, for advancing in their education in Islam, in writing and in trades, a talisman for the safety of a traveler and his well being as well as a speedy voyage. A talisman for the safe structure of buildings, for sabotaging partnerships, for promoting reconciliation between spouses especially if the ♄ and the star of destiny represent a constellation sign of a good human being clear of misfortunes and burning as we mentioned above. The constellations that represent human beings are: ♂ , ♂ , ♂ , and ♂ .

﴿6. THE HOUSE OF AL-HAN'AH﴾

It consists of $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ starting from ♂ to $17^{\circ}, 8', 36''$ of it. Talismans at this position are made for corrupting cities and confining them, for retaliating from kings, for inflicting harm and damage on enemies, for ruining crops and trusts, for promoting the welfare of partners and the conditions of hunting, and for causing adverse effects of medications when they are administered.

❧Picatrix❧

❧7. THE HOUSE OF AL-DHIRAH❧

It consists of 17° , $8'$, $36''$ starting from Π to the end of it. Talismans at this position are made for the promotion and blessing of trade and crops, as well as the safety of a voyager, for reconciliation between partners and friends, for preventing flies from entering a place of trade where they may spoil the product and necessitate redoing it. For the fulfillment of a wish from a ruler or a dignitary whom you hope to meet, for promoting the welfare of an escaped slave, for disposing of property, a house or money or similar assets from a person.

❧8. THE HOUSE OF AL-NATHRAH❧

It starts from the beginning of $\odot$ to 12° , $51'$, $26''$ from it. Talismans are made at this position for reconciling love and friendship to an estranged couple, for the welfare of a traveler, for a longer period of imprisonment of captives and prisoners, for the deterioration of kingdoms, and a talisman to repel mice and bedbugs.

❧9. THE HOUSE OF AL-TARF❧

It consists of 12° , $51'$, $26''$ starting from $\odot$ to 25° , $42'$, $52''$ from it. Talismans are made at this position for ruining crops, disgracing travelers on land, causing harm to others, planting discord among partners and for jailing an adversary whose harm is sought.

❧10. THE HOUSE OF AL-JABHAH❧

It consists of 25° , $42'$, $52''$ starting from $\odot$ to 8° , $34'$, $18''$ from δ . Talismans at this position are made for reconciling differences between spouses, for harming the enemy or a traveler, for making the situation worse for a captive, for strengthening the structure of a building, and for bringing partners together for their mutual benefit.

﴿Ghayat Al-Hakim﴾

﴿11. THE HOUSE OF AL-ZUBRAH﴾

It consists of $24^{\circ}, 47'$, starting from δ to $21^{\circ}, 35', 2''$ from it. Talismans at this position are made for gaining the compassion of kings, dignitaries and brothers, for planting discord, animosity, disease, complications and destruction, for an opportunity to meet kings and appeal for their favors, for contacting dignitaries and endeavoring to pay for releasing a slave. Talismans for these purposes are recommended for releasing captives, for besieging cities, for increasing trade as well as for promoting the welfare of a traveler, for a strong and long-lasting building and for reconciliation between two partners.

﴿12. THE HOUSE OF AL-SARFAH﴾

It consists of $21^{\circ}, 25', 44''$ starting from δ to $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ from III . Talismans at this position are made for increasing farms and newly planted trees, for inflicting harm on a person by causing him to lose his assets, for breaking ships down, for promoting the welfare of partners as well as for reconciling differences between them for improved work conditions and product, and for improvement of conditions for successful hunting.

﴿13. THE HOUSE OF AL-AWWA﴾

It consists of $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ starting from III to $17^{\circ}, 8', 36''$ from it. Talismans at this position are made for promoting trade and farms, for enhancing the welfare of a traveler and the consummation of marriage between spouses, for releasing captives and for contacting kings and dignitaries. So be aware of that.

﴿14. THE HOUSE OF AL-SIMAK﴾

It consists of $17^{\circ}, 8', 36''$ starting from III to a complete 30° from it. Talismans at this position are made for reconciling differences between spouses, for recovery from illness by treatment, for ruining farms and newly planted trees as well as damaging trusts, for harming a traveler, for the promotion of the welfare of a slave and a voyager and for bringing agreement and harmony among partners.

❧{15. THE HOUSE OF AL-GHAFAR}❧

It starts from Ω to $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ from it. Talismans at this position are made for drilling wells, digging up and retrieving treasures, for obstructing a traveler from making his trip, for creating discord between spouses, for spoiling friendship between friends and ruining partnership relations, for expelling and expatiating enemies and for the destruction of communities and towns.

❧{16. THE HOUSE OF AL-ZUBANA}❧

It consists of $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ starting from Ω to $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for damaging merchant shops, newly planted trees and farms, for separating friends and spouses, for the severe punishment of the wife if the husband so desires, for harming a traveling adversary and creating discord between partners, as well as for releasing captives from captivity.

❧{17. THE HOUSE OF AL-IKLIL}❧

It consists of $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ starting from Ω to $8^\circ, 34', 18''$ from $\mathbb{M}$. Talismans at this position can be made for the improvement and increase of livestock, for isolating cities and stabilizing buildings, as well as for the safety of a traveler at sea. There is a consensus that a friendship initiated when the $\mathfrak{D}$ is at this house will not be broken. Accordingly, this house is selected for tailoring talismans to make friends.

❧{18. THE HOUSE OF AL-KALB}❧

It consists of 8°, 34', 18" starting from III to 21°, 25', 44" from it. Talismans at this position can be made for pledging loyalty to kings to help them overcome their enemies, for stabilizing buildings, for marrying a widow, a divorced woman or a deflowered but not married woman when the D is at the House of O and when it is at the Previous House. Also, talismans can be made at this position for releasing slaves, for the growth of newly planted trees and the safety of a voyager, as well as for creating disagreement among partners.

﴿19. THE HOUSE OF AL-SHAULAH﴾

It consists of 21°, 25', 44" starting from III to 4°, 17', 10" from X . Talismans at this position can be made for isolating cities, defeating enemies, fulfilling wishes, making a person lose all his money, for separation and alienation, for the welfare of a traveler and the growth of crops, for releasing a slave or enabling him to escape from his master, for breaking ships down and destroying them, for creating discord among partners and for enabling captives and prisoners to escape.

﴿20. THE HOUSE OF AL-NA'AIM﴾

It consists of 4°, 17', 10" starting from X to 17°, 8', 36" from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the discipline of riding animals which are hard to tame, for a speedy travel and making the distance shorter, for bringing a concerned person home, for promoting friendship, for restricting captives, as well as for worsening the situation for partners.

﴿21. THE HOUSE OF AL-BAL'DAH﴾

It consists of 17°, 8', 36" starting from X to a complete 30° from it. Talismans at this position can be made for stabilizing buildings, increasing crops, for retaining assets and live stock, for ensuring the safety of travelers and for a wife to be divorced from her husband and never to be able to marry again.

❧{22. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-DA'BIH}❧

It starts at the beginning of Z to $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the treatment and recovery from diseases, for the separation of spouses and lovers, for causing a certain woman to be raped, for the release and escape of a slave from his location, for creating discord between partners and for the release of captives and prisoners.

❧{23. THE HOUSE OF SA'D BULA}❧

It consists of $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ starting from Z to $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the treatment and recovery from diseases, for damaging assets, for estrangement between spouses as well as for releasing or saving captives.

❧{24. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-SU'UD}❧

It consists of $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ starting from Z to $8^\circ, 34', 18''$ from W . Talismans at this position can be made for the improvement of merchant shops and the condition of spouses, for bringing victory to armies and military detachments, for damaging the circumstances of partners and also for releasing captives. Additionally, he who tries to start a trade at this position will not be successful and will never be able to finish what he started. So be aware of that.

❧{25. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-ALIBIYA}❧

It consists of $8^\circ, 34', 18''$ starting from W to $21^\circ, 25', 44''$ from W . Talismans at this position can be made for isolating cities, for harming and defeating enemies, for dispatching successful messengers and spies, for damaging crops and rendering a husband impotent, for making the situation worse for a captive and for establishing and stabilizing buildings.

﴿26. THE HOUSE OF AL-FARGH AL-MUKDIM﴾

It consists of $21^{\circ}, 25', 44''$ starting from $\aleph$ to $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ from $\aleph$. Talismans at this position can be made for achieving all sorts of good things: for restoring love and friendship, for the fulfillment of the wish of a traveler to be able to make a trip, for stabilizing buildings, for the safety of travelers by ships, for damaging the relationships between partners and for restraining a captive and torturing him.

﴿27. THE HOUSE OF AL-FARGH AL-MU'HIR﴾

It consists of $4^{\circ}, 17', 10''$ starting from $\aleph$ to $17^{\circ}, 8', 36''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for a successful trade, productive crops and quick recovery from diseases, for damaging the assets of the person you are concerned with, for damaging the relationship between spouses and for hurting someone riding on a ship, prolonging the captivity of a prisoner and harming slaves.

﴿28. THE HOUSE OF AL-RISHA, OR BATN AL-HUT﴾

It consists of $17^{\circ}, 8', 36''$ starting from $\aleph$ to the end of $\aleph$. Talismans at this position are made for a successful trade, productive crops, treatment of diseases and destroying trusts, for ensuring a traveler's safety, for restoring relationships between spouses, and for restraining, harming and torturing prisoners, as well as for hurting someone riding on a ship. You should be aware of that.

The Indians relied on the above 28 pictures in their choices and attempts. That is what we have found as we reviewed their books in this regard. The important thing, as we mentioned above, is that when you try to do good things, the $\Im$ must be clear of any misfortune or any burning and replete with good luck. Also when you start a good endeavor, let the $\Im$ move from one good luck star to another and when you start an evil act, you do the opposite. So you should be aware of that.

As we have mentioned before, the talisman maker needs to be certain of what he is doing. He needs to be prepared and ready to accept the outcome of the intended effects. This readiness can only be realized in the human experience. However, preparedness, in fact, is the reaction of the physical realities, such as the preparedness of wax to accept the picture and the reaction of the killed to the killer; it is the preparedness of the killed to accept the killing because his organs are too weak to fight. Preparedness for weakness develops in reaction to strength. This kind of strength must be available in the substances needed to make talismans, since not every substance is good for every action.

There is a consensus on this principle in all available books. Since there should be preparedness and readiness for acceptance, acceptance must already be there and because acceptance must already be there, the sought action will exist and emerge. Existence is the acceptance to reflect the picture so that the primordial acceptance and the picture become one, such as a person's picture sticking to water or to a mirror, as well as the incorporation of the divine deity to a human being, as in Christianity, and the incorporation of the soul to the body. So understand that and be aware of it. This is to let you know that my objective in presenting these details is only to uncover what the people have concealed. Allah, Most High, does not entrust these details except to those whom He pleases. This is His way of doing things, praise be to Him.

Going back to our objective, I would like to say that if you are working during the daytime, let the ☽ be in the ascendant, and let the ascendant be one of the daytime constellations. Similarly, if you are working during the night, let that be one of the night-time constellations. If the ascendant is one of the straight-ascending constellations, work will progress smoothly to the end, however, if the ascendant is one of a curved-ascending constellations, work becomes difficult.

Nonetheless, what determines whether work is good or bad depends on whether the overlooking planets are bad luck or good luck planets. If the ascendant was in a straight-ascending constellation, but a bad luck planet was looking over it, or there was bad luck in it, that will damage the work and make it very difficult. But if it was in a curved-ascending constellation, and a good luck planet was looking over it, or if there is good luck in it, that will make work easy. Similarly, if the daytime and night time constellations ascend in a different form; that is if the daytime constellations ascend at night and the night time constellations at daytime and the good luck planets are looking over them, work will progress, but if the bad luck constellations are looking over, it will become more evil.

A talisman maker must necessarily be knowledgeable of the straight, curved, fixed, variable, of the physical shape, as well as of the night time and daytime constellations. Moreover, he must necessarily be knowledgeable of the good luck and bad luck planets, the clarity of the ☽ from any symptom of diseases it may be exposed to, and which planet and constellation are used for what type of talismans. He must also be aware of the ☽'s eclipse.

Avoid as much as you can the ☽'s eclipse when making talismans for good deeds. Wait until it is released from this knot; that is when the ☽ advances or stays behind the ☼'s aphelion¹⁰ by 12° from the beginning of the eclipse to the aphelion of the ☼, and 12° after it leaves the aphelion of the ☼. Also beware of the presence of ♀ or ☿ within 12°, or if the ☽ is declining towards the southern latitude or advancing ahead of Al-Ras or Al-Deneb¹¹ or entering or facing the ☼ by less than

¹¹Al-Ras, the Head; Al-Deneb, the Tail.

12°. Then it will be burning because it will be in contact with the ☉. This is the worst misfortune; its motion will be slow and it may not be able to reach the 12° destination. In this case, its motion resembles ♄'s motion. It will be on its way to burning, the climax of which starts from 18° from ♎ to 3° from ♍, or that can be at the end of the constellations because it is within the domain of the stars causing misfortune. Or it could be declining from the midst of the sky to Al-Tasi¹².

When a necessary task that you cannot delay crops up, improve the situation of the ☽ by letting ♀ and ♀ be in the ascendant or in the midst of the sky, and they will protect the ☽ from getting burned.

¹²Literally, "the Ninth", referring to the astrological house of that number and also considered the Mid Heaven. See chart.

❧Chapter Five❧

EXAMPLES OF THE CELESTIAL BODIES' relationships relied on in the making of talismans:

*A talisman for two lovers to get together
and to have a long-lasting relationship*

Talismans of this type are made when the ascendant is in the hour of ♌, and Al-Ras and the ☽ together with ♀ are conjunct to them or facing them and when the sign of Al-Sabi is connected to the sign of the ascendant in a triangular or a hexagonal¹³ form. Combine them side by side and bury them in the location of love. A talisman of this type is also made for a man who leaves his family whom you wish to have return.

A talisman for the destruction of an enemy that you want to drive away from his location.

A talisman for such a purpose is made in the hour of ♂ when the ☽ is in ♍. Bring as much misfortune as you can to the ascendant as well as to its master. Also bring misfortune to the house of fatefulness and let the ascendant master be connected to the house of destiny. Additionally, bring misfortune to the house of the ascendant and into the house of fatefulness which will be connected to a misfortune in Al-Rabi or in Al-Sabi. Bury the talisman outside the city.

A talisman for the destruction of a city.

Perceive the image of the ascendant of that town and bring misfortune to the house of its livelihood and to its house of fatefulness, to the master of the ascendant, to the ☽ and to the house of the master of the ascendant. Bring misfortune to Al-Ashir and bury it in the middle of the city.

A talisman to improve a city or a location.

It is made with the ascendant of a Sa'ad¹⁴; bring good luck to Al-Ashir, to the master of Al-Thani and to Al-Thamin. It also brings good luck to the ☽ and to the master of the house of the ☽. Bury it in the middle of the city and you will see miracles, Allah willing.

A talisman for the destruction of a city or a location.

It is made in the hour of ♄ when it is a planet of misfortune and through that you may bring misfortune to the city ascendant, to the ascendant's master, and to the house of the ascendant. You may let Al-Su'ud¹⁵ be absent from the ascendant. Additionally, you may drop Al-Su'ud and the poles from the triangle of the ascendant. Bury it in the middle of the city.

¹⁵ Stars of good-luck.

A talisman for expanding wealth and trade.

Make a picture, after you bring good luck to the ascendant, to Al-Ashir and to their master, to the master of their house, to the ☽ and its master, as well as to the master of the ascendant. You are also to give good luck to Al-Thani and its master and let the sign of Al-Thani mutually accept connection to the sign of the ascendant either in a triangular or hexagonal form. Furthermore, you may bring good luck to Al-Thani and let a share of fortune be in the ascendant or in Al-Ashir and have them join the share-holder while he is looking at his share. You may also give good luck to Al-Hadi-Ashar and to its master. The holder of this picture will be the wealthiest person on Earth. All his trade transactions will progress smoothly, and he will make good profits from every move he makes.

A talisman for assuming a distinguished position.

Make a talisman after bringing good luck to ascendant and to Al-Ashir and its master. Keep misfortunes away from the ascendant and its master. Make the master of Al-Hadi-Ashar a planet of good luck looking over the ascendant and its master. Let the master of Al-Ashir be affectionately connected to the master of the ascendant. When the person, who has this in mind and insists on meeting whom he seeks to assume leadership from, holds this picture, no one will be able to overrule him or challenge his opinion.

A talisman to have a ruler favor a certain person and improve his status.

Make a picture in his name and bring good luck to the ascendant by a strong Sa'ad. Let not the Sa'ad be retreating, declining, or burning, and let the master of the ascendant be strong, sound and righteous in his fortunes. Let the master of Al-Ashir be connected to the master of the ascendant in a triangular or hexagonal form and the former will give good luck to the latter. The master of Al-Ashir will be willingly connected to the master of the ascendant which is in the commanding constellations, while the master of Al-Ashir is in the obedient constellations. Never will the holder of this picture meet a ruler without getting his favor and having his status improved.

*A talisman for a slave to gain the sympathy

Make two talismans: one in the hour of a high planet whereas the ascendant is high and the ☽ is increasingly bright and let the ascendant of Al-Ras be with the ascendant or in one of the poles; the other in the hour of a lower planet and the ascendant and Al-Ashir of the first ascendant and the tail are either in the above-ascendant or in one of the poles. Combine them and bury them in the location of the person for whom you wish to create sympathy and his master will have total sympathy for him and give him whatever he wants, Allah willing.

A talisman for a person who wants to get married but was not able to.

ascendant be a part of the first statue and let its sign be connected to the sign of the first ascendant from the home of its triangle. Let them hug each other and bury them in the location of the person who wants to get married.

A talisman for preventing a man from marrying a certain woman.

Make a talisman in the hour of the ascendant of δ and in the hour of 2. Make another one in the hour of 69 and in the hour of the $\mathfrak{D}$ when the $\mathfrak{D}$ is increasingly bright, moving fast, and connected (to the ascendant). Then combine them and bury them in the hour of the $\mathfrak{V}$ and he will never marry her.

A talisman for releasing a captive.

Make it in the hour of the $\mathfrak{D}$ while it is increasingly bright, clear of any misfortune and moving quickly. Bury it in Al-Ashir's ascendant of the town and direct the picture towards the house of the Imam.

A talisman to liquidate your enemy.

Make two pictures: one in the hour of δ and in the hour of $\mathfrak{O}$ while the $\mathfrak{D}$ is declining; make the other in the ascendant of 69 and in the hour of σ which will also be declining like the $\mathfrak{D}$. Make the first picture retaliate from the second in any way you want and bury them in the hour of σ when Υ is at any phase of its ascendant. Then you can request that your enemy be destroyed and he will be destroyed immediately.

A talisman for the people to support a governor of a town whose population turned against him.

Make two talismans: the first in the hour of 2 while the ☽ is connected to the ☉ in a blessed and sound form and clear from any misfortune and let the head of the Dragon be either in the ascendant or looking over it; make the second in the ascendant of Al-Khamis from the first and in the hour of 9. Let the hour of 9 be with the Dragon or looking over it, and let the ☽ be clear of any misfortune. Then bury both talismans in the hour of 5 when the ascendant is fixed and the entire populace will return to him and give him their full support.

A talisman for keeping a person in his hometown.

Make a talisman in the hour of the ascendant of the person when 5 and Al-Ras are in one of the poles of the ascendant. Bury the talisman up-side-down in the middle of the town when the ascendant is fixed and he will never leave the town as long as the talisman is buried.

A talisman for expelling a person from his hometown on the same day.

Make a picture of an up-side-down ascendant while its sign is moving away from the poles and when the ☽ is moving away from the poles. Bury it in the burning part of the way and face the statue towards the location to which you want him to be expelled, and the objective will be achieved.

Two talismans for bringing two persons together and promoting friendship between them

Two talismans are made: make the first one in the hour of the ascendant of the sought objective, bring good luck to the ascendant and to Al-Ashir and move bad luck away from them, and let the ascendant of Al-Hadi-Ashir be a lucky planet connected harmoniously to the master of the ascendant in a triangular or hexagonal form. I would like to remind you here of what you should know; that is the hexagonal and triangular forms are indications of friendship, agreement and resemblance characters because the triangular form is from a fire constellation to a fire constellation, from an earth constellation to an earth constellation, from an air constellation to an air constellation and from a water constellation to a water constellation. Consequently, it becomes a friendship character. However, the hexagonal form is from a fire constellation to an air constellation, from an earth constellation to a water constellation. Thus when the two acting ascendants concur without being acted upon, this becomes a character of friendship without love. The quadrilateral¹⁶ form is from a water constellation to a fire constellation, and from an air constellation to an earth constellation, and when they disagree by nature, the quadrilateral form becomes a character of alienation and hatred.

We go back to our above presentation and say that when the second talisman is made for a certain friend, let it be in the ascendant of Al-Hadi-Ashar. If it is for a spouse, let it be in the ascendant of Al-Sabi and make the ascendant of the person whose sympathy you seek be connected harmoniously to the master of the first person. Bury them together in the location of the sympathy seeker and they will become companions forever.

¹⁶The astrological aspect known as the Square.

❧{Picatrix}❧

A talisman for separation and enmity.

Make a talisman in the ascendant of ♄ and bring a great misfortune to the ascendant and also bring a strong misfortune to Al-Ashir. Moreover, bring great misfortunes to the master of the ascendant and to the master of Al-Ashir while they are situated in either a bilateral¹⁷ or quadrilateral form and there will be no harmony between them. Strip off all good luck from him, from the ascendant, as well as from Al-Ashir and bury them in the residence of one of them and, as a result, they will separate irrevocably because of the intense hatred which has been created between them.

A talisman to empower a sultan to liquidate his servant.

Make the talisman in the same arrangement as mentioned above and let the master of the ascendant turn away from the master of Al-Ashir while he is also affected by his misfortune. At the same time, let the master of the ascendant be connected to the master of the house of destiny and the first will be affected by the last's misfortune as well by either facing each other or collectively. Bury them with a fixed ascendant misfortune, and consequently he will be able to kill his servant in any way and for any reason.

Two talismans for affection and subordination.

Two talismans are made in the first phase of ♄, and while the ♄ is in the first phase of ♄. Let ♀ be in the ascendant and the ♄ in Al-Hadi-Ashar. Make them embrace each other and bury them in one of their locations. This is an ever-lasting love and a very strong affection. This relationship is known as a reciprocal relationship. It was discussed by Ptolemy in his book, The Fruit, on page 33. You may review it. I will, nonetheless, explain it for you in Book IV.

A talisman for permanent love.

Make two talismans in an ascendant of good luck when the ☽ and ♀ are in ♋. In the first picture draw 220 numbers of thousands or zeros and draw in the second picture 284 numbers also of thousands and zeros. Then make them embrace one another and bury them in the location of one of them and permanent love and strong affection will ensue. This talisman is known as the talisman of the loving numbers.

A talisman for catching fish.

Draw a picture of any type of fish living in that river in the hour of ♀ and in the ascendant of ♋ when ♀ is in it. The first part to draw is its head, then its body and then its tail respectively, and finally put them together at one time. Make a thin pole of silver and hold the fish from its end. Make a bowl of lead and erect the pole in it perpendicularly with the fish at its tip. Put the talisman in the bowl, fill it with water and close the bowl with the talisman in it tightly so that no water leaks out. Throw the ball in the bottom of the river and the fish will come to the talisman from all directions.

A talisman to repel scorpions.

Make a picture of a Scorpion with gold when the ☽ is in the ascendant or in one of the poles such as ♋, ♏, or ♐. The best of these is ♂ because of its opposing character to ♀'s character. Also let the ☉ be in ♂ while ♀ is retreating. Draw the tail first, then the legs, then the arms and finally the head. Be sure to follow this reversed order in making a repelling talisman. When you are through, attach the left arm in place of the right leg and the right arm in place of the left leg. Attach the head in its place and the tail in its place. Make a thorn; place the Scorpion on its back; and then stick the thorn in its back whereby it will be biting itself in the head. Bury it in a hole inside a metal piece; then bury the metal piece in the most respectful place in town and then the Scorpions will flee from that talisman for a distance of one mile for forty-five days.

A talisman for the treatment of a scorpion bite.

Carve a picture of a Scorpion on a stone of Bezoar¹⁸ in the hour of the ☿ and while the ☉ is in the first degree of it and the ascendant is ♂ or ♋. Mount the stone on a golden ring and stamp it with resin of Kundur¹⁹ in the designated hour and with the ☿ in ♍. Give the bitten person a dose of it and he will be cured from his ailment.

A talisman for affection between men and women.

A talisman is made to portray the picture of a maid on cold solid metal when the ascendant is ♀ within which ☿ is ascending to its apex having control over its affairs. Start it in the hour of ♀ until it disappears. Make another one in the image of a man, and when ♀ is in in ♀ and the ascendant is ♀. Beware of the difference in the ascendant lest ♀ should be in ♀ and the ascendant is ♀ or in ♀ and the ascendant is ♀. Let the two pictures hug each other and put the hand of each picture on the back of its companion. All of this should take place in the hour of ♀. Beware of the two ascendants, ♀ and ♀, as well as others of the same type. Bury them in the busiest road in town and then men and women will like one another and have affectionate relationships. Do the same thing for a relationship of affection between two persons. Bury it in a place commonly visited by both.

¹⁸A counter poison or antidote. The original sort was the Lapis Bezoar Orientale, obtained from the wild goat of Persia and various antelopes, etc.; the Lapis Bezoar Occidentale, obtained from the lamas of Peru, was less valued.-OED

A talisman to catch more fish.

It is presented by Mohammed Ben Bayt Al-Khawarizmi in his thesis in which he claims that he tested it. Make a picture of a fish in the hour of the ☽ and in the ascendant of the first phase of ☿, within which are the ☽ and ♀. The fish will be caught at the time of fishing because this timing will help a great deal.

A talisman for bringing the physician to the location of treatment.

This talisman ought to be made by physicians. Carve on a tin plate a picture of a human being sitting down with physician's equipment in front of him; people are standing around him with water jugs in their hands asking him for advice. The carving should cover the entire plate while the ascendant is on one of the two homes of ♀ within which is ♂. The Dragon should be at the top (at the north pole of the celestial sphere) of the sky. The plate is nailed and placed in the required location and you will see miracles.

A talisman for successful planting and cultivation.

On a silver plate, make a picture of a man sitting down in the middle of plants and trees while the ascendant is ♊ and when the ☽ is in the ascendant connected to ♋ and turning away from the ☉ bury it in the location where you want all plants and trees to grow and quickly bear fruit and be protected from animals, cold, birds and other harmful things.

A talisman for a successful business.

Make a picture of a man with a scale in his hand on a yellow plate when the ascendant is one of the two homes of ♈ and while the ☽ is in it. A person holding the plate will see great success in his business, Allah willing.

A talisman for the relief of the pain of kidney stones.

On a golden plate, carve a picture of a lion with stones between his hands as if he was playing with them in the hour of the ☉ while the ascendant is the first phase of ♈, and the ☉ is in that degree. Then the person suffering from the attack of kidney stones will be relieved from pain. This has been tested.

A talisman to treat a certain person from depression until he recovers completely and to protect him from harmful actions.

It is made in the hour of the ♀ when the ☽ is in one of the poles connected to ♀, and when the master of Al-Sadis is in a triangular or hexagonal form of a Sa'ad or facing a Sa'ad. The master of Al-Thamin is in the quadrilateral form of ♋ and ♋ is not retreating, burning or looking at a misfortune. The talisman is made in the last hour of Sunday while the master of the hour is the ascendant of Al-Ashir. Let it be made of pure silver and it will protect the person from what we have mentioned above.

Talismans are that which should be made from the celestial bodies - planets and stars - in which case no one can invalidate their effects. One of its principles is that no talismans for love and affection should be made unless the ☽ is with Al-Su`ud and happy days. Likewise, they should not be made if the ☽ is with Al-Nuhus²⁰; make them only when it is clear. For example, if you want to make a talisman for harmony among people, you should make it on the day of the ♀ and in the hour of 4. If you want a talisman for affection between spouses, you should make it on the day of the ☽ in the hour of the ☽. Also, talismans for sympathy, love and meeting kings are made on the day of the ☽ when it is full and in ♌, ♍, ♎ or in ♏. If the Dragon is with the ☽, that will strengthen their effects.

Always watch the ☽ when it is in the lucky house and avoid it when it is in the unlucky house. Make a talisman for love when the ☽ is with ♀ and in the hour of 4 when it is with the ☽ and either in ♏, ♌, or in ♎. For malevolence, it is made when the ☽ is with the tail and in one of the bad-luck houses joining misfortune planets or forming with them a quadrilateral figure or facing them. Talismans made at night are better than the ones made in daytime and with that you will hit the target.

Another condition without which nothing can be achieved is that the talisman maker should be completely absorbed in his endeavor. Also he should clear his intention in order for his mental faculties to join the spiritual powers of the planets. Plato puts it very well when he says in his Book of Al-Fusul, "If words reflect the intention of the speaker, he will be able to move the intention of the listener and vice versa." According to the first principle, this is what the combination of supplication and piety are based on when pious people pray to have their requests fulfilled.

Another condition is to isolate yourself from human beings, to shelter yourself from the sunrise and the sunlight and not to be visited by anybody except those who have good intentions, trustworthy, not belittling or scorning the ugly, astounding and forceful effects of the astrological spiritual powers. Be aware of that. You may review what Tabit Ibn Qurra²¹ wrote in his Treatise on Talismans, "The noblest science of stars is the science of talismans". He claims that there is no life in the body that does not have a spirit. He means that talismans made in the wrong manner and for the wrong purpose will not be compatible with the radiating spirit of the planets. Accordingly, they are similar to dead bodies that have no spirits in them. However, if the spirit of the celestial bodies agree, by virtue of their configuration and make-up, with such arrangements that lead to the sought objective, then they will be similar to living bodies that can do strange things.

In this regard, Aristotle says in his Treatise that the most important thing to bear in mind, when making a talisman, is the effect of the seven moving planets. The highest and the longest lasting among these are the ones that coincide with a Sa'ad. This will help in bringing the spirits down from the celestial sphere to the Earth. He adds, "There may be some of God's names, if invoked to bring a spirit down, that will fall down at a tremendous speed to the lowest level, and it may kill the person who is bringing it down if he is not knowledgeable of the spiritual nature of the celestial body he wants to bring down".

Concerning this matter, some of the leading Sufis talk about the Name of the Great Allah who transforms things into other things completely different from the original. They prefer to talk about sublime matters in this world. However, they, I mean the majority of them, believe otherwise. We wrote a piece on this subject in which we cited all of their contentions.

Referring to Aristotle, he adds, "As for the magical transcendence, it does not go beyond the circle of the Earth when a talisman is made to bring down a spirit. However, this transcendence will not be effective unless it is associated with the Greatest God who commands it to revert in its entirety to the halo and directs it to the aphelion of the Earth". This is the text of his statement. I will cover it completely in the fourth book.

The people who specialize in this field agree on the necessity of associating the words used in making talismans for special purposes appealing to have those effects accepted. In this regard, the philosopher in Timaeus, indicates that talking to talismans represents the relationship of the soul to the body; it moves the spiritual powers, especially when the speaker talks with a sound intention. This is the noble element with which all talismans can be made. This means that what you say must agree with the meaning of the spoken words inasmuch as the talisman maker gathers of his conscious and mental strength.

An example of what can be said for love and affection is:

I hereby unite so-and-so with so-and-so in harmony and love in the same manner fire and air, and water and earth are united. I also move so-and-so's spirit the same way the ☉ moves the light and power of the world, conjure up so-and-so in the eyes of so-and-so the same way the sky is decorated with high and dominating stars and the way plants are decorated with their flowers. I also make so-and-so's spirit rise and impress so-and-so's spirituality the same way fire rises to air and water to earth. Moreover, so-and-so may not drink or enjoy except in the presence of so-and-so.

If you make a talisman for enmity and separation, you say:

I hereby sever the relationships between them and separate so-and-so from so-and-so with the power of these spiritual souls the same way light is separated from darkness. I also make enmity between them similar to the enmity between water and fire.

If you make a talisman for rendering a male impotent, you say:

I hereby tie up the spirit of the sexual desire of so-and-so towards so-and-so as well as towards all other women and deprive him from it with the power of these spiritual souls the same way mountains and their rocks are tied up.

To untie the sexual desire of a male, you say:

I hereby release and untie the sexual desire of so-and-so towards so-and-so as well as towards all other women with the help of the powers of all of these spiritual souls the same way fire melts wax, the same way sunlight releases darkness and the spirits of the world as well as its own spirit and the same way snow is melted by the ☉.

To silence people who talk negatively about you as well as about others, you say:

I hereby shield so-and-so to silence backbiters with the shield of light and veil their eyes with a spiritual veil to repel their ugly looks and to silence them and vanquish their harmful designs. You may add similar specific statements with true intentions and strong motivation.

To expose the secrets of a person, you say:

I hereby unveil the secrets of so-and-so with the power of these spiritual souls the same way sunbeams tear up thick clouds, disgrace him and make him a target for the spirit of backbiters the same way arrows tear up bodies by frequent arrow hunters.

When you are in the process of doing your work, do not say anything unrelated to your intended objective. Everything you say must support and enforce your intended objective.

These examples are presented to you to let you understand the intended objective so that you may apply it.

We have presented to you this knowledge although those who seek knowledge nowadays are few. So be one of those few, and you will, Allah willing, acquire wisdom. We have included miraculous matters in this chapter about the relationships of planets and stars. Think seriously about them, and you may refer to them for analogy when making any talisman that has already been or is being made in this world.

The essence of talismans, which we have mentioned above, is similar to the intended performed action whether good or evil. After this, I will explain to you what share of the three originating sources, metals, animals and plants, as well as their incense and sacrifices. All of these will help you in the same way food and medicine, if accepted by the patient, will help the physician succeed and accomplish what he hopes to achieve. The focal point is the observation of stars. The Greek philosophers used to watch a certain planet when it is with its Dragon and when it approaches within a degree from the middle of the sky, they perfume with its incense and appeal to it to achieve their objectives. They offer sacrifices to it on behalf of their sought objective. Consequently, they get what they hoped to achieve. They also claim that one should do the same thing if the planet is in the Tail of its Dragon, and subsequently, it will not be obstructed especially if the planet makes a good recommendation concerning the birth of the person in question. This will have a stronger effect and better acceptance.

Obtaining this knowledge, my brother, is a great honor although those who are seeking it in our time are only few, and those few have missed the approach for seeking it and learning it. We have mentioned, may Allah bless you, in our book which we entitled The Rank of the Wise that having good knowledge of the produced result of a well-made (talisman) is greater and more honorable than it's result. I would like you to know that what we have pointed out is the behavioral art and learning it according to the inherent characteristics of the art of nature without delaying what should be advanced or advancing what should have been delayed. To explain the reality of this subject and its philosophy, we bring two persons: one is knowledgeable of this result and acts upon it, while the second is knowledgeable of the other result and acts upon that. On the other hand, they may be ignorant of these arts, try to obtain them at least on the traditional level. The person who is completely knowledgeable of the magical result is more capable and more miraculously effective in this world than a person who is fully knowledgeable of the first result. This is an axiom for those who think about them and accept them as such. We would like you to know that our reference to this subject in our book, The Rank of the Wise, is very essential for applying these arts according to their principles and using them for what they are capable of achieving.

❧Chapter Six❧

YOU MAY KNOW, Allah bless you, that wisdom is very noble and acquiring it is a great honor and carries with it high prestige. Wisdom has different levels. One level leads to another. A fully knowledgeable person is the one who is well informed of the fruits of wisdom. He obtains them because he loves to obtain them. Philosophers have justly identified this level as the preference of wisdom. He who remains below this level is not considered a human being, although he may be a human being only by planning, because he does not reflect on the essence of his being, which is a microcosm of the larger world. The truth of his being is that he is a complete entity characterized by three elements: speech, animals and plants. This entity is characterized differently from animals by speech. By speech, we mean that it is distinguished because of its capability to make (talismans), recalling the absent through reflection and forming an image and perceiving what cannot be physically seen. Also, this entity can bring other beings and countries into his mind, combine all other beings and powers within itself through which he can see at night what happens to him during the daytime. Accordingly, he is a microcosm confined within the larger world which he represents in form and content. He has all the characteristics of animals, but he is differentiated by knowledge and power.

A human has six movements which run along his back bone through his thighs in a straight line. He is brought to life accidentally and this accidental being will die as a principle of nature. His fingers and palm are distributed and his head is round. He has nails and a particular style of walking; he is capable of learning and writing; he is the inventor of fine arts; he imitates animals but not imitated by them; he laughs and weeps with sadness and he possesses a divine power and the ability of civil management. He is an idol externally and a light internally; his body is the idol and its content is his entity. He is well planned; he knows what is harmful to him and what is useful. He acts with an intention if he plans and he proceeds or abstains spontaneously as well as with a purpose. He invents fine arts as well as miraculous talismans. He comprehends the various aspects of knowledge and excludes whatever is tangible.

Allah made him a treasurer for His wisdom and an expression of Himself as well as all of His creatures. He made him accept His revelation and made him aware of His branches of knowledge as well as what was revealed from Him. He is the guidance for the larger world and its destiny. He is all-knowing of every detail about His creation and its composition. He can gather all scattered creatures, whereas they cannot do the same to Him. He can make them subservient, but they cannot do the same to Him. He is capable of uttering their words, drawing their pictures with His hands, describing them with His tongue, and He is also capable of foretelling their characteristics.

No animal can change itself or move away from its created image, and it cannot imitate the voice of other animals. A rooster cannot change its crowing, a dog its barking or a lion its roaring. However, a man can change his voice and his manners and he can act in any way he wants and he can administer himself as well as others. He is characterized by a dense body and an amiable spirit; one part is amiable and the other is dense;

one part is alive and the other is dead; one half is moving and the other half is idle; one half is formed and the other is formless; one half is night-time and the other is daytime; one half is darkness and the other is light; one half is concealed, and the other is exposed; one half is tangible and the other is reasonable; one half is the sustainer and the other is the sustained. He shies away from shameful deeds and tolerates and does whatever he likes and regrets. His essence is composed of gentle as well as harsh characteristics; he possesses some of the harsh characteristics of earth, the gentle touch of air, the friendliness of fire and the coolness of water. Accordingly, he is moderate in his motion, which is the soul of life. By his motion he recognizes the heat of fire through its fiery power and the coolness of water through the inherent coolness of water and so on with the rest of the Elements.

Nonetheless, his head resembles the celestial sphere by its shape and roundness as well as by the good inlaid lights such as seeing, smelling, tasting and speaking. His eyes are similar to the ☉ and the ☾, his nostrils to the two winds, his ears to the East and West, his front to the day and his back to the night, his walking to the motion of stars and his sitting to their being fixed, his retreat to their decline and his death to their burning.

His abdominal organs are seven equal to the number of the moving planets. He has seven bones in his head equal to the number of days in the week, 24 vertebrae in his back equal to the number of hours of the day and night, and 28 joints equal to the number of the houses of the ☾ and the number of the alphabets. The number of his intestines are equal to the lunar phases, and the number of arteries are 365 with an equal number of veins, and that is equal to the number of days and nights of the year, as well as to the number of the celestial degrees. The number of his different characteristics are equal to the number of changes in the time of the year.

His eyes are his spies with speaking power resembling a king. His ears are his informants; his tongue is his translator; his heart is his divan of knowledge; his stomach is his treasury; his gall bladder is the source of his patience so that his flesh will not rupture. It is the bond and treatment of the body. His lungs are his fan; the hands are his guards and his legs are his vehicle.

His flesh is equivalent to earth; his bones are like mountains; his hair is like plants; his arteries are like medicine, and his abdominal organs are like metals.

His body consists of nine jewels built on nine circles inside one another. The outer circle encompasses the flesh, the bones, the muscles, the nerves, the brain, the skin and the nails. The brain fills the cavity of the bones. Its function is to maintain energy and flexibility of bones. The function of bones is to hold and stabilize the flesh around them. The function of the muscles is to tie up joints and move organs. The function of the flesh is to seal the defects in the body and protect the bones from fracturing and dislocation. The function of arteries is to deliver blood to various parts of the body. The function of the blood is to regulate the temperature of the body, maintain life, adjust temperament and generate motion. The function of the skin is to guide the extremities, hold them and bundle them to protect them from splitting and scattering.

The body has twelve holes equivalent to the number of constellations. Since there are six northern constellations and six southern constellations, there are six holes in the body on the left side and six on the right side similar to the arrangement of the constellations qualitatively and quantitatively. Also, the seven moving planets which control the laws of the celestial bodies affecting and regulating all beings, are similar to the human body which has seven influential forces stemming from the human mind to promote the well-being of the body. Additionally, these planets, which have spirits, bodies and souls acting upon and influencing metals, animals and plants, are similar to the human body which possesses physical forces to help maintain and promote the well-being of the body through seven other spiritual forces. These seven spiritual forces are: the holder, the puller, the digester, the pusher, the nourisher, the grower and the portrayer. There are seven other spiritual forces similar to the seven planetary spirits. These are the sensory forces by which a human being becomes complete and his actions become adequate, similar to the seven planets which decorate and establish the foundation of the celestial sphere by which they maintain the world and uphold its laws. These are the forces of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling, speaking and reasoning. These five forces are like those of the five planets, two of which are similar to the ☉ and the ☿. The ☿ derives its light from the ☉ in its 28 houses. Similarly, the speaking force derives the meaning of beings from the reasoning force and communicates it by the 28 alphabets of the lexicon. Since there are two nodes in the celestial sphere, the head and the tail, both of which have their true entities and their visible actions and effects, likewise there are two elements in the human being that are similar, the good and the bad temper. Moreover, when the human spirit, is inclined towards its world, it will perform well; it will get rid of the annoyance of nature and it will be guided. However, if it is inclined towards nature, it will be disturbed in its action, move beyond its cause and it will be eclipsed in the same manner the ☉ and the ☿ are eclipsed by the node of the tail. Similar to this is the case of the bad temper, which is comparable to tough actions which cause destruction to the human body. Good temper, on the other hand, leads to good speech and when the make-up of the body is sound and functions naturally, the spirit will be clear and it will be enlightened by the mind.

Whereas the ☉ and the ☿ are the lamps of the celestial sphere, the eyes are the lamps of the body by which the speaking spirit can recognize the pictures of beings and their colors and it can see things by the reflection of the sunlight and moonlight on them, as do the rest of the animals. Additionally, similar to the celestial sphere and its constellations which have parameters, phases and angles, so do the joints of the body, its organs and its various arteries. Also, like the total force of the seven planets and the twelve constellations from which forces are constantly spreading throughout the world every moment, minute, hour and with every movement of time, so does the spirit of man as it induces his body and joints to perform certain actions with every move he makes, with every moment and with every breath of his lifetime. Yet, he exists as a whole, a body and a spirit, until his spirit leaves him. Similarly, the total spirit is connected to partial spirits for an ordained duration and with a wise management.

One of the miracles of man is that he is civilized by nature so that he can administer himself, his household, his servants, his family, as well as his kingdom. A word may please him to the extent of making him step down and a word may enrage him to the extent of fighting and taking risks. He wears expensive garments, gets treatment and takes medications to adjust his temper and improve himself. He shows friendship, conceals enmity and fraternizes with his enemy. He is sinking in air and permanently landing on earth.

This is the characteristic of the partial but tangible human who is perishable in part, but not as a whole because he only became a partial human by external accidental effects, changes and colors which he was exposed to, and as such, he is perishable. However, the human of reason, as a whole, is locked into permanent existence both partially and totally. This is analogous to the Elements which are perishable in part but not as a whole. For instance, if water changes, it becomes fire, then air, and then it spoils and reverts to its natural state. It spoils from external effects, but it survives by nature, and so does the partial human; he is spoiled by dissolution, but he reverts to his totality. Accordingly, the whole human exists by reason and not by sensory perception. Thus, the essence of the reasonable part does not change or transform to another form. In fact, transformation is adjoining it in order to achieve perfect sensory perception.

I am giving you examples to make this subject easy to understand because it may seem peculiar to the mind. The singular part of the Elements gains its partial Elemental status only by virtue of the arrangement of each in its position and by whatever internal accidental effects, which it may be subjected to, that pertains to its particular characteristics in this state. Water, for example, gains its wet and cool nature by its position and whatever adjoins it in the world order. However, its existence prior to its Element status survives as a whole. These totalities exist by nature whether perceived mentally and discovered by man or not. Existence to it is subjective and so is the whole human; his existence is also subjective. The evidence on the truth of what I have said is that there is fire in water and water in fire and that the Elements are intertwined and transform from one to another. Without this transformation, none of their characteristics could have existed.

Similar to that is the attachment of the human being's willingness and volition to the first willingness and volition which are influenced and affected by other beings, although that may not be recognized by the partial human being. That is because this human whose will and volition may not be enforced in every situation and behavior, will find that they may be enforced in some, although he will not realize their influence on the whole. Only those who attain and experience theoretical arts can realize this.

I would like you to know that if a human is able to find fire stripped of the accidentally acquired characteristics, the variable situations and whatever affects it when it joins its sisters, he would find it incapable of burning. That is because its share of the partial function is acquired from its accidental characteristics, variable situations and position. Don't you see that if fire is accidentally displaced and departs from the body and wood, it will return to its nature and to its place above air. As for its simple total function, it is too great to be described or realized by words because it is an exceptionally great force which is above simplicity and above qualification and so are the rest of the Elements.

The human being follows the same path. This is the human being who is eternally committed and around whom the complex human being is evolving. His intermingling and mixing with other things which accidentally adjoin him in different situations and positions, and from which he cannot detach himself, changes his image, transforms him and grants him common characteristics with animals, plants and other Elements. Consequently, he becomes similar to them in all aspects and when he recognizes this and follows the path that leads him to the enlightenment of the first principle. This is a system particular to his essence as well as to his own principle, he will be more of a human being than others inasmuch as he becomes detached. He can do that by applying virtues as much as possible and when he accomplishes that, he becomes the partial, sensitively perceptive, physical and robust human being, who is composed of two sub-parts, the mind and the spirit, in addition to the body. This joint perishable image in this lower world is a shell for the whole, mental, spiritual, honorable, kind, simple and primordial human being. It is the pure image which is not engulfed by a body; it is ever-lasting in the higher world.

The image of the whole human is within his partial image and a simple and primordial form of it. The image of the partial human is inside the body and a simple form of it. The image of the body is a complex idol and a complex shell for the partial human. The image of the partial human being is a complex idol and a complex shell for the whole human. The image of the whole human is an idol and a shell for the whole spirit and the whole spirit is an idol and a shell for the mind. The whole mind is an idol and a shell for the light from which the mind evolved. The light is the primordial source of the whole mind. Similarly, what is below that, which is higher, is simple and primordial to that which is below it and in addition to it and what is below that is always a complex image for what is above it and in addition to it. In fact, the human being is the complex image which uses the other bodies of nature.

He, who wants to gain the truth of this knowledge, ought to be virtuous, pure in his mind and body from all sins and then he will see it and observe it in its reality.

We did not, by presenting this subject, may Allah help you, deviate from our objective. In fact, this is the objective of this book because it is the principle for the science of talismans. If you have any experience in this field, you will realize this and acknowledge that it is obviously magic. Plato, the virtuous and an authority in this science, deals with this subject in his book, Timaeus, and elaborates a great deal on images and he explains this sought objective. However, he makes the conclusion vague like other philosophers who act in the same manner to protect their wisdom from uninformed people as did Proclus.

To them vagueness is the ambiguity of meaning so that whoever wants to clear up this ambiguity must do that with reflection, deliberation and thorough examination in order to distinguish it from whatever it has been mixed with from the obvious matters. Of these arts there are two kinds: the obvious and the concealed. The concealed art is that which needs analogy and introductions so that it becomes clear to you or that can be achieved by observation, reasoning, reflection and deliberation.

Reasoning can be attained in many ways, some of which are relating the present to the past or the part to the source by a common meaning. It can also be attained by analyzing it in view of what was explained by one or more with credentials whereby they can deduce a meaning similar to the sought one. In general, whoever likes to follow this method must direct his full attention and observations towards this method, and with this, he can find the meaning of beings and discover their ranks.

❧Chapter Seven❧

YOU MAY KNOW, ALLAH BLESS YOU, that beings have ranks. The High Being of creation is the noblest, most distinguished and the most perfect rank. Next to that in rank is the mind, the spirit and then the primordial all of which is not moving and cannot be described by a distance motion. Next to the primordial in rank is the orbit of nature which is initially a motion as well as a stillness from which being and corruption in this world evolved. Next to that is the orbit of the ۞. After this rank, there is a common matter which possesses sensory perception. This means that things exist in it by force and not by nature. Next to that are the Elements which interact in that common matter, since the Elements only interact in matter. Then next to the Elements are metals, then plants, then animals and then the speaking ones among them. This rank is different from the first rank because the first rank, the mind, is a noble rank that descends until it reaches the lowest rank, the rank of the orbit of the ۞. After it reaches the lowest level, it begins to ascend to the highest rank, the rank of speaking animals, because they possess wisdom and they act willfully, not by force. Be aware of that, O seeker of wisdom, and you will gain a great fortune and the ultimate

The ranks of being have a certain order which I will explain to you to exercise your mind and enlighten your vision. So be with me, listen, and learn: the principle is first, then the element, then the Elemental, then the primordial, then the image, then the nature, then the body, then al-Nami (the growing), then the animal, then the human being, then the man, then the obscure, and then the known. The principle is more general than the element and its category because it does not conform to the essence or to the accidental characteristics; the element does not conform to the essence; the element is more general than the Elemental because the element is an essence without qualification, but if it accepts qualification, it becomes an Elemental. The Elemental is more general than the primordial because it is a particular essence which accepts qualification.

The primordial is the collection of the Elementals because it accepts to have an image. The primordial is more general than the image because, before the primordial accepts to have an image, it is primitive, but if it accepts to have an image, then this image becomes similar to the image of the primordial copper as related to the image of a kettle, and as the primordial of wood as related to the image of a chair, and if it accepts motion, stillness, and accepts force to be mixed with it, it will be considered a nature. If the characteristics are combined and it accepts color, growth, or spirit, then it becomes a body. A body is either growing or not growing, and the growing is either an animal or not an animal. The animal is either a human being or not a human being, and the human being either a man or not a man.

²²Diwan Al-Mutanabbi, Cairo 1308 II 373

man. The man is either Zayd²³ or not Zayd, and Zayd is either obscure or not obscure. What is not obscure is known.

The primordial, may Allah enlighten your vision, is the joint agreement of the Elements to accept an image. There are two types of primordial: a personal primordial which does not receive, except one image composed of the complex Elements, earth, water, fire, and air and does not transform from one state to another. The other is a whole primordial that accepts all images which are composed of the simple Elements: heat, coolness, dryness and wetness, and it does not transform from one state to another. Aristotle presents it well as he defines the primordial, with respect to its general aspects, as a force acceptable to various images. With respect to its characteristics, he defines it as a body that influences all entities.

We presented these meanings to enrich the mind and sharpen the intellect. These meanings and the like are the spiritual talismans and the words of inspiration that Adam learned from his Lord.²⁴ Only knowledgeable people and those who triumph in getting in touch with the total reality can comprehend them. For the purpose of comprehending their meanings, we have presented this treatise. At this point, I would like to conclude this treatise and move along to what we have promised you in the introduction of this book. I beseech Allah's help in achieving what we hope and intend to accomplish.

²³ Abd-ar Rahman Abu Zayd ibn Muhammad ibn Khaldun who penned the Muqaddimah in 1381, used his own name of Zayd objectively to illustrate a point in the text. Perhaps Zayd is a common name used for such examples, or the author of Picatrix may possess it as his own.

❧Chapter One❧

THE INTELLECTUALS, MAY ALLAH BLESS YOU, are still aspiring to know the secrets of the philosophers and what they mean by using symbols and enigmas in their books through which they achieved their objectives and goals. Is it possible for those with inferior intelligence to achieve their goal, may Allah enlighten our minds?

What motivated me to look for the secrets of talismans when I was in the prime of youth is what I read in a book entitled The Fruit by the honorable Ptolemy, in which he says that the images in the world of creation are obedient to the celestial images. There is consensus among philosophers that planets possess forces by virtue of their natural disposition which they accepted willfully. Accordingly, the talisman-makers drew their images at the time when certain planets reach their house. This situation helps them achieve the planned effects of their works. They did very well in designing their secrets to fulfill their wishes. I decided to include in this chapter an excerpt which was written by Ahmad Ben Yusuf al-Katib and published in Egypt in The Biography of Ahmad Ben Tolone and His Son Khamarawayh by a Roman philosopher who lived there at that time. I would like to cite an excerpt of the text from what he wrote because I do not wish to burden the intellectual with the full text. This is what he wrote:

"As I was at his place one day, we heard screaming at the side of the house, and when he was asked about it, he said, 'A boy was bitten by a Scorpion.' So, he brought a piece of cloth with tablets of some substance in it that smelled like kundur²⁵. He took one of those tablets, had it crushed, and made the boy drink it all. Subsequently, the boy stopped screaming and he was quickly cured from his ailment as soon as he drank the powder. I looked at the tablets and saw a picture of a Scorpion. So I asked him who stamped these tablets. He showed me a golden ring with the stone Bezoar in it. Then I asked him about the secret of the ring and how it is made. He indicated that when the ☽ enters ♍, while ♍ is one of the poles of the ascendant, a small amount of kundur is stamped when the ☽ is in its first phase. I made the ring in this manner and I stamp bitten persons with it to cure them. However, I change the substance I use for stamping patients so that kundur does not become the only substance used for this purpose. I saw the miraculous results of what he did. At this point his account ended."

Since I was good at carving in my youth, I entrusted some of the applied philosophers as well as other philosophers to participate with me in observing this arrangement. Accordingly, I carved the picture in the specified time and examined this talisman. I discovered through several trials its miraculous effects. All those who tried it were very amazed.

This was my motive in pursuing the research in this sensory science; I felt it because sensing is the feeling of the mind, and the limits of this feeling cannot be determined unless sensing is understood, which can be achieved by understanding the change of how the senses react when the sensed objects encounter them directly. Sensing is the feeling of those sensitive forces towards the changes in how the senses react. For instance, the medium of the force of seeing is the eye. This force is derived from the fluid medium of the pupil of the eyes and so are the rest of the senses. Sensing is the feeling of these forces and achieving knowledge through them.

Proof is the philosophic criterion which leads to perfection for whoever seeks a real objective. A branch of knowledge can exist by examining the particular characteristics of that objective as well as through examining its subjective fixed introductions. There are two branches of knowledge: knowledge by belief and knowledge by perception. Knowledge can be also be achieved by accepted and convincing statements and in this case, proof is termed as persuasive.

I first read about this proof in the works of Ptolemy and then I discovered by practice the effect of this talisman which I have already described in the First Book. Whenever I researched a certain topic in books written by the wise, I always found what I wanted and I was happy to discover the truth.

Going back to our objective, I would like to say that no one can find out how the higher world affects the lower world without having full knowledge of the different branches of philosophy, I mean the mathematical, physical and metaphysical arts. He who falls short in acquiring these sciences will not be able to fulfill his real goal because the primary perquisites of knowledge are taken from these three branches of philosophy. As for the mathematical art, without numbers, the movements of the higher bodies and the methods by which geometry is obtained cannot be learned. Furthermore, mathematical survey is a prerequisite for learning the geometry of the celestial bodies; without it, star observation or their measurements, which are primarily derived from the proofs of mathematical survey, will be impossible to learn. Moreover, the art of matching, by which similarity and difference can be recognized, is necessary for learning the similarities between celestial and earthly bodies and which of the high bodies' behavior is similar to which of those on earth. How can anyone match between things that are similar if he does not command that knowledge? Additionally, he who is literate in the knowledge of nature, will be able to recognize the near causes for the world and corruption. He who does not know that, will not know that the high bodies affect the low bodies. Besides, he who has no knowledge of the art of metaphysics will not know which of the low beings are the resulting effect of the high beings and which of these beings are affected and which are not. It is essential for anyone who wants to learn this art well to know its primary prerequisites; however, these prerequisites are not, in fact, available except for philosophers. Deservedly, no one knows them except philosophers.

❧Chapter Two❧

TALKING ABOUT IMAGES, may Allah bless you, is very difficult because the specialized people in this field exerted their utmost efforts to conceal it. However, I am revealing what they have concealed. He who wants to delve in this subject can refer to The Book of the Great Images, by Zosimos which deals with the art of astrology as illustrated by the Arabs in the Middle Ages. This book goes into detail in explaining this subject. The images, my brother, that appear in the constellations have two phases: the first are the 48 images that appear in the constellations; they are in the celestial sphere, and these are the imaginary images that are drawn by using the fixed stars as a reference. They find similarity between the convergence and diversion of planets on one hand and the images of the constellations and other images such as Canis, Ursa, Lyra, Cygnus and others, on the other hand.

These images disappear and move from one constellation to another. This quality is not natural in astronomy, especially in the constellations' band, because it takes these images thousands of years to do so when they approach the aphelion; however, the images that are getting close or are already close to the aphelion do not appear to be moving in hundreds of thousands of years because the band gets very narrow. This is the first phase. As for the second phase, it is that of the imaginary images that was illustrated by the Indians who said, "A big, intrepid, proud man with red eyes wearing a loose white garment belted with a rope, looking grim and standing on guard on one leg appears in the first phase of Υ . A woman with one leg wearing a red dress and rope, who has the body of a horse ready to take off, asking for clothes, jewelry, and children appears in the second phase. A black man with red hair and a grim look, wearing a wooden bracelet and holding a hanger with red garments hanging on it, wants to do good but unable to do that, appears in the third phase."

I would like you to know that these are delusive imaginings about the characteristics of stars, planets and constellations. However, the Indians associated the man in the first phase with red eyes and intrepidity with the house of σ and its face which delineates redness, rescue and intrepidity. As for the white loose garment, it is associated with the honor of the $\odot$ and its light. Concerning his grimness, it is associated with the anger of σ in this house. Regarding his standing on one leg and standing on guard, it is associated with dominant tyrants. They substituted a woman for a man in the second phase in association with ψ because ψ has been associated with the feminine gender most of its life and it is within 2° from the domain of φ . The red garments are a semblance of the characteristics of σ . The fact that a part of the image is of a horse is a representation of the cavalier characteristics of σ , which is a feature of the strength of riding animals by virtue of its proximity to Al-Sadis and to battle-riding animals. Asking for jewelry is an association with the $\odot$, the red dresses with the white sunlight, which is used as a veil for the $\odot$, children with the middle of the sky because it is the house of illumination and an indication on the beginning of the development of the fetus.

They referred to the third phase by a man with a reddish color in association with ♂ and ♀, both of which have masculine gender and a reddish color, which is a mixture of two colors, the redness of ♂ and the lead color of ♀. Red hair is associated with ♂, grimness with a characteristic of ♂ which has as one of its features is holding a sword in his hand because the sword is a characteristic of ♂, wood with ♀, and so is iron, doing good and bad deeds with ♀, preventing them by ♂ at the house and by ♀ with the edge. With these examples, you can understand every thing they symbolized, and what they wanted to lead to in this second phase. I have provided you, O seeker of wisdom, the criteria that you can use as a reference and you may act accordingly.

Abu Bakr Ibn Wahsija deals with this subject in his book which he translated from the Nabateans. He entitled his book Tiqana, in which he talks about the triangles and the north and south images in the water triangle. Then he adds, "Whenever you see a male water, a male river, a male well, a male rivulet, or a water spring that can be either a male or a female, you will know that they are affecting water and water substances, as are the rest of the examples concerning the male of fire, earth and air". Be aware of that. This celestial band is the path of 'Tumtum' as well as the path of male images of other star angles.

The ancient philosophers perceived the names of constellations, their shapes and positions, as symbols of their action. For instance, when they talk about a detached head that talks and a paralyzed or amputated hand and other such images, smiling and weeping, and signals from some stars to others, there are speaking of symbols for identifying their actions and the miraculous actions and effects. They built the art of talismans on this basis.

transcendental things that existed in the past and are being brought out. Nonetheless, if these are some of the signs that describe the deceased, which means they are telling what is going to take place forever. Some of these examples are presented by the Sufi, Jabir Ibn Hayyam, in his book entitled Explaining the Images of Constellations and Their Actions. In his book, he listed all stars in the straight band and the action of every one of them. By this, he compensated for what Aristotle wrote in his book entitled Astrologia. This book as well as his book The Plants, were burned and no traces were found.

Hermes states in his book entitled The Composition of Moving Images in Space that the useful actions of stars are too many to be specified. He states that every star has a certain action in each degree of its path if it reaches a tangential point of that degree or if it was within it. The total of these actions are 360×7 which is equal to 2,520. These images produce artistic actions and effects, and if you multiply 360×6 the product will resemble the number of times in which every two planets converge in one degree. The reason for multiplying by 6 is because this is the possible number of convergence of each two planets; ♄ and ♀ may meet in one degree, and that is one, ♄ with ☿, and that is two, ♄ and the ☊, and that is three, ♄ and ♁, and that is four, ♄ and ♃, and that is five, ♄ and the ♅, and that is six. When you multiply 6×360 , the total number of degrees of that circle, the product will be 2,160 images. These images produce miraculous actions and effects. Then you multiply 360×5 the product of which will be 1,800 and that indicates the number of times each three planets converge in one degree. These images produce miraculous actions and effects. Afterwards, you multiply 360×4 , which is the number of the times every four planets meet in one degree, the product will be 1,440. These images also have actions and effects. Then multiply 360×3 , which denotes the number of times each five planets meet on one degree and the product will be 1,080. These images produce actions and effects as well. Then you multiply 360×2 , which is the number of times each six planets meet in one degree, and the product will be 720. These images also produce actions and effects. Then you multiply 360×1 , which is the number of times each seven planets meet in one degree. The First Wise explains that the total number of images which depict the controlling principle of degrees is 10,006 images, all of which produce miraculous actions and effects.

Additionally, The First Wise states, "You need to do that when you have one planet in one degree and the rest of the other planets in the next degree, and then you divide that among the seven planets and let all planets be positioned within the 2° . You keep doing that in the 360° of the celestial sphere. This is longer than the first and more artistic.

So, what is your opinion, O you who desire to have a thorough knowledge of the essence of the actions of these images and their effects on this world! When you get through all of that, you may go back to the above seven moving planets as they converge in their degrees separately with the fixed planets or in combination with them; by combination I mean the joining of the moving planets to the fixed. I would like you to know that and beware of it; withhold this knowledge and do not reveal its secrets to anyone who is not up to its standards because by doing that you will do injustice to yourself as well as to him.

❧{Chapter Three}❧

A GROUP OF PEOPLE BELIEVED that the action of planets is nothing but an increase or decrease in temperature because they were not informed about these excellent effects and concealed arts. They thought that all actions are produced by the ☉ and the ☿, and the function of the other planets is only to strengthen their actions. They also believed that the movement of the rest of the planets within the entire degrees are determined and controlled by the movement of the ☉ and the situations of the ☉ decide the situations of all born children. Moreover, they agreed that the situations of the ☿ determine the condition of its effects. The first situation is when it moves away and separates from the ☉ and reaches the lunar quarter. At this position, the ☿ will be more effective in moving more moisture and humid hot weather and less hot weather and consequently, it will have an effect on producing better and healthier plants as well as everything else that grows on the ground. In the second situation, when the ☿ is receiving the ☉ and consequently becomes a full ☿ with complete illumination, it moves heat and temperature equally. Therefore, its effect on producing better and healthier plants will be greater. Additionally, moving heat and humidity will have a more remarkable effect on the bodies of animals, various parts of plants, as well as metals. As it moves from full ☽ to half ☽, it moves a little less humidity and a little more heat. Consequently, it makes the bodies of animals, plants and metals increase in quantity, improve in quality, and it also affects them to become more open, widespread and expanded; however, expansion by heat will be greater than by humidity. From the phase of half ☽, until its completely exposed by the sunlight, its effect on moving heat will be extremely small, smaller than its effect in any of its above three phases. It was stated in this regard that it dries a little and cools a lot because its moves less moisture. That is why we say that it is more likely that it brings a very cold temperature in this quarter and causes little dryness.

When it meets with the ☉ in one degree, which is its fifth phase, the Chaldeans consider it to be its best and most effective situation, whereas the Indians believe that it is its worst and weakest in its effect. As for the Chinese, they believe that in this phase, the ☽'s strength will depend on the constellation in which it meets with the ☉. The Greeks and the Egyptians think that the meeting of the ☽ with the ☉ gives it more strength as we said before, but they disagree with us on considering this phase its best. They believe that its best situation is when it is fully illuminated, and thus when it converges with the ☉, it only becomes stronger; nonetheless, it is its best and most effective situation.

There is a consensus among our ancient generations that the best situation of the ☽, regarding its phases and its distance from the ☉, is that when it meets with the ☉ in one minute. This is the fifth situation which has different characteristics than the previous five. This is the loftiest situation and the most effective in its actions because it rejoices when it meets the ☉ the same way a traveler rejoices when he goes back to his home. At this phase, it produces actions although it might have produced parts of them in the previous situations, but in this situation, it completes what it was missing and adds to it. They also believe that it is capable of producing actions similar to those produced by the ☉ and that is a great achievement and an honorable status. Furthermore, they believe that the ☽ can, at this situation, produce particular effects in complex bodies. It should not be understood here that this is our version of producing particular effects or otherwise because these actions are produced only by the ☉, and what the ☽ does is expose their effects, bringing them out of their hiding and illuminating them after they had been extinguished. We say with certainty that it does not produce actions; it only brings them out of their concealment. The ☉ is responsible for bringing all things from non-existence to being.

The five above-described situations of the ☽ as determined by its relationship to the ☉ may be similar to the situation of animals, plants and metals. Accordingly, the ☽'s situation as determined by its relationship to the ☉ may be similar to situation of animals in all ages, in their youth as well as in their old age. Similarly, the ☽'s situation may also be similar to the four seasons of the year, to the four directions called the angles of the world: the East, the West, the right and the left. Four winds may blow from these four directions. Moreover, the various four in the human body may be similar to the above groups of four.

Although the origin of these meanings and phases is from the planets including the ☉ and the ☽, they accept from the power of the planet movements, by virtue of their own movements and being at this image, things that emanate to them after acquiring their images, whereby they will have situations which require images different from their initial images. Since this is the case, all complex bodies, which are similar to planets, may be constantly changing in response to the powers of the planetary movements. These partial changes are called the continuous partial changes which we mentioned previously. They are the pillars of things and their origins. They are called the constant total changes which do not vanish or transform because if they do transform, the images of these things will all be impaired since they are the constant total.

As a result of what we have explained, all situations of things from their beginning to their end are similar to the situations of the ☽ as they are determined by its relationship to the ☉. This accidental cause, which not only belongs to forms but to all planets as well as to all complex bodies, is from the stars and in particular from the ☽ as well as from the planets in general. Those ensuing tragedies are the result of the eclipse of the ☽ and planets.

These things accept from the ☉, the ☽ and planets constant change. Thus, they accept rightness for themselves from right situations and wrongs from wrong situations. The eclipse of the ☉ and the ☽ is an accidental event which is similar to abnormal complex bodies. No one believes that the ☉ and the ☽ have any mischief in themselves, neither accidental nor intrinsic. What we mean by calling these tragedies celestial is that the reason for their occurrence and the occurrence of all other tragedies that affect animals, plants, other complex bodies and other four elements is the eclipse of the ☽ and planets.

Going back to our subject, we say that it is a necessity to look into the position of the ☽ for every action. It is the most useful thing in knowing the outlook and the true information and the best indicator of what is happening in the world of being and corruption. It is the most specialized, among all other things, in its management. Its safety from an-nuhus (the start of misfortune) and its distant position from the burning way should be considered when starting an action desiring a good outcome and complete usefulness. The duration and soundness of this action will depend on the speed of the movement and what its indications are. However, if it was in contact with an-nuhus and declining to the south, or if it is in at the end of the constellations or in their first degree but did not complete it, then this is bad. Nonetheless, it should not be looked at if it is declining or vacant of the master of its house, or dropping from the pole, or with the Tail of the Dragon because starting an action in this case will not be warranted unless the planet from which the ☿ moves away and the planet with which the ☿ converges are in one pole, or what comes next to the pole, or dropping. Because if the ☿ is dropping, there will be no good in it except when it is in the third position of the ascendant and the master of its house is dropping. If you find the master of the house of the ☿ in the ascending pole or in the middle of the sky, Al-Hadi Ashar, or in Al-Khamis, and if it was moving eastward in a straight line, then this situation will be favorable to the endeavor you undertake. This is similar to the favorable relationship of ♀ to women and happiness, ♄ to sects, religions, and males, ♀ to writing and correspondence, the ☽ to authority and leadership and the ☿ to education and messengers.

Whenever you plan to undertake an action, you ought to look at the ☽ and the ☿ and their honorable companions and at their domain and then look at the middle of the sky. If you find them both clear of al-nuhus in these positions and you find their companions, I mean the companions of honor or the master of the ascendant in a favorable position, then starting action in this case will be recommended, complete and better. This is especially true when al-su'ud²⁶ are in azimuth with the illuminating planets and the ascendant is easterly, because eastward movement of planets indicates overcoming, victory, completion and expedient achievement of wishes, while westerly planets, although they may be in a pole, indicate slowness, languor and prolonging.

If you find the ☿ in a favorable position while its master is dropping, then the commencement of an action will be good although the outcome will be bad, and if you find both the ☿

and its master dropping, then you know that the action beginning and end will be bad. If the ☽ and its master are in favorable positions, then the action will be as good and complete as planned by its doer especially if the master of the ascendant is a sa'ad and it is in the pole. However, if it is a nahs and its position is favorable, then the best thing to do in this situation is to have ♀ and ☿ in the ascendant or looking at the ascendant. This will produce a complete, favorable, expeditious, and blessed result, especially if this is done when the ☽ is converging with the sa'ad and that sa'ad is full and not retreating. This will be suitable for every action except releasing a slave from his master and taking what does not belong to him.

The ☽ is the foremost planet in managing whatever is below it from the world of being and corruption. Therefore, you should look first at its sa'ad or nahs, and then identify the increase in its beginning, since it gets more powerful as it moves away from the ☉, and then it changes as it reaches its sixth, fourth and third phases as well as when it is facing the ☉. Its influence will be equivalent to the influence of the planets which it converges with at that time, while, at the same time, it is in good standing at its fourth, third and sixth phases, as well as when it is facing the ☉. If you detect that the ☽ is getting increasingly bright and more powerful, this will be an indication that this is the best occasion for achieving an increase in whatever you would like to achieve. However, if its brightness is decreasing, then this is the best time to achieve a decrease in whatever you want to accomplish. If the ☽ separates from the ☉ until it reaches the left fourth phase, this is favorable for claiming a right. It will be a favorable position for undertaking selling, purchasing, quarrels, debate and counter argument when the ☽ moves away from the ☉'s left fourth phase and becomes in full view of the ☉. But between facing the ☉ and its right fourth phase will be favorable for the unjustly treated in a conflict as well as for debt and when it converges with the ☉, it becomes favorable for applying education and claiming a right.

You should know that the best planet's su'ud is when there is a sa'ad in the constellation in which the planet is a part of and, at the same time, there is a sa'ad in the next constellation. You should also know, Allah bless you, that the turned up-side-down constellations are favorable for triumph and coercion. ♀ and ♂ and constellations of dual bodies are especially favorable for making talismans and tricks. As for the fixed constellations, they are favorable for influential people and making talismans for constant actions. Thus, if you intend to produce silver or gold chemically or do anything which connects the spirituality of the ☽ and the ascendant with a fixed constellation and with a dual-body planet, and if you want to start an action that you like to repeat on a daily basis, you need to let the ascendant be a dual-body constellation and to let the ☽ in an up-side-down constellation looking at the ascendant. When you want to have an action with a lasting potential and constancy, let that ascendant be a fixed constellation or with a dual-body constellation, and, at the same time, let the ☽ be in a fixed constellation connected to the master of its house either in the third or sixth phase provided that the master of its house is clear of nuhus, burning and retreat. If this is impossible, let the ☽ be connected to the su'ud while that particular sa'ad is looking at the master of the ascendant in a third or sixth phase. Avoid their facing each other and the fourth phase since the strongest effect takes place when the su'ud are looking from the third or the sixth phase, and the weakest when they are looking from the fourth phase or when they are facing each other. The weakest will be when the nuhus are looking from the third or sixth phase and the strongest when they are looking from the fourth phase or when they are meeting each other. If the ☽ is accidentally connected to the master of its house which was a nahs, then this situation will be favorable in fulfilling needs and all sought effects; however, if it is a sa`ad and looking at the ascendant, that will be better and more efficient. Avoid all actions when the ☽ is with the Tail and looking at the nuhus from the fourth phase, as well as when they are facing each other, or separating from each another. Additionally, you should avoid all actions when the ☽'s qualities are decreased because this indicates difficult, tiresome and prolonged action. Hardship is proportionate to the decrease in one or more of the attributes of the ☽, especially if this decrease is in one of the three qualities: light, motion and calculation. Its best situation is when its light is brighter and out of sight of ☿ because if ☿ is looking at the ☽ when its light is brighter, this will add a great deal of nahs to the ☽ and the same thing happens when ♃ is looking at the ☽ when its light is less bright. The ☽ is strongest at night when it is above the Earth, while the ascendant is strongest on daytime when the ☽ is below the Earth. You should also know that the best choice is when the ☽ and the ascendant are in a straight-ascendant constellation. This situation indicates expeditious fulfillment of a need and success, especially if they are in fixed or in dual-body constellations.

You may know that ♀ is the fastest constellation in turning up-side down, and ♄ is the most unsteady; ♃ is the fastest in motion, and ♎ is the strongest and the most balanced. You may also know that the poles are faster in completing actions than others and what comes after the poles are slower and then the dropping poles are slow and signals of failure. The fastest completion of an action is accomplished when there is a sa`ad in the ascendant, or when the ☽ is moving in a straight path. Be aware that the outcome of an action can be detected from the master of the third phase of the ☽, from the master of the ascendant, in accordance with their positions and situations, as well as when the planets are looking at them. You may follow these examples in order to predetermine what the outcome will be.

Dorotheus, the pioneer of establishing the rules for starting actions, advises to have the ascendant and its master and the ☿ and the master of its house in good standing and to avoid, as much as you can, having the ☿ in one of the ten bad phases at the start of an action and not to let it disappear from the ascendant, especially when the master of the ascendant or the master of the ☿ are two nahses opposing and competing with the ☿ from a pole. Let the ☿ be in the ascendant pole. Do not drop the arrow of happiness at the beginning of actions or matters related to opposing the ☿ or competing with it. Also, do not pay any attention to the master of the arrow or whether the arrow is dropping into the ascendant if the arrow is looking at the ascendant and the ☿. Be careful to let the master of the ascendant be with the arrow. This is safer and better. Do not at all let the ☿ be in the third, sixth, eighth or twelfth phase of the arrow. This is abhorred. Let the beginning of the master of the ascendant and the ☿ be always in the straight ascending constellations. You may also know that the ascendant and the fourth and its master denote the beginnings in general. However, if you see the ☿ in a bad situation or something comes up that has to be done and you cannot delay, drop the ☿ from the ascendant and do not let the ascendant have any part of the ☿; make the ascendant a sa`ad and strengthen the ascendant and its master. Thus is Dorotheus' statement.

Going back to our subject, we would like to add that improving the ascendant and its master should be in quality form and happiness. By form, we mean that the ascendant should have similar meaning and quality to the meaning and quality of the need. By quality, we relate such matters as things to be completed quickly, fast motion, authority and strength to the fiery constellations. By meaning, we relate such matters as wars to ♂'s constellations and we have the need, the master of the need and the master's master of the need in suitable positions. The position of the need indicates the beginning of what is in this need; the master of the need refers to the middle of the need, and the master's master of the need points out to the outcome of the need. Moreover, the ascendant indicates the beginning of the situation of the person asking for the need; the master of the ascendant indicates the middle and the master's master of the ascendant indicates the end. You can refer the arrow of the need to the status of the need, to its master and to its master's master. Improve all these with what I have described above: bring to them the su'ud which have been produced for them, looking and by friendly connections; drop the nuhus from these positions and beware of the return of the master of the ascendant or the master of the need, because this indicates the worst, prevention and prolonging. If all positions and situations point to the being, this will be preceded by despair and prevention by preventive measures and actions. The result will be achieved but with difficulty. Avoid having the Tail face or converge with either the ☽ or the ☾ or in any other arrangement; that is they should not be in a converging or facing situation, but in the ascendant, in the position of the need or in the arrow of the need. This will spoil the outcome with disgrace and difficulty. Be sure that the su'ud are placed in the ascendant and the positions of the need or in the poles. As for the major sa'ad, it is powerful in every matter in which you seek Allah's protection. Regarding the minor sa'ad, it is powerful in entertainment, sensual pleasure, women, make-up and so forth. Avoid having the ☽ in the ascendant in any matter because it is opposing it and hostile to it. However, the ☾ does not oppose the ascendant, but it uncovers matters, propagates them and divides the society.

Be certain that there are no nuhus in the ascendant and the poles especially if they were the masters of the bad positions. If the nahs is the master of al-Thamin, it indicates death, opposition and imprisonment. If it is the master of al-Sadis, it indicates enemies, slaves, illnesses, theft, small prisons and four-legged animals. If it is the master of al-Thani-ashar, it denotes a disaster caused by money, assistants, food and water. The benefit of what I am telling you is very important in the science of talismans. Beware and take extreme caution not to let the ascendant be a daytime ascendant in a daytime constellation or a night-time ascendant in a night-time constellation. Additionally, it should be ascending in a straight line. The same applies to the ☉ and the ☽ if you can arrange that. The masters should be strong to obtain a combined force. Know the planets and what they indicate and this will help you achieve the purpose in this regard. Whenever you like to acquire friendship, companionship, or association, let the ☽ be accepted by ♀ in the third phase, or better yet in the house of honor.

You should know that the third phase is a figure of three equal sides. Each side consists of 120 parts circumscribed by the celestial body bands. The hexagonal form is composed of six equal sides. Each side is made of 60 parts surrounded by the celestial body orbits. The quadrangular form is a four-sided figure and each side comprises 90 parts bordered by the celestial body bands. Facing is equivalent to the second quadrangular phase.²⁷

Going back to our topic, we would like to say that if ♀ is not accepting, let it be in the third phase of the ☽ while the ☽ is being accepted by ♀ or by the master of its house regardless of whether it is in the third or sixth phase or converging with them. If that was not possible, let the ☽ have some of ♀'s good luck, the su'ud of ♀ and clear of nuhus, and if that is only for friendship and companionship, let the ascendant be in the good fortune of ♀. However, if friendship is for an interest in real estate, the ascendant should be in al-Rabi. If you desire to benefit from credit, let it be in Al-Tasi. If you hope to fulfill a wish, let it be in al-Hadi-Ashar and simultaneously make the arrow of happiness and its master derive their good fortune willingly from a strong position. If friendship and companionship are desired for war-related matters, let ♂ accept and assist the master of the ascendant or the ♃ as a gesture of friendship. If you want to obtain a loan, let the acceptance be from ♃ instead of ♂. If it is for writers, accountants or scholars, let acceptance be from ♃. If it is for the great king, let acceptance be from the ☉. If for judges and religious and noble people, let acceptance be from ♄.

Likewise, if it is from a seeker of a meaning of something, let acceptance be from its master - I mean the acceptance of the ♃ of the ascendant, the arrow of happiness and from the arrow of wealth. Additionally, let the master of the ♃ be restored, as we mentioned above, and let the master of the ascendant and the master of al-Rabi` be clear from nuhus. Power is an indicator of the outcome.

If you want to fulfill a need, let the master of the ascendant and the ♃ be accepted by the master of the need or the one which is controlling it. Also let the ♃ or the master of the ascendant be in the position of the need. If the need is from a sheikh or a landlord, let the master of the need be ♃. If it is from a judge, a religious and generous person or honorable person or from a minister, let the master of the need be ♄. If it is from an army or from a person who deals with fire and iron, let the master of the need be ♂. If it is from a king or a sultan, let its master be the ☉. If from a woman, an entertainment operator, a make-up professional or from the makers of perfume, make-up products, tattoos and silk brocades, let the master of the need be ♃. If the need is from an accountant, a writer, a person of wisdom and tricks, a merchant or from a vocational person with good public relations, let the master of the need be ♃. If the need is from a courier, a messenger, the king's servants, a sly person or a spy, let the master of the need be the ♃. Bring sa'ad the master of the ascendant and the ☽ with every need and let them be in an upside down position. If the need is for money, improve the arrow of happiness by meeting with its master and the master of the need. Also, let it be in sight of the ☽. Moreover, ameliorate the master of al-Rabi` with su`ud and acceptance. Be very cautious of the existence of a strong nahs separating the master of the ascendant and the ☽ on the one hand, and the master of the need, on the other. Furthermore, beware of the attachment of a nahs to the master of the need, to the ☽ or to the master of the ascendant as it does not have anything to do with the need. Let the acceptance from the third or sixth phases, which I have described, whether in su`ud or nuhus, be collectively in su`ud. Additionally, avoid dropping the master of the need, the ☾ and the ☽, and the master of the poles. If this difficult situation takes place, let the coercer of the five eclipses join the coercer of the meanings of the need. Let both be in su`ud and in an upside down position. Moreover, watch out for a nahs being attached to the master of the ☽, the master of al-Rabi and the ascendant, because this will spoil it and bring nahs to the outcome of the need.

Whenever you want to plan or deal with an action to produce a certain result or a result which is perpetual, let that and the ☽ be in a dual-body constellation and clear of nuhus. Also, let the ascendant be in a sound condition. If the plan is for gold, strengthen the ☾ and let it be in a good situation when you start your endeavor. Maintain this situation for the ☽ every time you start an action.

We have advised you, may Allah bless you, of good things which will be with you in many of your actions. Be scrupulous and use analogy with their partial matters. These are some of the pillars of making talismans and the key to them. Allah prohibits dealing with the art of stars because it leads to the art of talismans. My purpose for revealing this science is to promote reflection by those concerned. This is what Aristotle means when he says to Alexander,

"If you can make a move similar to and in agreement with a celestial movement and with a choice of stars, you will achieve your desire and fulfill your wish."

How true is Aristotle's advice! This is the difference between the philosophers endeavors and attempts of the uninformed.

Allah says,

"They know but the outer in the life of this world, but of the end of things they are heedless."

This is an indication to the profound nature and secrets of science.

❧Chapter Four❧

YOU MAY KNOW, THAT THE ANCIENT talisman-makers believed that in each quarter of the celestial sphere, eight parts move inwardly and eight move outwardly. Many of those who dealt with ephemeris had overlooked this fact in their calculations although it is very useful in the profession of talisman-making. In order to study this, you need to review the history of King Augustus. Go back 128 years from the date of King Augustus; that marks the end of the incoming eight parts in that era. After that, the beginning of the incoming parts will start. Then you add to these years 313 years from the beginning of Augustus' rule to the beginning of Diocletianus' rule and add to that the number of years he served as king. Take $\frac{1}{80}$ of that; in each 80 years of these, one part will start moving. The even number of eighties is eight. The remainder is added to the calculations of the ☉ and the five planets rotating around their axis. By this, you can determine what you want from this art. Thus, do not neglect the incoming-and-outgoing movement of planets because this is the backbone in making talismans for the purpose of producing images. You may know that this is their greatest concealed secret. These eight parts complete their incoming-and-outgoing movements once in every 360 years.

I explained to you that when they complete their outgoing movement, you can determine their incoming and outgoing. This knowledge is essential for producing the desired effects. The incoming-and-outgoing is a consequence of the constellations' movement from East to West or from West to East. No other phase is useful. When the incoming phase starts, this will be an indication of what events take place in the world. Similarly, if the ongoing phase starts, it will be an indication of other events caused by the incoming and outgoing phases. You may bear in mind that the incoming-and-outgoing phases are characteristics of the constellations' band, not of the straight path.

King Augustus became a king 200 years after King Alexander which means that the former rule ended 260 years after King Alexander's rule. As for his reference to the 310 year period between Augustus rule and Diocletianus, this was when King Augustus removed another King from power; that is 12 years before Christ. Accordingly, this adds up to 4,988 years of the history of the world. In order for the total number of years to agree with the total number of Alexander's years, you subtract these 12 years. Accordingly, the increase in Diocletianus' years will be 301 years in addition to the above-mentioned 128 years. Consequently, the increase in Diocletianus' years will be 429 years.

❧Chapter Five❧

I READ IN HERMES' WORKS something concerning this art of miracles, which I would like to cite. He divided this art into three types: the art of talismans, which has been mostly treated and dealt with by the Sabians and the Nabatean's slaves. Part of this field is the art of planets and offering them sacrifices, incense and drawings. The second type was the specialty of the Greeks who were the pioneers in the art of stars. This is an advanced and excellent art. The third type is the art of the qalaftirijat (potentials?), promoting inspirations, seriousness, and knowing spirits among which similar words are distributed. This art was the specialty of the Indians, the Sakasiks of Yemen, and the Copts of Egypt. Each of these sciences has its own philosophic origin, as well as introductions.

It is known about the Indians that they are advanced in the science of poisons which cannot be treated by medicine. By using certain words or making certain movements, they can kill or have the hearer change his mind. They developed a musical instrument called al-kankala with one string on one body. They can produce any tune and notes with this instrument. Additionally, they have strange secrets such as impregnating a woman without sexual relationships by directing certain movements at her. They also have a drink which prevents old age, gray hair, curved back and natural body degeneration. This drink is especially made and used by them only. They have the most capable people in making magic and illusions; they perceive that there is a building behind the equator in the South and they are the ones referred to as djinn and demons. They are in the kind of world which cannot be seen by the naked eye; they intermarry and die by natural law and believe that their guides in the celestial sphere are ♄ and the Tail. According to their history, one of their leaders called Adam was the beginning of their march due to his uniqueness. Their leader in this art claims that every image in the world of being and corruption is developed by the fixed planets thereby creating several types of configurations in the sky. He also claims that there are images in the sky that are not available on earth. These images are used by magicians in ceremonies or talismans to draw certain arrangements which they term as rings such as this figure:

The lines between these rings are the beams of these planets to earth as well as between the fixed planets. This arrangement as shown in the following figure:

Hermes also claims that some of the images of planets are illusionary, not real and, as a group, they only indicate that degree. This marvelous insight could not have been attained by this man without reviewing the books of the Indians who deal with this science. Nonetheless, they use these images in accordance with the established planets' arrangements at certain times and known ascendant. They also use optimism, castigating, forewarning, and expressions to strengthen their confidence in questions, perceptions and retrieving buried valuables.

Additionally, they make use of halos, the halos of the ☉ and the ☽, rainbows, shooting stars, comets and blackness in the ☉ to identify the high effects. All of these support and strengthen the sought outcome. Moreover, they believe that there are beautiful and ugly images created by the fixed planets in the celestial sphere. Thus, if someone is born while the ascendant is a beautiful image and the ☉ and the ☽ are in beautiful images, this will be an indication that the born will be happy; however, if born while the ascendant is an ugly image, and the ☉ and the ☽ are in an ugly image, he will be unfortunate. Artful actions, questions and talismans have similar effects. Furthermore, they believe that the shares of stars are like the night mixed dreams that do not indicate anything because they are mixed, and therefore, they should be avoided, and others should be looked at. These are frequently considered in birth, requests and artful acts. Besides, they think that dreams are the result of mental strength and its connection with the celestial world. Accordingly, what you see there, are images of things on earth. This true vision and its science is close to the science of stars. Therefore, by relying on this closeness, they use the strength of ♃ as an indication of the status of the born if ♃ is strong. Nonetheless, dreams may be the result of a personal conjecture or confusion.

You may know that the truth of dreams is an objective representation of personal matters, neutralizing the five senses and employing reflection. The force of imagination composes what it perceives from tangible images and separates them from one another. It also has a third function and that is likeness; if the speaking mind, as perfect as it may be, helps the dreamer see something which will be seen as it is. But if the force of imagination is more perfect, the perception will be in meaning. For instance, if the perfect mind sees a dog or a lion about to attack him, it will come out as perceived. However, if the force of imagination was more perfect, it will be perceived as a lawman or a thief, and perception is by meaning. If the natural desire is strong, and the mind is preoccupied with it as well as with clothes and other daily activities, these concentrations and activities will be envisioned as involvement in sensual pleasures, swimming and similar actual daily activities. For example, if one is preoccupied with having sexual relations because of abundant stored energy, he will experience puberty acts. If full of fluid, he will see in his dream rivers; if he has a cold and apathetic temper, he will see nightmares; if he has a hot temper, he will see fires and furnaces, and so forth. Likewise, the essence of prediction is the intuitive knowledge of human nature by reflecting on what is being looked at for making a prediction, whether it is a statute that can be seen, or something that can be heard in the case of reflection. The force of imagination is sent to look into the sought knowledge. If his force of imagination is strong enough, he can visualize the knowledge like looking at a mirror, and then he can use what he saw and heard to reach some sort of knowledge. This is similar to the function of the force of imagination force when the senses are dormant. It acts upon the tangibles, which he can see when he is awake, and then adds them to what is being mentally perceived to develop a dream. If the tangibles and the perceived images are proportionate and the body and its conditions are in

Be aware that fortune telling is derived from the fifth essence called revelation. It is one of the imagining forces of the mind which goes through the particulars until it becomes fully aware of them, and then it can advise him of these particulars either when he is asleep or awake. If the imagining force is ideal, the particulars will be available to him similar to the mirror, as we mentioned before, which reflects and reports these particulars as they are. However, this information pertains only to the particulars; it does not deal with mental perception. If he only becomes ideally aware of these perceptions, he becomes wise. But if he becomes ideally aware of both, he becomes a prophet, and this is limited to the persons who receive perfect revelation from the First Creator. In this case, what the Creator transmits through his revelation to the active mind, will be transmitted from the active mind to his acted upon mind. However, when this revelation is transmitted from the active mind to his imagining force, his acted-upon mind becomes wise, but if it is transmitted to his imagining faculty, he becomes a prophet. This person will be in the highest rank of mankind and the happiest. This is the source, as well as the end of every good. We seek virtues to be happy, and we get there by improving our manners, taking care of our households, and reforming and uniting the Ummah²⁸ by which it can attain happiness. The knowledge of beings, how, why and what these beings are, is the theoretical part of it. Beginning with tangibles we ascend from this point to theological levels according to the individual potential. This is the real happy and ideal person. Happiness is the righteousness which is sought for the sake of righteousness; it is not sought at any time for achieving other things because there is nothing beyond happiness that is more ideal. Abu Nasr al-Farabi²⁹ refers to this subject in his introduction on the results of actions by saying: "Trivial matters may lead to great accomplishments, and these are the actions by which happiness can be attained, such as benign actions and intentions which lead to good deeds. He who achieves that will enjoy an everlasting life, a pleasure unblemished by any sorrow, a knowledge clear of any misinformation and a wealth pure of any poverty. The Prophet, may Allah grant him salvation, says in this regard, "O Allah, there is no life as good as life in the hereafter. May Allah admit us in it and help us to follow the path which leads to it".

Going back to our topic, I would like to add that the Indians claim that a spirit may appear to the magician as a person which communicates with him and teaches him whatever it likes. It may endear him to kings and sultans or solve or complicate things for him. Spirits were portrayed by the ancient generations as pictures of different things on their temples, which they believed would fulfill any request or wish. They also claim that talismans are more influential than choices because they are made by the nature of the whole. It is analogous to a miracle because it uses natural characteristics, since natural characteristics can produce individual strange results. Some of the examples of these wonderful actions are protecting a person who wears a red ruby necklace from plagues and other diseases. By combining the particular and the whole, a talisman may act to repel mosquitoes, lice and flies. It does this by incorporating in it a celestial arrangement and physical materials which are made from it, for them in accordance with the principle that the being of a thing is its matter, which is a natural characteristic. Nonetheless, the purpose of mentioning the characteristic here is to let you know the true essence of talismans, and that whatever is made in this world to achieve a certain result is accomplished through a special purpose talisman. You will realize that afterwards.

❖Chapter Six❖

THE OBJECTIVE, MAY ALLAH BLESS YOU, of mentioning the characteristics is to let you know that anything that acts naturally, may increase or decrease its action. However, if this action was specialized for a certain function, it will be more complete and stronger, and its manifestation will be clearer and more obvious. This is similar to the case of scammonia³⁰ attraction to jaundice. The cause for that is that scammonia is hot and dry, which are similar to the characteristics of jaundice. You may also know that if the naturally acting medicine is specialized for a certain disease, its effect will be stronger. A talisman is more fascinating; that can be manifested by the various types of contribution of planets, on one hand, and accepting these contributions, on the other. Contributing is more complete, may Allah bless you. When you make a talisman, you should deliberately start with a symbol and an image of acceptance, so that contribution from planets can be given with full consent. By doing this, a talisman will produce the sought objective with a lasting effect and an expanding spirit. The purpose of this example is to clarify the

Accordingly, if you want to make something out of animals, compose a product out of plants or fabricate something out of rocks. Collect parts of these things first, and then pound them, crush them, mix them or use any other method until you finish. Nature and planets will continue to manage and complete this process until the above things produce the final planned results, such as making dyes, reproduction of animals, as well as bees', snakes', and scorpions' functions, etc. The same thing can be said about natures and characters as well as about producing medicine. This is also similar to developing sperm in the womb until they reach the stage where nature and planets start performing their function gradually to produce the planned outcome. Another example is the production of rocks from water and metal. Initially they are in a liquid form like semen and then winds beat it until it becomes foam. Subsequently, metal and other surrounding substances keep whipping it until it reaches its final solid form. The same is true for plants and their production. Parallel to that is the first stage of mold formation; it initially goes back to a similar moist substance, which is the essence of being, and to other similar accepted models and images, and when it gets to that state, it begins forming the model. This is achieved by the resumed acceptance, not by the initial acceptance. This acceptance is accomplished by dew and moisture which it acquires at this stage. All other things that are produced by profession must coincide with these models of formation and being. Without a being, the sought image will never be accepted because, in order to make a thing by means of generating and composing, first you must prepare the components which make up that thing so they are ready to accept a different form. For example starch is made from food, while the ingredients that make up vermicelli³¹ and sweets are made from starch. By the same token, sauce, cheese and butter are made from milk, and yarn from cotton and so forth. The reason for this is whenever a substance with a certain image accepts another image, the first substance will vanish and the new image acquires a new acceptance by which it accepts a second image. Accordingly, if the new image is accepted, it becomes ordinary for the remainder of other images. This is also true for the fluid substance in this world. As for the higher world, it is either an actual substance and an eternal image or a unique image that does not have substance.

Whereas our objective from the above examples has been clarified, I would like you to know that talismans are similar. The objective of a talisman-maker is to let one matter be willing to accept an image, such as the apparent effect of bay seeds against snakes' venom, saffron against anoles³², sour and bitter substances against hornets, and hornets' attraction to roses and licorice roots. Another example is the increase of semen with an increase in the acidity of the flowing fluid. The body of a talisman is composed of more than one ingredient and when these ingredients are combined, they accept the sought result of the new compound.

This is similar to medicines which physicians prescribe in the treatment of illness and pain. If these medicines can be taken or used individually, then you should do that. That is what experienced physicians do. Jahja Ibn Masawaih advises, in this regard, that as long as you can treat a patient with a single-ingredient medicine, do not use a compound medicine. However, if you need to use a compound medicine, which has different ingredients, let the sought effect of this compound be similar to the total effects of each ingredient. The same thing can be said about baked goods, theriaca³³, meals of individual pieces such as fruits and compounds such as sweets.

You may also know that an individual planet may have different functions like fire. Fire can be used to heat honey. If it is used adequately, it gives honey a delicious taste; however, if the heat increases, honey will boil over and burn, and it becomes distasteful and bitter. Similar to this is the function of planets depending on whether they are in a bright or in a dark degree.

Planets have two types of functions: subjective motion and accidental heat which follows their motion. Heat is the essence of motion and motion is the essence of the function of planets. This statement particularly applies to the sensory faculties. What applies to the mental faculty is that motion is the ethereal essence of fixed planets. This essence comes to fixed planets through longing for virtue and the general good. Thus, by necessity, heat follows motion and motion follows the first perfection which cannot be surpassed by any other perfection at all. Analogous to the above are the collective orbits of the celestial bodies, their individual orbits and the total heat emanating from them. The effects of the celestial body orbits influence the effects of planets, not the other way around. The function of planets is stagnant and motionless; however, planets produce magnificent effects and wonderful contributions which do not exist in celestial orbits at all. Ether is the first true acting nature, and the contribution of planets is but its dye and garment like dyes and garments we use although the former are prettier and better. The celestial orbital degrees are not real at all; this term is being used for convenience and calculation purposes, because there are no parts of the celestial orbits which are active and others which are acted upon. In motion and nature, all are one; there is no difference at all between the part and the whole.

Angles are not void of fixed planets or their fixed arrangements because the fixed planet orbits are full of fixed planets. What is meant by an angle being void of fixed planets is that besides the fixed planets that we are able to observe, there are other distant planets whose detection is absolutely beyond our resources. Accordingly, it has been envisaged that a planet in a fixed position does not do anything since it is not in its angle, elevation, apogee, nadir, return or straight motion. However, it will be on its way to every one of these situations, but it will not have an arrangement similar to those of either different or similar planets. Despite the fact that these positions are active, they appear to be inactive since they are acquired by fixed planets which do not settle in the sky, and accordingly, they appear to be inactive. This position is abstract and ambiguous. Think about it. Although planets are active by nature, they have two functions, general and specific. The general function is the action which has no direction and the specific function is the action which has a direction. For example, food in the stomach is absorbed by the liver and transformed into a substance similar to blood which flows in the veins. But when the liver transfers blood to various organs, it transforms into blood what seems to be blood and into bones and limbs what seems to be bones and limbs.

This situation is analogous to the composed arrangements of the planets' orbits. There are reasons for the virtuous action of planets; if a planet is in its summit or in what is called its apogee, it joins and becomes associated with the planet above it and performs its action, and consequently, it does elegant things. However, if it is in its lowest point (nadir), it does the function of the planet underneath it. In the same manner, the orbits of fixed planets accomplish the same function of the ethereal orbit. The ♅'s orbit does the function of at least two of the four fundamental elements of nature, especially fire and air due to their kindness. Likewise, 5 always does the function of fixed planets when it is with them and at its farthest point, but it does the function of 2 if it is at its nearest, lowest point. This is similar to the relationship between every individual planet and what is above or under it. This is an important element in the science of talismans which has been concealed by the philosophers of this profession. Had we kept it hidden from the seekers of this approach, we would have acted niggardly and avariciously.

You ought to know that the slower the planets are, the stronger their effect and the more elegant they will be. The faster they are, the weaker their effects will be. Moreover, the effect of planets at medium speed are medium. This is not an absolute relationship; it is relative because this situation may be reversed; the slower may become less effective and the slower may become faster and consequently become more effective. These relationships exist between the ethereal orbit and the movement of beings on earth. As for the relationship of the ethereal orbit to beings on earth, the heavier the being is the stronger the effect will be and the lighter, the weaker. The relationship of beings on earth to orbits of fixed planets is similar; the lighter, the more effective and the heavier, the less effective.

However, there was a substantial disagreement on this subject. Some of the ancient philosophers believed that the relationships were the opposite; they thought that the ethereal orbit and the orbit of planets are directly related. The orbit of a slow-moving planet is necessarily very similar to the ethereal orbit in stillness and heaviness. Simple beings are similar in these basic qualities; the slow is similar to the slow and the fast is similar to the fast. Many difficult symbols and Treatises were written on this subject.

Let me mention to you one of the secrets of the ancient professionals about making talismans. You should know that when the ☽ is with ♄, the effect of ♄ will prevail because ♄'s influence is much greater than the ☽'s. This situation applies to every other planet when it is with ♄ since ♄'s effect is greater than all the effects of other fixed planets. This is either because of its height, its closeness to the ethereal orbit and to the orbit of fixed planets or because of its lethargic motion and its striking similarity to the ethereal orbit. Nonetheless, if the ☉, ♀ or ♁ are associated with the actions of ♄, they affect in a remarkable manner these actions and improve them slightly. The same situation emerges if fixed planets are added to ♄. These arrangements and relationships apply to the ☽ without any deviation whatsoever; its effects influence fire and air, and with this influence, fire and air affect water and earth, and, subsequently, the effect of the above four have bearing on the second generated being.

It is possible that whenever two planets join, they develop three different situations: a plus, a minus and a median. The ☽'s effect will be governed by ♄'s power when the ☽ joins ♄ and as long as the latter is in its zenith, noble or apogee. The same situation prevails only if the ☽ and ♄ join in one path at these positions. This condition will also take place when ♄ and other planets join in these positions. However, the effect of the ☽ may be a lot stronger than ♄'s if the ☽ was in the above graceful positions and ♄ was in the opposite positions. If the ☽ and ♄ are together in positions opposite to the above graceful positions, the ☽'s effect will be subordinate to ♄'s as in the first situation. If ♄ is in its graceful positions and the ☽ in its own normal positions, the effect of the ☽ will be very weak. When ♄ is in a straight and return path as well as in other perfectly straight paths, both effects will be even, especially if it happens that the ☽ is in its summit. This is because this high and straight position of the ☽ is not equal to the descending position of ♄. However, the situation with ♄ and ♀ is different from that with ♄ and the ☿ although they may be similar to a great extent. Thus, if ♄ is high and so is ♀, ♀'s effect will be stronger. Nonetheless, if ♀ is high and ♄ is in its first path and in a graceful and straight position, then the dominance of ♀ is not certain. However, if the arrangement is different, ♄ will dominate and ♀'s effect will completely diminish. The same situation applies to ♄ and ☿. When they are together, ☿'s effect will be stronger except if any of the above conditions take place. As for ♀ and ♄, each one has its own arrangement and similarity to other planets. However, the ☿ is different because it does not have either the arrangement or the similarity to the high planets. This is the basis to be relied on in dealing with these accidental occasions and the need for it is very essential in the science of talismans.

You should also know that the action of planets is a function of their being and since their being is simple, it is immune to corruption. Corruption only occurs in compounds made of different components. The action of the orbits of the whole eastern sphere is the absolute general action because it moves all orbits and planets. The reason for this is that the sphere orbits are the cause of the planet orbits and motion. In fact, it is absolutely still because it is the moving force of all orbits and planets. It has been said that it moves the whole, but it, itself, is not moving because that is impossible. Although the fixed-planet orbits are common, they are relative to the movement of the orbit of the whole and this is the case with the rest of the orbits. It should be understood that the motion of each sphere is common to all orbits and planets in it as well as to their own motion. Another cause for the action of the planets is their orbits, since planets by themselves do not move; they only move by accident. Accordingly, planet orbits have two actions: by being and by accidental heat, because, as we said before, heat follows the movement of planets only if it develops immediately after the movement. As we mentioned above, the entire effect and contribution sought from talismans is moving whatever is movable and transforming it from force into action. This is because an image reflects a similar resemblance of anything and matter is susceptible to accept everything. Every matter has an image of a particular compound and for every compound there is an image of the matter composed of that particular compound. For example, a small fire grows bigger because it brings out the primordial substance of fire by force until it develops it via its own being, and thus, it grows bigger by (natural) action.

Additionally, you ought to know that the opposite does not ruin what is being developed by action; however, it can do that to what is being developed by force. What is being developed according to natural laws will be sound and what is being developed by an unnatural action will not be sound. Accordingly, what is heated by action can move what is heated by force because heating takes place by principle and the cause for this heat makes it hotter. As a being heated by action can move the heated being by force, the heated being by force moves, by nature, the heated being by action. The principle of acting by being is the same as being acted upon by its own being.

❧Chapter Seven❧

WHAT WE HAVE EXPLAINED applies to the image of the contribution and acceptance of the effect of talismans and their actions as well as to the images of similar and different beings. Similitude and difference are of important significance in making talismans. There is a similar functional relationship between the action of planets relative to the action of stone from which the effect of a talisman is derived, on the one hand, and the time and place of making the talisman, on the other. Therefore, relativity is one of the important fundamentals in making talismans.

Quantity is also similar because quantity, as stated in related instructions, is divided into two basic divisions: the connected and the separate. The connected is divided into five subdivisions: the line, the plane, the body, the time, and the place. The separate part is divided into two subdivisions: the statement and the number. The knowledge of these parts are essential in making talismans. As for the line, it is the azimuth that exists between the planets and the talisman and the azimuth between the talisman and the planned expected effect from the talisman. Both are similar and congruent. These two azimuth subdivisions of the line are what have been stated in the instructions about the straight line. They define the straight line as the line that faces all of the points placed on one another.

This is the most qualified statement about the talisman, the straight line is the object upon which the carried thing makes one pass beginning from the initial point until it reaches the end point, which is tangential to what the thing ends up to. In this regard, we say so-and-so is facing so-and-so and in his view. Similar descriptions can be made as long as there is no obstruction of what takes place on the straight line. Another example of this is the beams of planets shining on a body placed at the point on which the beams are shining. Be aware and cognizant of this. Another reason for considering this as the most qualified statement in making a talisman is that for the contribution of planets to produce the required action of a talisman, the same action of that stone or thing must be at a spotlight suitable for producing a similar effect. It is a must that the line between the planet and the talisman must be straight in order for the contribution to be complete. If it is not, the contribution will not be complete.

The plane is essentially the form of contribution since it is the diffusion of the effect of a talisman in that place. If the effect spreads, then it is by necessity a plane. For the same reason, air is transformed by this action as it is transformed by heat and so are cold temperature, smell, light, colors and so forth. Similarly, the thing upon which the line passes from the planets to the talisman and from the talisman to the place passes is a plane. These secrets and the causes for these phenomena were not disclosed.

Time is associated with the motion of a body which explains the essence of the talisman itself. Regarding the function of talismans, time is divided into several parts . One of these is the time of observing planets as to when their contribution is complete and when it is not. This is a function of the inclination of planets. Another part is the duration of time needed to observe the degree which, in reality, is more effective than planets. One of these is the time of observing planets when there is a need to locate a planet which is linked to another planet either in one degree, facing each other, in a triangular or in a quadruple³⁴ configuration. Other similar times are needed to identify the location of planets at which they render their actions, whether complete or not, such as integrity, decline and honor or give contributions such as su'ud and nuhus in dark or bright degrees, in producing effects, such as breaking off, and the like of what has been written in this regard. This is the great secret of the essence of talismans. Similar to this relationship is the relationship between the brought in and the brought out as well between similitude and contrariety. Other examples are observing the time of the end of the contribution and the time for making a talisman, as well as other time-related situations.

This art treats place as an aspect of quantity. It is the place of observing and facilitating it so that it can be observed at the required time. Some of these is the place of the talisman, the location of setting it up relative to air and earth, exposing it, hiding it and so forth.

One of these is the place in which a talisman is made. Another is the place in which the substance of a talisman is derived. This is needed for the action of talismans whose effect and contribution are disbelieved when heard because they are miraculous. Some of these are the action of talismans and their effect in things that are not animal, such as the effect of removing sand, moving rocks, preventing plagues, rain and clouds, changing the direction of wind and so on. There is no need at this juncture to give more examples of these actions since this part of the art must not be used at all.

Statements and numbers, as an aspect of the separate quantity, are needed in literature, signs, prediction and in pursuing tracks and so forth. Numbers are especially needed in these actions because they pertain to time, and because time specifies the number of the rotation of the planet in its orbit. When we say from this time to that, we only indicate a number, and when it gets to that (number), the rotation ends. Thus, if we say that an event takes place from a certain hour through a period of forty-two days, we are only giving a number.

You may also know that a signpost is a part of this type of art because it determines the shape of the talisman. It is also a part of this art, which is believed to affect most of the functions of talismans as well as their images in the place where they are placed. Moreover, this situation is an integral part of the signpost. How similar this relationship is to these phenomena!

Quality is the real cause of talismans because the location of the talisman action, which is similar to the location of the quality action, may possess a complete force, and by this force, it is capable of diffusing its action. This is, in fact, connecting higher bodies with lower bodies. In other words, this location must be similar to the location of contributing planets and must accept their effects in order for the sought results to be produced.

As we have mentioned repeatedly, certain planets are characterized by certain functions. Some planets are specialized in cities, animals, plants, rocks and so on. Thus, if a rock in a certain location accepts the action of a planet, or if it is similar to other things that accept the action of that planet, then its nature, that is its quality, will be similar to the accepted action of the planet in question. The same situation applies to the rock because the nature of the rock from which a talisman is made needs to be strengthened. When the body of the rock develops the predominant characteristic, its effect will spread and prevail. Those who deal with this branch of knowledge cannot find any other approach than adding acquired qualities to the rock, which are similar to it, until they become the prevailing quality of the rock. The same thing is done with pastes such as theriaca whose dominant strength is acquired through the individual strengths of many of the component medicines. These medicines interact with one another to produce wonderful effects in several important fields such as medicine, art and other natural disciplines and talismans, as well as in curing infectious disease and in the interacting of rocks with one another. My advice regarding the second issue is: in every action seek similitude and avoid contrariness. I have summarized what I have mentioned above in this sentence hoping that you will understand it.

❧Chapter Eight❧

THE IDEA OF COMBINING different ranks of natural bodies was developed by ancient philosophers through this approach. They learned the strength of ranks of medicine, food and others, and then combined them together until they discovered the benefits of medicines and their various effects. It is necessary to mention here an important fact; the ancient philosophers disagreed about what the simple bodies are and how many they are. Some researchers say that the basic and primordial natural elements are heat, coldness, moisture and dryness. They agreed, however, that they are qualities and basic simple elements. Then they called them compounds as we say hot, cold, moist and dry. When we say hot, we mean that a matter has acquired heat and the same can be said about the other elements. This is different from saying heat, coldness, etc. After this combination, there is another combination as in saying hot and dry, hot and moist, cold and dry, and cold and moist. This combination is secondary because it is not one; heat is neither dryness nor moisture and the same applies to coldness with relation to other elements. There is a third combination as in saying fire, air, water and earth. This combination is in addition to the first basic elements and the second and third combinations. Following that is a fourth combination which pertains to persons. This is also divided into various divisions. As for climate, the seasons are four: spring, autumn, winter and summer. As for people and animals, there are the gall, the blood, the bile and the phlegm. Be aware that the basic elements of mankind are much more kinder than the basic elements of animals because the latter are much more dense. The basic elements of plants are fats, dyes, seeds and roots. Similar to that are the elements of rocks. The relationship between the characteristics of the elements of mankind and animals are similar to the relationship between plants and rocks. The kindness of mankind elements is similar to those of plants, and the characteristics of the elements of rocks are comparable to those of animals. Following these combinations are the pre-composed things, which are called the combination of the seven-degree compounds. This is the final stage of combining, such as medicines, buildings and other similar things - the simple elements of which have been attributed to them. The combined elements are seven parts and the sub-parts of these are 28. The following table depicts the summary of what we have explained in detail:

1st compound elements	hot	cold	moist	dry
2nd compound elements	hot & dry	cold & moist	hot & humid	cold & dry
3rd compound elements	fire	water	air	earth
4th compound elements	summer	winter	spring	autumn
5th compound elements	gall	phlegm	blood	bile
6th compound elements	dyes	seeds	fats	roots

Heat, coldness, humidity and dryness come, by sensory detection and analogy, before fire, air, water and earth in many aspects; fire is described as hot and dry because of its association with heat. Fire is neither described as heat nor as a compound because a compound is either composed of its fundamental elements by which it is described or a constant compound. Accordingly, heat is before fire, humidity before air, coldness before water and dryness before earth. This is only an analytic approach. The same situation applies to the liver, the spleen, the gall bladder, the heart, the lungs, the head, the legs, the hands, as well as the rest of the organs of the human body. As mentioned above, heat is the product of the constant motion of the celestial bodies in their orbits. However, coldness is the product of the center, the Earth, which is called the center of all orbits. Thus, it possesses the good for the entire world. Coldness is contrary to heat in all aspects, including characteristics, motion and stillness. Heat is the qualitative combining of similar things and dispersing opposite things. On the contrary, coldness combines opposite things and disperses similar things. This is how difference and contradiction become the equal inherent qualities of opposite things. Otherwise, the part will be disrupted.

Thus, in order for you to reach your goal, you need to research these arts and study them. I did not intend to confuse you; on the contrary, I am giving you interesting excerpts from various arts to let you have a clear mind and obtain what the ancient wise obtained and reach their level of prestige.

THERE IS A CONSENSUS REGARDING THE IMAGES of the fixed planet groupings and their substantiated effects. Some of these are:

A talisman for repelling a mouse.

Draw this symbol on a plate of red tin plate at the rise of the first phase of $\delta\iota$. This symbol comprises the planets in the $\delta\iota$ constellation. Place the plate in the location of the mouse, and consequently, it will run away from its location. This symbol is:

A talisman for repelling mosquitoes.

Draw this symbol on a Sulphur stone at the rise of the second phase of $\gamma\iota$. Mosquitoes will not get near where you place the stone. This is the symbol of the group of planets in the ✧ constellation that are capable of repelling mosquitoes. This symbol is:

A talisman for repelling flies.

Draw this symbol on a tin plate at the rise of the third phase of ♀. Place it in the location to be off limits for flies. This symbol is:

A peculiar talisman.

If you want to have a person whom you love to come to you in a hurry, draw the following symbol on a new piece of cloth on the day of ♀ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is the second phase of ✧ with ♀ in it. Burn the piece of cloth from one end and mention the name of the person in question. As a result, he will come quickly to the place of the talisman. This symbol emerges when ♀ is at its peak strength and in this phase. This symbol is:

A talisman for enmity.

If you plan to promote enmity and separation between two persons, you draw this picture on a black tin plate with a black tusk of a dog on the day of ٥ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is in the third phase of ٢ and with ٥ in it. Place this plate in the location of one of them or in their meeting location, and, as a result, they will separate on the worst possible terms. This symbol appears when ٥ is at its peak strength in this phase. This symbol is:

A talisman for vacating a location and preventing its development.

Draw the following symbol with a tusk of a pig on a tin plate on the day of ٥ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is the second phase of ٢ with ٥ in it. Place this plate in the desired location, and, as a result, this location will be afflicted with ٥'s catastrophic influence and will never be developed as long as this symbol is in it. This symbol is:

I have not seen any more symbols in the Persian works regarding this art. In the following chapter, I will explain the solid elements of which planets are composed, as well as their symbols and wonderful effects.

ROCKS AND STONES OF PLANETS: ♄: consists of the following rocks: iron, diamond, antimony, pure-black onyx, jet, turquoise, magnet, magnesium, gold, ruby, golden marqashitha and shadhanj.

♅: lead, diamond, sapphire, ruby, gold, crystal and various polished shiny stones.

♇: gold, arsenic, sand-color rocks, diamond, Pharaoh's glass, nacre, polished shiny rocks, shadhanj, emery and ruby.

♉: idramus, emery, emerald, mercury, chrysolite, tin, glass and marble.

♊: silver, silver-colored marqashina, small pearls, marble, lapis azure, onyx and sand-colored rocks.

The symbols of planets as designated by ancient philosophers are as follows:

SATURN

MOON

I took the above symbols of planets from The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, which is also known as al-Katib, from a book written by Apollonius and from The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, translated by Picatrix.

THE SUN

In the book written by Apollonius, the ☉ is symbolized by a woman standing in a carriage pulled by four horses. She holds a mirror in her right hand and a club in her left hand held close to her chest. Her head is shining. In The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, the ☉ is symbolized by a standing man stretching his hand as if he wants to shake the hand of a person next to him. He holds a shield in his left hand. Also there is a picture of a dragon under his feet. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, by Quraytun, translated by Picatrix, the ☉ is symbolized by a king sitting on a chair with a crown on his head, a picture of a crow between his hands and a dragon under his feet. Others portray the ☉ in the celestial orbits as a crowned man standing on a carriage pulled by four horses. He holds a mirror in his right hand and a shield in his left hand. His clothes are all yellow.

Every one of these pictures has certain effects and actions in talismans. Afterwards, we will explain them adequately for you.

VENUS

Apollonius symbolizes ♀ by a woman standing with an apple in her right hand and holding a comb that looks like a board with various pictures on it, in her left hand. In The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, ♀ is symbolized by a human body with the head of a bird and legs of an eagle. It was portrayed by others³⁵ as a naked woman followed by a child with a necklace around his neck. ♂ is in front of her. Others delineate it as a woman with long hair riding on a stag, holding an apple in her right hand and a bouquet in her left hand. Her dress is pure white.

MERCURY, ALSO KNOWN AS AL-KATIB

the crown of a rooster. Also, two of these pictures are on the top of his feet. Others portray it in its orbit as a crowned man riding on a peacock, holds a rod in his right hand and a plate in his left hand. His clothes are colorful.

THE MOON

The ☾ is symbolized in The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury as a beautiful woman with a dragon belt around her waist, two snakes on her head, has two horns in the form of snakes, has snake bracelets around her wrists and two dragons each with seven heads, on her head. Apollonius, the philosopher, portrays the ☾ as a woman standing on two oxen, the head of one of them is facing the tail of the other. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, the ☾ is depicted as a man with a head of a bird leaning on a cane and holding a tree between his hands. Others symbolize the ☾ as a crowned man standing on a carriage pulled by four oxen, holding a scepter in his right hand and a mirror in his left hand. His clothes are white and green.

SATURN

The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans explains that ♄ has the image of a man whose face is a face of a crow and his legs are similar to the legs of a camel. He is sitting on a chair holding a cane in his right hand and a lance in his left hand. Apollonius says in his book that ♄ is a man standing on a mimbar. The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury states that it has the image of a standing man, holding a whale in his hands over his head and standing on a statue of a lizard. Others mention that ♄ is depicted in its orbit as a man standing on a snake, holding a sickle in his right hand and a cane in his left hand. The color of his attire is gray and black.

JUPITER

Apollonius states that ♀ has the image of a man wearing a rope wrapped around him. He is sitting on an eagle, putting his legs on its shoulders and holding the rest of the rope in his right hand. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, ♀ is portrayed as a man with the face of a lion, the legs of a bird and a dragon with faces under his feet. He is holding an arrow in his right hand stabbing the head of the dragon. In The Benefits of Rocks, it is delineated as a man wearing a garment, riding on a dragon and holding either a rod or a spear in his hand. Others symbolize ♀, in its orbit, as a man riding on an eagle. He holds a scroll in his right hand and a nut in his left hand. His apparel is pure yellow.

MARS

Apollonius states that it has an image of a man wearing a helmet and a shield, and fastening a sword to his belt. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, it is symbolized as a crowned man holding a sword with carved figures on it. The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury states that it has the image of a standing naked man and a statue of a virgin woman representing ♀ standing at his right-hand side with her hair braided behind her. ♂ is putting his right hand around her neck and his left hand on her chest and at the same time looking at her face. He claims in his book that this image has many effects. Others state that ♂ has the image of a man riding on a lion with a sword in his right hand and a human head in his left hand. His attire is made of iron and ifrind.

These are the images that have been presented by the ancient philosophers. For every one of these images, there are special actions and effects. I will cite in the following treatises some of the texts of what they wrote in this field.

Images on Stones

The images of the ☉ carved on a pure red segment of onyx portray the ☉ as a king sitting on a chair with a crown on his head, holding the figure of a crow in his hands and under his feet are the following letters:

o i o

The holder of this segment will triumph over all kings. This was presented in The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans by Picatrix. He claims that the ☉ will be at its highest rank.

Some of these figures are presented in Aristotle's advice to Alexander. He says that whoever carves an image of a lion, with this figure:

on a segment of onyx, while the ascendant is ♈ and the ☉, cleared of all nuhus, is in it, will never be defeated. Moreover, he will fulfill all his wishes and will never have frightening dreams. Additionally, if you carve a picture of a woman sitting on a carriage pulled by four horses with a mirror in her right hand, a whip in her left hand, seven candles on her head and a pool inside the onyx stone, if you carve these images when the ☉ is at its highest rank, you will gain the respect and fear of everyone you come across or meet.

Moreover, when you carve on a shathina stone this figure of the ☉:

Moreover, if you carve on a stone of lapis azure, in the hour and at the peak prestige of ♀, a picture of a standing woman holding an apple in her hand and inside the stone a female sheep, you will have a successful and growing herd.

In Quraytun's book on talismans, he states that when you carve on a stone of quartz a picture of a snake with a scorpion on its back in the early morning of Monday and in the hour and honor of ♀, you will not be bitten by a snake and you will be cured from its bite if it is placed in moisture and swallowed.

Furthermore, when the following symbols:

are carved on a stone of quartz in the hour of ♀, the holder of this stone will be loved by children, close to their hearts and cannot tolerate staying away from him once they become associated with him.

He who carves on a stone of quartz an image of a standing woman with her hair braided in two braids behind her back and with two children with wings in her lab in the hour and honor of ♀, his trips, whether distant or close, will be facilitated and will proceed without any trouble as long as he holds onto it.

On a stone of crystal, carve a picture of three persons holding a meeting. The holder of this stone will experience more success in his trade than what he expects.

A picture of a mouse between two cats is carved in the hour of ♀ and, in its ascendant, is carved on a piece of coral. In this picture ♀ functions to repel mice from the place of the coral. Also, when a picture of an upside down fly is carved on a granite stone in the hour of ♀'s ascendant, the holder of the stone will be off limits to flies.

Carve the picture of a leech on a stone of dahnaj and a picture of two leeches with the head of one facing the tail of the other. This picture will remove leeches from the place of the stone. This picture is to be drawn and carved when ♀ is in its hour and ascendant. Be aware of that.

Additionally, a love talisman is made by carving a picture of a well-preserved woman with a standing semi-idol in front of her on a white stone. This is to be done in the hour when ♀ is ascendant.

Moreover, carve a picture of a woman with a wrapped rope in her hand. Her body is striped with fuzz-like stripes. She holds in the other hand a fruit that looks like an apple with which she stamps wax to cure children from their disease and all other ailments. This is to be done in the hour when ♀ is ascendant.

Furthermore, carve a picture of the head of a zebra with the head of a fly on it on a granite stone. The head should be a little oversized. This ought be done in the hour and ♀ is ascendant. The stone is used to stamp wax for increased production. This has been successfully experimented in labyrinths.

MERCURY

The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans states that for releasing prisoners and the like, carve on a stone of crystallite the picture of a man sitting on a chair with a rooster on his head. His legs are those of an eagle, a torch in his hand and the following symbols are under his feet:

This is to be done in the hour and honor of ♃.

Also, carve on a stone of emerald the following symbols:

-in its hour and ascendant. The holder of this stone will have full command of authors, accountants and laborers.

On a stone known as mantis, carve the image of a man sitting on a distaffed chair with a lead in his right hand writing on a scroll in his left hand. This is to be done in the hour of ♃ and in its honor. If the holder of this stone is a writer and hopes to achieve a favor from a ruler, he will be employed by that ruler, entrusted with his affairs and favored in every aspect.

It is stated in the book The Interpretation Spiritual of Talismans, that if you carve a picture of a frog on an emerald stone in the hour when ♃ is ascendant and hold onto it, no one can harm you or talk badly about you. On the contrary, your actions will always be commended.

Additionally, when the picture of a mouse or a jerboa is carved on an emerald stone of emerald in the hour when ♃ is ascendant, no one will steal anything from the person who will make profits in his trade.

It is stated in the same book that the person who carves on an emerald stone a picture of a lion and the head of a lion and writes underneath it a thousand and above it the letter "d" in the hour when ♃ is ascendant, will be loved by all people and saved from the atrocities of kings.

Other sources state that when a picture of a scorpion is carved on a crystallite stone in the when it is ascendant and is worn by a pregnant woman, her child will be saved from all diseases.

Also, if the figure of a hand holding a scale is carved on a glass stone in the hour when it is ascendant, this stone will cure all types of fever. It has been tested and proven to be effective.

THE SUN

An image of a scorpion is carved on a stone of bezoar when the ☽ is in ♍ and in its hour, and while ♍ is in one of the poles of the ascendant. Mount the stone on a golden ring and stamp it on a chewed glue of kundur while the ☽ is in ♍. If a person is bitten by a scorpion, he will be immediately cured when he drinks a dose of kundur. This has been tested as we mentioned before.

Besides, if the following symbols:

-are carved on a stone of lapis azure in the hour when the ☽ is ascendant and the stone is subsequently submerged in a type of beverage which is consumed by two persons, they will become friends although they may have been adversary.

Picatrix states in his book, The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, that if you carve the picture of the head of a bird leaning on a cane with a picture of a daisy tree between its hands on a maha (pearl?) stone in the hour when the ☽ is ascendant and in its honor, you will not get weary during your trip no matter how long the distance may be as long as you wear it.

Carve on a crystal stone the picture of a woman with an upright strand in her hair, two oxen under her, one of her legs on the head of one ox and the second leg on the head of the other. Also carve inside the stone the picture of a standing woman with a crown on her head, a club in her right hand as well as the following symbols:

Stamp this stone in wax and place it in a place familiar to pigeons and as a result they will multiply in great numbers. Carving is done when it is ascendant and the hour as mentioned above.

Moreover, carve on a stone of malachite the picture of a fly in the hour of the D when it is 21° from Ω , 2° from γ and when h is in the first $^\circ$ from Z . Also carve the following symbols on the body of the fly:

-and around it:

Mount the stone on a ring in the hour when the D is ascendant. Place under the stone a piece of the skin of a snake. No flies whatsoever will enter the location or house where this stone is placed.

Additionally, when the picture of a lion with a human face and this symbol:

on its head is carved on a stone of lapis azure in its hour while ascendant, the stone will prove to be helpful for children in whatever circumstance they may be.

Furthermore, if you carve this symbol:

on a stone of bezoar in its hour and in the first phase of ♄, it will be particularly useful in repelling scorpions.

Additionally, if the picture of a flea surrounded by these letters:

-is drawn on a stone that has the color of an ambergris, being an extremely strong repellent of fleas, in the hour and ascendant of the ♃, no flies will appear at all in the location of the stone. This effect will also be achieved in the hour of drawing and its ascendant.

Also, to repel snakes, carve the picture of a snake with this symbol:

-on its head on a stone of lapis azure or green dahnaj in its hour and ascendant. This drawing is specialized to drive away snakes and strengthen the picture and the relationship.

Besides, carve this figure:

-on an emerald stone and stamp it in kundur in its hour and ascendant. Swallow whatever is chewed from it and this will promote memorization and intelligence and diminish forgetfulness.

SATURN

Carve on a stone of bezoar in its hour and ascendant, and when it is 21° from Ω , the picture of a man with a wide forehead, long face, frowning, riding on a plow, two oxen in front, wearing a necklace around his neck with the head of a man and the head of a fox. The man is yearning for mercy. This picture is very effective in maintaining and promoting farms, cows, green crops and nursery plants. It is also effective in wells, rivers, stabilizing buildings, resisting aggressors, forgoing rancor, driving worries away and saves whoever wears it from fearing other people.

To plant animosity and discord between lovers, carve this drawing:

><+<><<

-on a stone of diamond and stamp it in sediment in the hour and ascendant of ♄. It is to be placed in a location frequented by them and it should be secured and not be touched or approached by its maker except at the time of stamping.

Also, if you carve the picture of a standing man on a chair that looks like a mimbar with a semi-twisted turban on his head and a sickle in his hand and if you carve this picture on a stone of turquoise in its hour and ascendant, the holder of the stone will live long and have a healthy life, Allah willing.

Carve a picture of a wolf in an amber stone in its hour and when ♄ is the ascendant at 23° from ♄. ♄ is to be at 2° from ♄ and ♄ at 29° from ♄. Draw these symbols:

<?▽△ε++>εεεX8

-around it and mount it on a silver ring. Flies will fly away from the location of the person wearing it and they will not approach him or the people around him. They will never appear in his location or enter his area at all.

To drive away locusts, carve on a jet stone the picture of a locust in its hour and ascendant while it is at 2° from ♄, ♄ is 5° from ♄, and the ♄ is 3° from ♄. The talisman is effective at these degrees. Draw these symbols:

-around the locust. Place the skin of a rabbit under the talisman and no locust will enter where the talisman or its holder is located.

You may also carve in any of its stones the picture of a rabbit in the ascendant of Ω and while ψ is 13° from II and the $\odot$ 5° from $\odot$. Draw around it these symbols:

-then mount the stone on a ring and wear it. The woman with whom you have a sexual relationship will not get pregnant from you.

JUPITER

Carve the picture of a man sitting on a chair with four legs and was a crown on his head. Each one of the chair's legs is lying on the neck of a standing man. All of these men have wings. The man on the chair is raising his hand praying to Allah. Carve this picture on a white onyx stone in its hour, when it is ascendant and in its honor. The person who wears this ring will become increasingly rich and prestigious. He will accumulate wealth, bring family members together, have many children and take good care of them, make the best possible decisions and every legal task he initiates will be well done and will have a good conclusions. It also wards off the plots of others, brings success in communication and saves the person wearing it from assassination.

On a stone of hyacinth draw the picture of a man with the face of a lion and the legs of a bird. A dragon with a head is under his feet. He holds in his right hand a spear stabbing the head of the dragon. This is to be done in its hour and in the first phase of the house of its honor. All the enemies of the person wearing this stone will be removed and fear and awe will be implanted in their hearts.

Also, carve the picture of a handsome man with a ringlet riding on an eagle on a stone of crystal. This is to be done in the hour of ♀ and in its honor. This stone makes you favored by judges and people specialized in religious laws.

Additionally, carve the picture of an eagle on the stone known to make giving birth easy in its hour and when the ascendant is the first phase of Sagittarius. If the person wearing this picture goes to where the birds are located for the purpose of catching them, they will fly down and surround him and will not leave him. He will also be accepted and loved by people. This stone is somewhat red, and there is a stone inside it which is loose and moves when it is moved. It secretes white liquid if it is rubbed. The characteristic of this stone is that if a woman wears it, she will never get pregnant.

Hermes mentions that this stone is one of the blessed stones. If you draw the picture of a fox on the day of ♀ and in its hour while the ☽ is looking at it and ♀ is in ♋, mankind and jinn will be afraid of you, as long as you hold onto it.

Moreover, if the picture of a nightingale is carved on this stone in its hour and at the home of its honor, and if this stone is washed and you drink from this water, you will be able to see the spirits and use them in any way you like. This information was also presented by Hermes.

MARS

On a magnet carve the picture of a man riding on a lion and raising a sword in his right hand and the head of a man in his left hand. This is to be done in its hour and in the ascendant of its home and while it is in the second phase of Υ . Its benevolent effects are miraculous, but its cruel effects are moreso.

Carve the picture of a lion with a man standing between his hands on one of the stones of σ . The man is wearing a shield and girded with a sword, holding a sword in his right hand and the head of a man in his left hand. This is to be done in its hour and house. Whoever wears this picture will dominate and be feared by anyone who sees him or become associated with him. I saw this picture carved on a garnet stone by one of those who deals in this art.

Additionally, if a picture of a lion with this symbol:

-between his hands is carved on a stone of garnet its ascendant and hour, it will stop the bleeding from any organ of the person holding this stone. Be aware of that.

Other planet talismans with miraculous effects of varying limitations can be made. One of these is when a talisman is made in the hour of the $\odot$ and in the first phase of δ . This talisman removes the evil inclinations, and calms down the pain of liver, stomach and other diseases that are difficult to treat.

Also, when a talisman is made in the hour of the $\odot$ and in the first phase of $\odot$, it will promote the growth of seed plants and various types of trees.

Furthermore, if a talisman is made in the hour of ψ and in the third phase of ψ , it will help a person to recover from incontinence of urine and stop women's bleeding.

As for ♂, when a talisman is made in its hour and in the third phase of ♀, it will instill courage in a coward, breaks off the anger of a ruler, alleviates the damage caused by thieves, predatory animals, wolves and every other harmful creature.

Moreover, a talisman made in the hour of ♀ and when it is in the first phase of ♀ helps women recover from uterus ailments, soothes the evil spirit suffering from melancholy, brings joy to the heart and promotes sexuality. A talisman made in the first phase of ♀ brings love and promotes distinguished deeds.

Make a talisman in the hour of ♀ when it is in the first phase of ♀ to elevate intelligence, improve thinking, motivate seeking knowledge, promote prestige among people and so forth.

❧Chapter Eleven❧

HAD WE INCLUDED ALL OF WHAT THE ANCIENT philosophers, who specialized in this art, wrote on this subject, the book would have been very long. The purpose is to limit the text to what is essential for the seeker of knowledge and researcher in this field. This is to let you think for yourself and when the vision of this art becomes clear to you, do not disclose it to others. You should also know that only he who does not make a living out of this art, enjoys dealing with this art. Accordingly, such a person only deals with and reflects on this art to become distinguished. Many people do not appreciate the time it takes the astrologer to study and research this science. Since we know that this time is beyond the limits of the celestial sphere itself, how can we expect it to be within the capabilities of the astrologer? If he reaches the right conclusion, he will not be commended, but, if he fails, he will be insulted. Therefore, you should not reveal this secret to the public. The wise achieved these spiritual arts only through hard work, long tiring effort and sharp intellect. It is through sharp intellect that the wise may come across the right conclusion among the various and contradicting views and through the strong potential to correct it. This is an efficient process of analysis of which the right view is a type of reflection. In conclusion, this is the speaking of the clear mind which gives the imagination skill, clarity of approach and swift acceptance of what it conceives and promotes quick interaction with the sought result. Thus, the principle is that the strong acting intellect will have a weak acted upon result. For example, the strong interacts with difficulty and the weak interacts easily.

By the same token, intelligence is the result of the efficiency of the intellect's expeditious perception of things without time or in a non-waiting time; it is the ability of the mind to make swift and thorough examination as well as its efficient perceptibility to accept the sought object without time. This is derived from the intelligence of fire which acts quickly and the intelligence of the ☉ which penetrates air swiftly and spreads through it due to its clarity and fineness. This is similar to the intelligent who becomes intelligent due to the clarity and fineness of his mind. Consequently, he can imagine the sought objective and sense it and realize it quickly by comprehending, through revelation, the sought objective that the wise can sense and realize. Be aware of that.

Going back to our subject, I would like to add that each constellation has three phases. Each phase has images, statues, and similarities. Additionally, they are divided among planets according to their height in their orbits. Thus, if the location happens to be at the lowest planet, it reverts to the higher and more distinguished planet. Moreover, they have characteristics and configurations comparable to the characteristics and configurations of their masters. As a result, constellations concur with their masters on the same actions as exhibited by their essence whether this concurrence is on agreement or disagreement.

According to the leader of this science, the image of a large and distinguished black mad man with red eyes and an ax in his hand, a white rope wrapped around his waist, emerges in the first phase of Υ . This is the phase of σ ; it is a phase of cruelty, aggression, haughtiness and insolence. This phase is complete in its essence, character and instinct. The image of a woman wearing a red rope and a dress with one leg, probing diligently for dresses, jewelry and children appears in the third phase of Υ . It is the phase of φ which denotes femininity, delicateness, cleanliness, kindness, entertainment and beauty. Furthermore, the image of an angry reddish man with red hair, unyielding look, holding a sword and a wooden bracelet in his hand, wearing red clothes, skillful in iron fabrication and wants to do good but cannot, is the phase for φ .

Υ The image of a woman with curly hair and wearing fiery clothes with a son whose clothes look like smothering embers appears in the first phase of Υ . This is the phase of $\forall$. It is complete by nature and it is a phase of planting and cultivation, building and development, ethics and wisdom, as well as dividing land and engineering.

In the second phase of Υ , we find the image of a man whose body and face look like those of a camel, his nails similar to the hoof of a cow, wearing an old garment, interested in developing land and buildings, and using cows for planting and cultivation. This is the phase of the $\mathfrak{D}$; it is a phase of ability, honor, vice-regency, destruction and oppression of constituency.

The image of a red man with extremely white teeth appearing between his lips, with the body of an elephant and with long legs emerges in the third phase of Υ . Also, the image of a horse, a dog and a resting calf appears in the same phase. This is the phase of $\mathfrak{H}$ and a phase of humiliation, servitude, torture, cruelty and disgrace.

II The image of a beautiful woman, experienced in dressmaking, with two calf and two horses emerges in the first phase of II. This phase is also for $\mathfrak{Z}$ and it is complete in nature. It indicates recording and accountability, giving and taking, knowledge itself and seeking knowledge.

Then there is the image of a man with the face of a griffin tied with a turban, wearing a shield made of lead and armed with a helmet of iron on his head. On the top of the helmet is a crown made of brocade. He is holding a bow and an arrow in his hand. This image appears in the second phase of II . This is the phase of O and it indicates trudging, motivation, speed, violence and unprofitable haste.

The image of a man wearing a shield and carrying a bow and an arrow in its case emerges in its third phase. This is the phase of the O , and it indicates overlooking and missing what should be noticed, fun and entertainment and unemployment.

69 Consider the image of a man with curved face and fingers that looks like a horse. He has white feet and tree leaves are attached to his body. This image appears in the first phase of 69. It is the phase of V , and it indicates wittiness, mindfulness, friendliness, delicacy and cleanliness.

There is also the image of a beautiful woman longing for pleasure and singing, wearing a wreath made of green basil on her head and holding a rod of nenuphar³⁶ in her hand is longing for pleasure and singing. This image appears in its second phase. This is the phase of V , and it denotes entertainment and enjoyment of music as well as grace, honor and wealth.

The image of a man holding a snake in his hand, having a foot similar to the foot of a turtle, and possessing golden jewelry appears in the third phase of 69. This phase is for the V ; it is a phase of tricks and driving away by force, achieving objectives by fighting, struggle and repulsion.

³⁶ A water-lily.-OED

 The image of a man wearing dirty clothes along with the image of a cavalryman who looks like a wolf and a dog is looking to the north, appear in the first phase of δ. This image is for 5, and it is complete in form and nature. This is a phase of strength, rescue, stamina, action, attack and triumph.

𐎶 The image of a beheaded man holding a peacock appears in the first phase of 𐎶, and this is the phase of 𐎶. It is the phase of hard and tiring work, poverty, need, few means of subsistence or lack of it.

The image of a tenacious man who looks like a powerful king emerges in its second phase, and this is the phase of 𐎶. It portrays beauty, nobility, goodness, complete form, complete religion and manhood.

The figure of a beheaded man with an old woman in front of him appears in its third phase, which is the phase of the 𐎶. This phase denotes ugliness, bad reputation and a scandal.

𐎶 The picture of a man with two bodies pointing with his fingers appears in the first phase of 𐎶, and this is the phase of 𐎶. It demonstrates little attacking with violence, weakness, extensive traveling, suffering, tiring, looking for wealth and earning a living.

The image of an upside down man holding food in his hand appears in its second phase, and this is also the phase of 𐎶. It indicates dignity, inspiration and the capability of dealing with matters of great importance.

The image of an evil man with a woman in front of him who has a donkey above her and a bird in her hand appears in the its third phase. This phase is for ♂. It indicates marital sexual relations, hugging, lust, intimacy, sensuous desire and a tendency to have leisure and relaxation time.

As a researcher, you ought to know that these images are not known except to an experienced artist who has the vision of extracting vague matters. In other words, a planet breaks a planet, a boundary breaks a phase and characteristics intermingle such as water putting out fire, fire removing the coldness from water, water moisturizing dry earth and earth drying the moisture of water. When many characteristics exist and interact, the stronger will prevail over the bigger and when they are in equilibrium and balanced, their actions are equal and even. You may also know that the ☉ becomes stronger by the characteristics of ♂, and ♂ gets stronger by the characteristics of the ☉. Be aware that excessive characteristics are damaging and harmful to their effects and actions. Sickness occur after perfect health and reaping occurs after crops become ripe. A large essence opposes the weak by its weight and strength and the small affects the large by it's delicacy and kindness. For instance, a snake kills large animals and in the same manner small and tiny ants in large numbers can kill strong snakes. You ought to reflect on these signs.

Regarding these phases, you need to know what actions resemble a planet and what actions resemble the phase of a constellation. Accordingly, draw the above-mentioned images of bodies that resemble the particular planet when it is in that phase and it will subsequently produce the aforementioned effects and actions and expose them to the world of being and corruption. If it is possible to have the ☉ rise in the hour of that planet or intermingle with it, its effect will be greater. As we mentioned above, avoid having the ☉ in the hour of or intermingle with a coercive planet in order to maintain that effect.

❧Chapter Twelve❧

THE BASIC WORKS OF TALISMANS by Indian philosophers relied on durayjanat.³⁷ Every ascendant is divided into three equal parts, and each part is equal to 10° and every one of those is called a durayjan. A durayjan is related to one of the seven planets. Accordingly, we say that a particular planet is the master of the durayjan, which means to relate the first section of the ascendant constellation to the master of the ascendant and the second part to the master of al-Khamis, the third section to the master of al-Tasi, the ascendant, al-Khamis and al-Tasi. These three sections are always in groups of threes.

War talismans are made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♂. The possessor of this talisman will be triumphant, sheep milk will be clotted and its butter will be spoiled.

Talismans for rulers and sultans are made in the second durayjan of ♀ for the ☉. These talismans protect against their harm.

Talismans for dealing with judges and jurisprudence, reconciling differences between them, and uniting them are made in the third durayjan of ♀ for ♃.

Talismans for reconciling differences between men and women are made in the first durayjan of ♀.

Talismans for animosity, impotence and for inflicting conflict, especially between women are made in the second durayjan for ♀.

Talismans to induce women lose their sexual interest in men and the same for men in women, or to make them ill and to separate them, are made in the third durayjan.

Talismans tailored to promote someone losing his mind and becoming deranged are made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♀.

In the second durayjan, a talisman can be made for ♀ to return the absentee and runaway.

A talisman can be made in the third durayjan for ♀ to spread negative commendations and disclose private secrets of others.

A talisman can be made in the first durayjan of ♂ for the ♂ to bring rain, and to bring travelers by sea and land home safely.

In its second durayjan, a talisman is made for ♂ to prevent rain, snow and clouds that come from the sea and to protect against all harmful sea animals.

In its third durayjan, a talisman is made for ♀ to ensure the safety of travelers by sea.

In the first durayjan of ♂, a talisman is made for the ♂ to have a ruler to raise one's rank, as well as to bring predatory animals to any intended location.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to keep wild and predatory animals away from cattle and herds.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♂ to make wild and predatory animals attack any intended town.

In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for ♀ for the welfare of writers and to promote what they have on hand.

In the second durayjan, a talisman is made for ♀ to harm writers.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to reconcile differences between spouses and promote love between them.

In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for ♀ to promote excitement, love and attraction.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to create attraction as well.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to return a runaway from wherever he may be.

In the first durayjan of ♂, a talisman is made for ♂ to cause scorpions, insects, birds and the like to attack.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♂ to prevent rain, scorpions and other insects, birds and the like.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for the ♂ to prevent rain and the harmful effects of the sea.

A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♀ to bring about love and harmony.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♂ create excitement and bring shame and disgrace.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for the ♂ to gain the sympathy of kings against judges, jurisprudence and prominent people.

A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ♂ for ♂ for hunting and for providing a superior quality of goat milk.

A talisman is made in its second durayjan for ♀ to obtain a good quality of all milk, and for accumulating and multiplying bees and birds.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to destroy what has been mended by the durayjan planet.

A talisman in the first durayjan of ♀ is made for ♀ to gain the love of sheikhs, slaves and agents. Also, a talisman can be made in the same durayjan to bring out and manage treasures.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to promote love between children and youngsters.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to promote love and attraction to women especially to each other.

A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ☿ for ♀ to ensure safety in traveling by sea as well as for fishing in the sea.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for the ☽ to produce healthy crops, induce rain and attract whales.

A talisman is made in third durayjan for ♂ to promote favorable conditions for traveling by land. Other talismans are made to attract hunting animals.

These are the durayjanat which are the backbone of their works. They claim that these actions will not be complete except by truthful thinking and sound intention. Moreover, their leader suggests that attracting the force of planets can only be achieved by truthful thinking, since the high forces are but images of the low forces. The relationship of the low forces to them are like a substance, which is connected to them and thus they attract each other because their body essence is the same and their spiritual essence is also the same. Some of their Brahmans believe that forces are a kind creation of Allah. They are created to become a lesson and a source of mercy for them.

In this regard, they developed a highly sophisticated encyclopedia which represented the peak of their thinking and the ultimate truth it reflected. In order to live up to the status of great law makers, become leaders and saints, and achieve honor, they refined and cleansed themselves from all sins. They started this purification in the first hour of Sunday which is the hour of the ☉ and its day, and then they fast for forty days during which they abstained from eating meat because they do not see any wrong-doing committed by animals. They only ate what grows on land such as plants, vegetation and grains. Additionally, they washed themselves everyday in the hours of the ☉ and the ☽. Some of them washed seven times a day in the hour of planets. They observed the hours and washed at the beginning of each hour when the planets are in su'ud state. Moreover, their cleansing in the hours of the ☉ and the ☾ will add to their purification in the hours of the planets and that will, in turn, enhance their sanctification. At the same time, they start to reduce the amount of food they eat until the last day, it becomes one fourth of one tenth of the amount they ate on the first day. In the meantime and during their leisure times, they take the medicines they made for themselves as a substitute for food and water. As they do that, they develop talents, good memory and comprehension, astuteness and sharp intellect. Moreover, they will be attached less to earthly matters and become more inclined to transcend to the world of enlightenment thereby shying away from lust and sinful pleasures. At this point, they will be able to attract heavenly powers, make miracles and achieve their wishes. Additionally, they will recognize the predestined roles and the reality of their being in these roles, what has been pre-ordained for them and what is left for them to affect. This is their origin of enlightenment, and their guidance to this enlightenment is derived from their first holy text, Buddha's Book, which is considered the essence of their secrets and which no one is allowed to review. At the beginning of Buddha's Book, you see the images of the orbits of the celestial sphere, which consist of the enlightened souls. These souls are constantly engaged in worshipping the Ultimate Light. They are represented by drawings from the four individual elements which will be complete as long as the orbits of the celestial sphere are connected to knowledge. For this reason, Buddha's Book is viewed as the messenger that provides the light beams which connect the low forces to the Ultimate Light. At this juncture, they become cognizant of the nature of the mind, select the image that they like best, make all the laws and subsequently, the spirits of planets will obey them. With some of their secrets in this book, they define the realities of things. Furthermore, they identify the Creator as the cause of all beings and they believe that the things they do will provide them with a means to reach Him and unite with His Light. We have mentioned this as a reference to their basic beliefs and actions and what their law-makers adhere to. This is the text of what this man says:

"If we cover all the strange things they have, this book will be too long. One of these is 'the head' which a generation of their clergy believe in. They set it next to the dragon's head. Then they pick a hairy, bluish, black-eyed man with connected eyebrows. They lure him with things he likes until they get him into the house of temples, and then he is undressed and placed in a basin full of sesame oil that covers him up to his neck. They close the basin leaving his head sticking out of the lid of the basin. They nail the cover and seal it with lead leaving the head out while the rest of the body is submerged in the sesame oil. They feed him with a certain amount of dry figs soaked in sesame oil and burn incense next to his nose and face. They do this for forty days without giving him any water. This process will render his bones flexible, his joints loose and his veins will flow abundantly; he becomes as flexible as a candle. At the conclusion of the forty days, they get together and discuss things among themselves. Then they burn incense, grab his head and pull it from the first vertebra. Pulling the head out of the body, his veins will be stretched until they all separate from the first vertebra, thereby leaving the body in the oil. Subsequently, they place it on an arch on a layer of screened ashes of olive and surround him with fluffy cotton. They perfume it with a special incense of theirs, and consequently, it tells them about fluctuation of prices, the overthrow of governments and what takes place in the world. His eyes will remain open and it will remind them if they miss any of their worshipping sacraments to the planets, prevents them from doing certain things and tells them what will happen to everyone personally. If they ask it about knowledge and art, it will be able to answer their questions. Afterwards, they bring out the rest of the body from the basin, extract the liver and slice it, and they will see the signs which they are looking for. The bones of his shoulders and his joints will tell them about what they want, as well. Also, they do not cut their hair, eat or drink except in his name. They became public at the time of al-Muqtadir who ordered their temple to be opened and evacuated. The head was found and buried."

One of their factions assigned colors to orbits of planets by using the colors of substances that accept actions. They say that the color of the orbit of ♄ is dusty red similar to the color of ruby; the color of the orbit of ♀ is dusty white; the color of the orbit of ☿ is yellowish green similar to the color of red gold; the color of the orbit of the ☊ is dusty gold; the color of the orbit of ♁ is reddish yellow; the color of the orbit of ☿ is a mixture of all colors; and the color of the orbit of the ♄ is spotted white.

Furthermore, they assigned phases to planets which indicate the sought actions. They also assigned talismans to these phases by which they can influence actions. Subsequently, they apportioned for every planet three phases with two talismans assigned for every phase. Additionally, they allocated certain colors for the phases. They believe that the red phase is good for serious and incontestable matters and every talisman made in this phase is good for helping someone asking for help. The black phase is for diseases, torture, killing and similar tragedies. The white phase indicate brightness, happiness and light, and talismans made in this phase are good for friendliness, love and so forth. The yellow phase is for controlling speechless animals, as well as for evil actions.

They claim that the first phase of ♄ is black, the second is white and the third phase has the color of smoke and lead. The first phase of ♀ is yellow, the second is white, and the third has the color of smoke and lead. The first phase of ☿ is red, the second is yellow and the third is rosy. The first phase of the ☉ is yellow, the second is pink and the third is golden. The first phase of ♀ is red, the second is gray and the third is rosy. The first phase of the ☽ is white, the second is red and the third is dusty.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♄ to black out the sight of the intended person so that he will not see anything.

The second talisman is made in the first phase of ♄ to black out the sight of the people so that they will not see you when you walk among them; the only thing they will be able to see is pitch darkness. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♄ to reconcile the differences between two persons and bring harmony and friendship back to them, and it is also made in this phase to introduce a person to a future friend whom he has not yet met. The second talisman is made in the second phase of ♄ to bring back the intended person from a distant location. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♄ to drive away harmful animals. The second talisman is made in the third phase of ♄ to repel flies and fleas from any house or town, so that none of these insects will ever appear in any of these locations.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ to gather bees from any place you want. The second is made in this phase by drawing a picture of a mosquito on lead to repel bees in particular. The first talisman in the second phase of ♀ is made for fishing in seas and rivers, and the second talisman is made in this phase to make fishing impossible in seas and rivers. The first talisman in the third phase of ♀ is made to expel a person from his home and drive him away from his children, and the second talisman in this phase is made to repel mice from where the person may be staying.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♂ to triumph in wars and fencing, and the second talisman in this phase is made to kill any enemy of yours as quickly as possible. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♂ to bring sickness to any of your enemies, and the second is made to bring fever and derangement to whomever you like. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♂ to render men impotent whereby they will not be able to have any intimate relations with women as well as to inhibit the relationship of women with men. The second talisman is made in this phase to create a schism between two lovers so that they will separate forever.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of the ☉ to gain the favorable treatment and sympathy of emirs and rulers, and to have close relations with them. The second talisman in this phase is made to repel the assault of kings, despots and rulers, and to tie their tongues up. The first talisman is made in the second phase of the ☉ to ward off severe and harmful cold from any designated location. The second talisman is made to drive away birds from any location you like. The first talisman of the third phase of the ☉ is made to bleed a woman and a man until the one you choose is doomed in a short period of time. The second talisman in this phase is made to make a quern³⁸ fail to grind.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ for bringing any desired woman to you, and the second is made for marrying any desired daughter of prominent people. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♀ to gain the favorable treatment of despots and rulers and acquire their sympathy so that they will not tolerate estrangement from you. The second talisman is made in this phase to tie up the tongues of whomsoever you choose from kings and rulers so that they will not be able to talk badly about any person who they intend to harm as long as the talisman is secured. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♀ in order for a woman to become subordinate to a man, and the second talisman is made in this phase in order to become subordinate to a woman.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♃ for learning wisdom and philosophy and every fine art such as poetry and singing. The second talisman is made in this phase to learn the science of stars in particular. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♃ to bring children to any selected location. The second talisman of the second phase is made for a man to regain the affection and friendliness of children who dislike him. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♃ so that the targeted male will never be able to grow a beard, and the second talisman of this phase is made to divert rivers to any place you like.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of the ♄ for bringing over any desired emirs and kings. The second talisman is made in this phase to make a king love whomever you want so much that he can not tolerate being away from him. The first talisman is made in the second phase of the ♄ to render the man you designate impotent so that he will not be able to have an intimate relationship with a woman. The second talisman is made in this phase to unlock the impotence of a man towards women. The first talisman is made in the third phase of the ♄ to disperse and expel people from their homeland. The second talisman is made in the third phase of the ♄ so that no harmful lion will stay in any place you do not want the lion to be in. These are the planets' talismans as they made them.

I have come across a treatise, which deals with making talismans, written by Abu Bakr Ibn Muhammad Ibn Zakariyya Al-Razi, a well-known and distinguished Arab philosopher. I included this valuable treatise in my book which I entitled The History of Arab Philosophers. I referred to some of his miraculous themes he presented in this treatise. He included in this treatise some relationships which he claims he tested. Some of what he says in this regard is that talismans for sympathy, love and harmony can be made either when the ☽ is in ♊ and connected to ♀ in the ♋ constellation, or when the ☽ is in the ♋ constellation connected to ♀ in the ♊ constellation, or, finally when the ☽ is in ♎ and connected to ♀ in the ♊ constellation. These talismans will achieve wonderful results. However, talismans for the worst possible malevolence can be made when the ☽ is either in ♎ or ♏ and connected to or in conjunction with ♂ in a rising or setting constellation. Talismans for bloodshed can be made when the ☽ is in the aerial constellation. Talismans made in this situation produce stronger effects. Moreover, talismans for animosity can be made when the ☽ is either in the ♎ or ♎ constellation, and also when it is in ♎'s quarter phase or in conjunction with it. For rendering a person speechless, talismans can be made when the ☽ is under the beams of the ☉. These talismans ought to be made at night. Moreover, talismans for prominent personalities, kings and heads of state can be made when the ☽ is connected to the ☉ while it is elevated in the ☉'s domain. They can also be made when the ☽ is in the middle of the sky connected to ♏. You will be able to achieve your wishes by relying on these relationships when making the above talismans. As for talismans tailored for judges and jurisprudence, they can be made when the ☽ is connected to ♏ in the ♏ or ♏ constellations while ♏ is in the middle of the sky. Additionally, talismans for the favors of writers, ministers and laborers are made when the ☽ is full and connected to ♀ while the latter is either in the ♏ or ♏ constellations.

You may know that the lunar quarter can lead to more exclusive results for every planet in producing su'ud effects provided that the planet is in one of the poles, the strongest of which is Al-Ashir. It is not recommended for nuhus effects. If you intend to ruin something by bringing nuhus to it, ♎ and ♂ will certainly do that. By virtue of their relationship, they are the most effective instruments for this sort of action.

You may also know that the ☽'s connection to planets, when it is in view of the ☉, is similar to its connection to them when it is behind the ☉. The ☽'s connection to the ☉ in its third or sixth phase is used for achieving distinguished aims, such as becoming a king or a head of state or achieving prevalence and prominence. It will be better and more effective when it is in Al-Ashir than when it is in Al-Rabi or Al-Sabi. No good can be attained when it is waning or burning. Its connection to ♀ in its Al-Thalith, Al-Sadis or Al-Rabi phase, as well as when it is facing ♀, is good, but not so good as its connection to ♀, since ♀ is more effective in this respect. These relationships are naturally more instrumental in fostering the love of women, achieving sympathy and promoting permanent affection. This is especially true if the ☽ in its Al-Thalith phase is in an earth or water constellation, in which case you may do whatever you want in an earth or water ascendant. But if Al-Thalith phase was in a fire or air constellation, you may do whatever you want in a fire or air ascendant.

Al-Razi is a good reference for knowledge and philosophy due to his elaborate research in ancient arts. However, the absolute authority in this art is the late Abu Musa Ibn Hayyan Al-Sufi, may Allah bless him and benefit us from his knowledge. He is the author of The Book of Research on Making Talismans and The Major Book of Talismans, which consists of fifty treatises. He also wrote The Key Book on the Images of Degrees and Their Effects on Principles and The Comprehensive Book on the Astrolabe in Theory and Practice. Al-Sufi's book on the astrolabe covers more than a thousand chapters. Al-Sufi is a pioneer in his miraculous works which he presents in this book. His Major Book on Talismans in which he covers a great deal of knowledge, has been used and referred to by people looking for information about talismans, images, characteristics, the effects of planets and their natural functions and influences. Furthermore, Al-Sufi revived the art of equilibrium after it had fallen into oblivion.

Inasmuch as I became a student of this scholar and inasmuch as I learned from him, I pray to Allah to bestow rest and mercy on his soul.

I have read two books written by Al-Muqaddim, Plato. The first is titled The Book of Major Laws, and the second is The Book of Minor Laws. He presents in the first book some of the ugly functions of images such as walking on water, the appearance of snakes in invented images that do not exist in the real world, causing rain to fall in a non-rainy season and preventing it from falling in a rainy season, emergence of flames and luminous meteors, thunder and lightning in the sky, occurrence of out-of-season thunderbolts, setting ablaze the ships of the enemy and burning whomever you wish from a far distance, walking in air, planets rising in the wrong time and observing them when they are falling from their position in the sky down to the center of Earth, talking to the deceased, breaking up of the ☉ and the ☾ into several pieces, transforming sticks and ropes into snakes that devour anyone thrown to them and covering long distances in no time. All of the above actions are the functions of images and utilizing their spiritual forces and transfusing them in their static primordial matters. Subsequently, these primordial matters become live and effective spirits that produce unprecedented miraculous effects and results. His philosophy books are replete with images which he urges everyone to know and pursue. He cites Pythagoras in proving that these images are similar to these, there are eternal spiritual essences which do exist, but they are beyond the mind's perception. Plato's book on minor laws does not match his book on major laws except one chapter in which he talks about the function of rational as well as irrational beings. He does deal with this topic in his major book on laws. Gabir wrote a book called The Compilation, in which he discusses the function of the rational being. However, he discusses these functions on the natural level whereby he seeks to compare them with the functions of nature.

As for Plato, he refers to these functions by the planet functions, images and spirits whose essences are natural matters. Whoever likes to reflect on what I have mentioned, he may do so. We will include in this book if we get to the appropriate point, what we can on this topic. We hereby conclude this treatise.

➤ Introduction ➤

This is not as much an introduction to the Picatrix as it is a recognition of the transmission of its knowledge to English speakers of the West. The Ghayat Al-Hakim has been well known in the history of western esotericism, yet it had evaded being translated into English for many centuries. The four books of the Picatrix, of which volume two embodies books III and IV, was a large compilation of magical, cultural and hermetic knowledge boasting of over 200 sources. A variety of practices are evident in the author's descriptions of various cultures such as the Sabians, Kurds and Nabataeans. Many of these references are quoted from older sources, some recognized by scholars, others obscure and unconfirmed as yet. Thus one can read the words of Ibn Wahshija as he describes the regional practices derived from the Nabataean Agriculture as well as the esoteric doctrines of the Ikhwan al-Safa among others.

There is a decidedly practical aspect to the anonymous author's presentation of the material. Whereas admonitions to the reader warn against the practice of magic as unorthodox we yet find the most detailed descriptions of magical rites and alchemical operations. One of the significant aspects of the text can be seen in that it employs the doctrine of correspondences, which were to become the trademark of a steady stream of esoteric works by the likes of Agrippa, Ficino, Mirandola and Bruno.

Bibliography 293

The correspondences are attributed to the planetary bodies, plants, scents, stones, metals, animals and symbols. Magical inks and their ingredients as well as special incenses for the planetary spirits are described. Animal sacrifices along with astrological times for their performance are also included here. These materials were thought to have a relationship with the divine world, each being a link in the chain of manifestation. When the Picatrix speaks of spirits [pneumata], it is referring to a stellar substance, which acts as a medium through which the soul may commune with the body. Thus in order to bring mercurial forces to bear in the practitioners sphere, one would invoke the spirit of mercury thereby aligning that influence between the microcosm and the macrocosm. The process is the same with the construction of talismans whereby the corresponding materials are imbued with a particular stellar force when the planetary body is appropriately aspected. Several Magical Images are described in detail each with its designated planet. These correspondences play a significant role and are a defining part of the western esoteric tradition as it has come down to us through the centuries.

Book III

In this book, I describe the planets' fortunes from the three originators, as no one in the world of being and corruption would like to work with them. They also can't stop exploring these fortunes and express their huge excitement with these searches. Let us not also forget that the nature of some of these fortunes do not match with the others which makes our seeking for the wanted magical spells with an ethnic heat or natural heat, with all it is kinds, the smoked, swallowed or the imbibed, a different kind of exploring. All these relevant issues and others will be mentioned in this book.

Chapter One

WE HAVE TALKED to you reader, before in the earlier books, and mentioned the influences of talismans, images and their effects, beside the origins and their linking pairs and we successfully thrilled you with it. We also tried as much as possible to mention that everything is formed inside the earth and in the air above it or even a little higher than that, in the celestial firmament. These talismans and images have similar shapes and matching equivalent effects, just as the sun every time it reaches to a certain points in the orbit, it causes a certain affect and with its continuous rotating, it changes the places of the stable and unstable planets.

So whenever we need to move something or make something come true, we determine first the time and the place in the orbit of which we naturally want to know the disposition of something, it depends on the earthy or airy factors and as a result of that, a great spiritual movement occurs. You see, the way the spells work, both of these ways are necessary, the earthy and the heavenly and that is what is presented in this book from the verity of magic all the way to the knowledge of spells.

Everyone who tries to use the magical spells must know that the planets have their own special powers; powers that do not match with any other planets.

☞ Picatrix ☞

SATURN for example is the planet whose source holds great strength and has the knowledge of mysterious orbit and the power to obtain the reason behind things and the ability to find their intentions, the spell of wonders and knowledge of secret and mysterious issues.

Thus are all the qualities related to the planets and the zodiacal signs and there is always a great need of them.

≡Chapter Three≡

EACH PLANET has its own supportive materials that help in achieving different functions:

Saturn needs burned wool, Jupiter's material is made of verdigris, Mars' made of ginger, the Sun's made of yellow golden metals, Venus' made of saffron, Mercury's material is made with a mixture of glue, golden metals and verdigris, as for the Moon its material is made of tin.

Aristotle has drawn the images of the planets in his book with the title The Book of Lamps and Banners he wrote jokes in the book for Alexander the Great about this knowledge, thus he drew SATURN in the shape of black person wrapped in green robe, bald headed and holding an apiary.

Also he drew JUPITER in the image of a human, dressed and sitting on a chair, for MARS the shape of a man riding a lion and holding a long spear, for the SUN he drew the shape of a good looking beardless human with a crown on his head, holding a javelin and right beside him a picture of a female her head and arms are human and her two hands and arms lifted up but her body is a horses body with four feet.

As for VENUS he drew it in the image of a maid holding a brush in her right hand and an apple in the other hand and she has a long straight hair.

He also drew MERCURY in the image of a naked man riding an eagle as he is writing and he drew the MOON in the image of a knight riding a rabbit.

Here is some more information about the planets that was mentioned in Aristotle's book right after the part related to jewelry and stones:

He starts with talking to Alexander the Great telling him "Oh Great Alexander, when ever you do something for the planets, use materials matching the planet you work for as for the robe make it match the fortune you come out with from the planet then bless and please the god of that fortune as possible and jinx the seventh because the good fortune is for the demander and the seventh for those in demand." So the colors for Saturn are all the blacks and if it was wool it would be better, Jupiter's color is green and if it was silk it would be better, Mars' color is fiery red and if it was thin or embroidered silk it would be better.

The Sun's colors are bright golden yellow and if it is gold or yellow silk it would be better. As for Venus' colors cool rosy red and similar colors are used and if it is silk it would be better, for Mercury's color is the mixture of all colors and if it was see through it would be better, for Moon's colors the shiny white and if it was linen or white silk it would be better.

When it comes to the planets incenses, Saturn rules every stinky incense like lynx, army barracks weight lifters and similar; Jupiter rules every good smelling incense like ambergris and aloes wood; Mars rules all incenses mild, spicy and hot like pepper, any other mild pepper flavored spice and ginger; the Sun rules all good smelling incense like musk and ambergris; Venus rules all mild pleasant smelling incense like roses, violet and green myrtle; as for Mercury every pleasant smelling incense mixed like narcissus, violet, myrtle and mallow and the Moon has every pleasant cold smelling incense like camphor, roses and fresh smelling scents.

As we are done mentioning that, we come back and attach what we mentioned earlier about the supportive materials of the planets and how each planet had different material that helped in its functioning we now relate that to the zodiacal signs with the help of each sign's analogy which is mentioned in chapter two of this book:

So first we start with ARIES the first part of the material is yellow and the way it is made is by grinding the green gall very fine so as the gum and copperas each gets grinded individually. Combine one portion of each the gall and the gum with half portion of the copperas with one egg white and hazelnut and gets put in a jar and sealed so when ever it is needed give it a little beat and use it. The second part of the material is golden yellow and the way its made with equal portion of talc (which is a kind of metal stone) and limestone and grind them then mix them with honey and water then drain it in a gourd alembic and put in a drop of glue and draw with it, and for the third part of the material is white made of talc and egg white, with TAURUS the first part of the material is smoky dust colored oleander and the way it is made is by gathering all the smoke and hang in a high place and put with it glue and gum in a thickness of one Dirham (it is a silver coin used in different weights through ancient time for measuring which equals six seeds of wheat for each carat) for each ounce with some salt peter then draw with it, the material for the second parts is golden yellow and for that take the gall and shake it till the blackness within comes out then cover it with water then beat that water with red water taken out of gum and add some glue to that then draw with it, as for the third part of the material it is yellow and that you use as we explained earlier.

GEMINI: The first part of the material is golden and we have mentioned how it is done, as for the second part the material is red and that is made of red dripped copperas and gum with adding a little glue, the third part of the material is yellow and that was already mentioned.

CANCER: The first part of the material is white and as already mentioned, the second part of the material is golden yellow and it is already mentioned, as for the third part of the material is black and it is done like the white part of the material but you mix equal amount of the copperas with the gall.

LEO: The first part of the material is dust colored oleander, the second part of the material is golden yellow and the third part is pomegranate red and this is made by washing the pomegranate glue several times to refine it then mix with green gall water and leave it sit for an hour time then add some glue and some gum beat all the mixture together then draw with it.

VIRGO: The first part of the material is golden red and its made by grinding the saffron till it is very fine then mix with green gall water and make sure it is covered all the way to the top with the water and leave it sit for an hours time, add some glue and then draw with it, the second part of the material is dust colored oleander, the third part is yellow inclined toward red made by grinding the golden metal and mixing it with saffron water and little glue then you can write with it.

LIBRA: The first part of the material is dust colored, the second part of the material is black and the third is white.

SCORPIO: The first part of the material is black, the second is yellow and the third is dust colored.

SAGITTARIUS: The first part of the material is red, the second is yellow from yellow golden material and the way it is made is that it gets left on the fire for one night till it is all coagulated the next day then mix egg white and some glue to it then draw with it, the third part of the material is dust colored.

CAPRICORN: The first part of the material is green and is made of verdigris and some glue, the second part of the material is red and it is made of ginger with some glue and gum and the third part is black.

AQUARIUS: The first part of the material is copper red made of snake blood and (it is the blood of the two brothers), with some glue, the second part of the material is black and it is made by taking a good quality Persian ink with equal portion of glue and gall with some burned papers, beat the mixture then sieve it and knead it with egg white. Then let it dry and as it is needed get it solvable then draw with it. The third part of the material is green and it is made of animal bile with some glue and then you may write with it.

PISCES: The first part of the material is gray and it is made of smashed zircon with egg white and a little glue, as for the second part of the material is dust colored and its made of burned thistle plant sides with some glue then draw with it, as for the third part of the material is red.

All these materials are needed in magic and spell work beside all the other knowledge that we have mentioned earlier about the planets. That is why Mercury the knowledgeable says that to acquire a certain planet's character, obtain its power and use its special spirit you have to know the food, drink, fabric, incense, time, profession, materials, demands, what kind of sacrificial animal, engraved stones or charms, enigmas, astronomical proportions and revealing spirits and everything related to these planets to be able to succeed in connecting the sky's power with the earth's power and when they connect you will be able to get what you need otherwise any little negligence in some of the requirements would cause an opposite reaction and the wanted thing would be voided.

There is also an urgent need for the knowledge of the regions, territories and countries because the planets have each their own features that work in certain regions and countries and not in others this is also why when it comes to elements like metals, plants and stones there are certain countries which have a larger number of these elements than others.

For the special materials of some of the planets it was also written, that it could make with no doubt anyone laugh and happy and it could be taken out or go away as the planet turns, the west sea is famous for the silk, hyrax, licorice mastic and bearded slaves, as Yemen is famous with very good smelling glue, mules and bridles and in Yemen there is also a mountain that has a water way on both of its sides where the water flows but right before it reaches the ground it freezes and this is what makes the white Yemeni alum stones.

The Indian aloe wood is found on an island in India at a distance of five days from Kumar its called Kubriya and in Kumar they have the Kumara aloe wood at a distance of three days from Sanf where there is the Sanf aloe wood which its also known to be better than the Kumara aloe wood in quality and weight because it sinks in water and there is no aloe wood anywhere other than these three locations.

People say that in Mecca and Medina no one gets sick with plague or leprosy yet Khyber is known with fever, Bahrain known with spleen diseases, Buhayra is known for freckles and ulcers. As for Syria, it is known for plagues.

Onyx is a stone that is brought from two places: Yemen and China. The best stone between them is the Yemeni stone and to be more sufficient the stones characteristics are derived from its name, the Chinese people hate to even get close to these stones for what it has of pessimism yet they still take the stones out but the people that do that are recluses and they do this for money and living. The kings of Himyar from Yemen never wore any of the stones on their clothes or put it in their vaults and they don't even try to hold any of the stones or seal them and who ever held or sealed it his troubles arose, had scary nightmares all the time and troubled talking between him and people arose. If a stone was hung on a child, that child's saliva increased. Yet it is still used in the engravings and charms for the performance it has on the planet's spirit.

Zinc is formed on the coast of the Indian Sea. It is fine delicate and colorless and there is that which is formed in

☞ Picatrix ☞

China in the coast of the Chinese waters and it is a green harsh stone with holes and there are some that are formed in Andalusia and that stone is shiny white in color covered in lead and heavy in weight and it colors paints red copper to yellow.

The majority of the stone Lapis is in Andalusia, where there is a big dispute over it and paper. As for Iron, it is found in areas toward Ash Buna and the red Ruby stone is found in Fahs, which is one of the regions of Malka. Fahs is actually known more for its Sunbird.

Loadstone is found in some Tadmor areas as for the shading (is also called the bloodstone or the mountain stone it is a stone shaped like a lentil with many different colors could be found in India and some in the Iranian mountains, used in the old time as a drug to cure some eye diseases) that is found in Kortuba mountains in quantity. So is the special stone for gravel that is called the Yahudi can be found on these mountains too.

Golden red stones, which are like no other stones like it, are found in the Anda mountains. The jewels are found mainly in Barcelona and the gold is usually found in Ghirnatah. High quality mercury is found on a mountain called the Baronies mountain also Tin is mixed with beer made out of cows is called Butrina which is one of the most fine quality tins in coloring the copper as we have mentioned earlier.

As for Kohl Metals, they are found in the Kortuba region. Copperas is found in Bilibla along with so many other wonders that each regions and lands are specialized with.

It is also known that Ahwaz's little towns change the health of whoever lives in it to the be like the health of its own people even if they were kings and noble masters. It has been told that there is not one person with healthy red cheeks in that little town because the fever is always there and the people are always sick with it. That is probably because the mountains surrounding Ahwaz are swarming with a huge amount of snakes, scorpions and killer locusts.

There is also a town in a valley of Khrasan that is so deep under, that the eye can't see. They are known for bad manners and that valley is attached to Indian towns. This valley is known especially for its wealth of diamonds. As for Heet lands, they are specialized with oil and, what the Roman calls, stone oil. It also specializes in petroleum salt which is black hard salt. There is also the Andorran salt, which is fine crystal white salt that has a powerful bright white color, which a little village in Syria is specialized with. They call it Andra. The Sathuran tree is only found in Africa and not in the east. In Tripoli, there is a rotten kind that grows in the tree holes of oak tree where the rainwater gathers and thickens. The color of it is light black and it is bitter in taste. It also grows in the holes of ebony trees as for walnut tree grove it is a soil white turned to yellow more like hummus and that is brought also from Burka. So is Anda, which is a brick made of clay mixed with straw could be found in Telmasan area that is mostly known for the honey wine. It is a wine that is very quickly made. They prepare it at noon and by dinnertime it would be ready to drink. That is all besides another number of things that cannot be counted that indicates all this is nothing but astronomical charms with spiritual reasons.

Galen has mentioned in his book that if we look around us we will be able to see that people's faces, their looks, characters, shapes and nature looks so much like the nature of the region they live in. Also, Bukrat has mentioned in so many places in his book under the name of In Valleys and Regions that people's faces and manners match, without a doubt, the regions they grow up in.

That is why there is a great need in knowing the nature of each region and territory to be able to understand the specialty of each individual planet and the planet's specialties together. The planets also individually have their own high power like the Moon has the power of growing plants and curing them. It is a superior power that helps in ripening the fruits and any produce and the power for life in the eggs also its superior power on ebb and flow and all that causes the flow of the power in the world. Yet it does also have a negative affect on some like on figs and whatever the Moon spoils the Sun is known to fix so as the Moon has an effect on the growth of the plants and cures the water animals it also corrupts the land animals at night and that is only if they happen to be exposed to the Moons eclipse on its seventh great luminous when it is in the middle or the tail of the earth. As for Jupiter, it has the power of performing life and providing it with wisdom. It also plans the levels of politics from the religious side like establishing the religious laws. Venus on the other hand has the power of performing in areas of entertainment and the luxurious life. It also outflows the follower with only desire and takes away any diplomacy or organizing ability. Mercury gives the follower the power of speech and intelligence and sharp sight. Saturn has the power of evaluating benefits and affects the cultivation and gives the sight of depth and planning in politics and provides protection from high buildings.

Mars causes bloodshed, conflicts and compulsion. As for the Sun it gives light to all the planets, fixes the world and everything else on earth and overcomes the darkness. It also helps in achieving interests, it spreads understanding and it brings happiness and delight. The Sun is also set right between the other planets in its orbit and the greatest in its functions because of its location it has the power to move the orbit around itself from inside and out from west to east 56 minutes and 8 seconds with the average movement everyday and that is the movement that dries the food and ripens the fruit and grows the grass, so simply the Sun is the light of the world. See how wonderful this archaeological knowledge is and how spiritual these wonders are that are created by Allah the First and the Last.

Chapter Four

I WOULD LIKE YOU TO KNOW reader that I have seen an amazing book written by Ja'far Al-Basri, he called the book The Stored Book. He was hiding this book at one of his friends and never showed it to any one for the fear of some might see the secrets that are written therein but I got the chance to see and read the book and I found that he had divided the verses of the Holy Quran by the seven planets and he claimed that someone else had done that dividing and that once you understand this knowledge you will be able to reach a lot of secrets. He also claimed that this dividing brings out the stored names that Allah placed in the hearts of the men of understanding, the wise men and the adepts. Here is a sample from this dividing which also shows the duration of countries and the astronomical circulation. After establishing the dots on the first verses of the Holy Quran it is used as a key for Venus's circulation number divided on those dots then you take the total number and you can know with that the beginning and end time of the next duration of the government. He claimed too that by knowing this information you can reach everything which appears in each planet's circulations of wonders and impacts and that I call a real wonder.

The symbols had two meanings, if the symbols represented words, then it carried one revealed meaning and another hidden meaning. So the sentence carried a word with two meanings one clear and one hidden and it has been said that is the reason behind why it has some wisdom and benefit to it. Just like the Holy Quran has a revealed meaning and another hidden one. The revealed and hidden meaning does not necessarily mean it had to be revealed or hidden from one side of the same meaning it actually meant that the revealed meaning had a totally different meaning from the hidden one which is why Allah Almighty made us use our knowledge and sense of imagination to reach the hidden meanings and asked us to use our mind power to reach the revealed meanings.

Yet a lot of people said that if we can reach what is hidden in meaning with our knowledge sense then it is a no longer hidden meaning it is actually revealed meaning and what they try to reach by using the mind makes it mysterious and confusing that is why what appears to some but not to others caused the confusion and conflict between people.

What we need to acknowledge is simply that what was hidden in meaning was hidden just because it was actually too revealed so it had to be hidden. We also need to know that everything that exceeds its limit is turned against it.

Although as an example, there is a great amount of evidence in the universe, no one knows it all but Allah for reasons only he knows. All of these proofs blind the eye like looking directly into the light, the eyes cannot continue to face the light. That is why the power of existence is the reason for hiding it. That is why it has been hidden because revealing it was more powerful. He is the revealed that has no comparison and he is the hidden, nothing has more essence then him. He is Allah that is hidden to appearances but he is revealed in his verses of the Holy Quran.

We also need to acknowledge that the meaning behind the twenty-eight letters in the Arabic language is specifically numbered because it represents a full person from body and soul. The first fourteen letters is the rising of the soul and if the soul is hidden then these letters secrets are hidden too. As for the other fourteen letters they are the rising of the body and the rising of the descending spirits that appeared and had a reason for being revealed and do not think, reader, that this is a coincidence, it is planned by the supreme power and it has great meaning in it.

To point out and reveal these guarded secrets and restored knowledge is very important because it is the secret of the Holy Quran itself the first letter in the word Quran is one then the total numbers of letters comes to five and five is the only number that is a round number, which if you divide it by itself it keeps its nature and the first letter means the beginning which means the beginning of the creation and the letter N at the end means the end which means the end of the creation.

We need to acknowledge that the wise men tried to keep these secrets from being revealed for too long yet that did not prevent it from falling in the wrong hands. That is why it has been said, never give wisdom to the unworthy because it is unfair to the knowledgeable. And do not stop wise people from having the knowledge because that would be unfair to them. They also say do not dangle pearls before swine and they say talk to people the way they can understand and do not talk to them in a way that they can not understand. If I happen to talk to people about what I know they would cut my throat. That is why the law-maker does not prevent asking but he does prohibit the continuous demanding of answers, he also says that people before us got wiped out for their continued demand for answers from their prophets. They even say that a nobleman has been wiped out from the list of holy men because his insistence in asking questions. That is why readers you need to acknowledge as much as you can from this information and keep it to yourself. Now I will tell you what I have seen in Ja'far's book of knowledge as the need for this knowledge is great. Ja'far has also claimed that this dividing of the Quran required a lot of organizing.

☞ DIVIDING THE QURAN BY THE SEVEN STARS ☞

The first chapter of the Holy Quran is the Fatiha chapter and the letter symbol for it is Z, he said the first part of the chapter goes to the Sun and the end goes to Mars.

He also related the first part of the Baqara chapter and the letter symbol for it is RFZ to the Sun and the end to Mars.

The Al-i-Imran chapter's first part is related to the Sun and the end part of it to the Moon and the letter symbol for it is R.

Now as we had the chance to look at this dividing and organizing of the planets with the chapters of the Holy Quran we can see clearly how brilliant and wonderful this dividing of the creation and duration from the beginning of the creation of the sun and we return at the end to the sun and that is some of what I found in Ja'far Al-Bastri's book of wonders.

I have also seen something similar to this layout of the planets in Abu Yusuf Jacob Bin Isaac Al-Kandi's book under the name of The Lasting Duration of Arab Countries he also was named the Philosopher of the Arab world for his expertise and skills in this knowledge.

He Mentioned in his book, under the name My Book of History, that Jewish tribes went to the Prophet Muhammad (Allah's blessing and peace be upon him), some of these tribes were Hayaa bin Akhtab, Abu Yaser bin Darrar and Kaab bin Asaad and they told the prophet "we heard that you have received the chapter Alam" so he answered "Yes, I did" so they told him "Then you will be ruling for Seventy one years". Al-Kindi also claimed that gathering the first undotted numbers from the first verses of the Holy Quran and the unrepeated ones would let you know the duration of each country in the world.

He also claims that the most repeated numbers are the most valuable and stronger in ruling. That is all that he mentioned in his book about this type of dividing and I have never seen anyone else that had the same system. Al-Kindi does not go in-depth to explain this system but he does tell how to do it. Which is by taking the total letters of the first verses of the Holy Quran and the total number of letters of Venus's first and last part of the chapters and like so HGFA then you drop the repeated letters and the result is the number of ruling Venus and the duration. With this you will understand the secret of each country's ruling duration.

As we already advised you reader, you have to keep this knowledge to yourself and do not share it with anyone else, because this kind of knowledge should be kept in the hands of who can protect it, this is also why the lawmakers never revealed the secrets of the spirits to people even if they ask them about it. The spirits essential nature is revealed to whom desires to see in the shape of a gentle figure released in the body from the heart and veins and gives the body the heat, breathing and pulse to the brain and nerves so it controls the feelings and movements because the body's main element is the soul and the soul's main element is the body and both the body and soul are united in one. The soul runs through the body with air and the mind is the source of body actions. The location of the soul in the body is in the left side of the heart, the heart that mounts the soul and spirit power and carries it to the rest of the body parts. As for the body parts they are on the other hand created from a soft, gentle fiery nature. The body simply is a fiery jewel born from the mixture of elements and the pleasant smell feeds the soul and heart. Beauty also feeds the body and liver. So when the body is this delicate and this knowledge is this important and holy, how can we trust anyone or let anyone reveal its wonderful secrets?

Chapter Five

LET US GET BACK TO WHAT WE PROMISED to mention about dividing the planets into the three main living and found elements. As the whole world is either Animal, Plant or Mineral and the world does not depart from this pattern yet there are levels, like the animals have levels and their highest is the human being then second comes the rest of the animals. The animals are divided according to their senses, some have one sense like the oysters and some have two and three and four and some has five and finally the humans have ten; five are noticeable externally and five hidden on the inside just as we have mentioned them earlier. The animals have different characteristics like some have two right sided so they are double right sided with no left side and some instead of a lip it has a beak, some of them their night is day and some have hair like thorns, some have claws for nails and some are headless and some have their eyes in their chest. There are also some slaughtered like locust and fish and some are thin in the middle like ants and some of them have crowns and some have rings. Some also have engravings and some have scales and some have shells and some are swimmers and some are weavers and some are builders, some have many legs and some have none, some have hooves and some have toes then there are some that fly and some live on the land and some almost can talk.

Just as the human being is the link between animals and angels the fish links between birds and the rest of the animals and the oyster is the link between animals and solid objects as the oyster does not have more than one sense because it is close to the ground and it is so similar to plants. The human being took from each object an equal element and it is considered to be the fairest animal of all and the human being has the most straight body frame and setup. He is also the most moderate in temper.

You also need to know reader that every element has an animal with which it is specialized and belongs with like birds belong with air; whales belong with water, fire belongs with Djinn and the Almurda which is the full and the partial fire and it belongs with the salamander. Also the earth-like elements are specialized with metals and plants.

So as we can see everything unites and works together although every element has its own characteristics like the bird's life and will is in flying in the air. Whales also their life and will is in the water and the hidden, disobeying animal's life and will is in the fire, so the whole weight is in the earth that is under its other sister planets. Maybe some of you would ask how is it possible for Djinn to remain in the element of fire? Well there is an example of that in the human body and that is anger, evil desire and revenge that are nothing but an extreme fiery reaction in the body and if you over exceed in these feelings you became nothing but a devil. This is like the devil that we cannot see with our eyes.

But if you manage to control this feeling then you become an angel like the angels we cannot see with our eyes yet they do exist inside of us and exist in the upper assembly that is above this created world. The Djinn also do exist and they relate to fire. The human being is a microcosm, everything exists in the divine world and something similar or just like it is reflected in the human being. The human being on the whole is copy of the macrocosm.

Let us go back now to where we stopped talking earlier about acknowledging and preparing to reach to our desires:

We have to know before anything that acknowledging is part of preparing and preparing is part of desiring so we need to know that by dividing the three elements on the rotating planets will be useful for the reason we desire to achieve. That is why all the Chaldeans from among the Nabataeans, the Christians from Egypt, the Assyrians from Nabataea that live in Syria and Habasha that live close to the Christians of Egypt, the Kurds, Indians, Iranians that live close to Nabataeans in India and the Chinese, although they have their differences yet they all have one similar thing and that is working in Magic and mixing elements together and using these elements some by putrefying it, burning it, eating it, dangling it or in charms and in so many other strange ways that they have mentioned in their books.

I would like now to mention some matters from Abu Bakr bin Wahshiyah's book that was written in principle about cultivation and farming some matters that he had referred to about the Nabataean people. He said that they had some strange mixtures that they made that have great effects with the planets functions and on the air after mixing them with fiery power. This results in pushing the spiritual air or pneumata through that spiritual mixture to the chosen person. You see, the air is a very important element, no soul can live without air so air is the intermediary of the acceptance and giving. The air also has more power in carrying out the force and energy of the desired person. That is why you cannot dismiss these actions once you have done them because they are divine spiritual actions attached together. He also mentions in his book that the Nabataeans have matters and actions in elevation mixture with the human body parts from plants and other elements that they can move with the human's spirits whenever they wanted. They also have the words that move the spirits with an original dividing and talismans with clear reactions.

I have also seen and heard about the Indians' knowledge in some of these matters from Abi Ghalib Ahmad bin Abdel-Wahid Al-Ruzbady's book that he named The Book of Dividing the Knowledge and Revealing the Concealed one of the interesting matters that he has written is as follows, "I have been told a story from a trader from Kharasan that I know and trust, that on one of his trips he had met a man from India. The man was selling merchandise from Binsiyar. He talked with him about this magical knowledge and he happened to be aware of that knowledge too. Then they argued over a couple of points that he had suspicions about. So the Indian man called the trader for a demonstration and there was a rich good looking boy from the Balkh tribe, he claimed that he will bring that boy for obedience and make him leave his wealth and remain in the trader's house till he releases him at the trader's choice and desire. So the trader agreed for the demonstration for two reasons one for learning such knowledge and one for fun. So the Indian man made the figure of the planets with the ascendant and then he drew a small picture. Then he said the rising sign is Aries and it is accompanied by Mars and the seventh is Libra and it is accompanied by Venus then he said Bakh Bakh and the trader asked him what is that? And he said that means that the rising sign and the seventh had agreed to the matter that you want because Mars and Venus are planets of matrimony and pleasure. Then he made Mars the traders sign and symbol and Venus the boys sign and symbol. Then he looked at their location astronomically for when they connect in a trine and there was forty days till that connection at the time. So the Indian man said in forty days time the boy will come to you and stay with you. Then he took a piece of lodestone and crushed it real fine like tiny dust particles and kneaded it with Quassia (it is a bitter Medical plant used to cure patients with intestines problems) till it became one well mixed dough then he made a little figure shaped like the trader and then he took hard garlic and mashed it with wax and made of that the boys figure and then he dressed the figures with clothes similar to their own.

Then he took a jug made of pottery and lined seven sticks made of Myrtle, Aleppo Pine, Pomegranate, Quince, Mulberry, Daphne and Buttonwood then he put four under and three on top in the shape of a cross. Then he installed the trader's figure in the jug first then the boy's figure with his back to the trader's figure. He did this as Venus was facing Mars and he kept coming back every day at the same time he mounted the figures in the jug and the boys figure leans toward the trader's figure slowly everyday till the day of the trine then the boy's figure was facing the figure of the trader and they stuck face to face. Then he folded the boy's figure away from the trader's figure and covered the jug and ordered the trader to bury the jug under a furnace with some coal and then he incensed the jug with frankincense. Then he said some words that the trader memorized from him in Indian language. Once he was done with his words he told the trader to dig the jug out and open it, so he did and he saw that the boys figure was all turned toward the trader like it was made that way. Once he put the figures back under the furnace the boy suddenly walked into the place and stayed at the trader's place for ten days and when his family started asking for him and the Indian saw that he said now we release the boy and he said I did what I promised you to do. Then he took the seeds of Arabian Jasmine and he kneaded it with wax and made a wick and lighted it up under the furnace after he took the figures out from under the furnace and separated them as to show the trader also how many more wonders he knows. Then he said some more words and the boy became like a drunk and got out of his drunkenness he opened his eyes and said can I have the permission to leave so they gave him the permission and he left. People ended up talking about this spiritual experience because the boy was away from his home for too long and that caused the trader to move away. This was one of the most interesting stories in Al-Ruzbady's book that I thought would be of some benefit in mentioning as to see how some of the fortunes work and how some of the people with this knowledge operate these fortunes.

Now I get back to what I promised you reader, to talk about how to bring the spirits and mix the originators to construct talismans and the use of elements like smoke and food to make talismans for your personal benefit. Yet first I have to advise you about something:

You have to know reader that this book with the knowledge I gathered by working long nights, searching and reading other writers' books about this knowledge, I took the useful knowledge and disregarded others. I made this book the most accurate with the most approved methods of all in creating these talismans which means it requires from you absolute secrecy and protection for this knowledge. I had gathered all this information from two hundred and twenty four books from other writer's books that contained similar knowledge and I was able to put the book together in six years then I was able to achieve what I was hoping for and it is my final work.

Getting back to our subject about bringing the spirits and using them for your benefit. Before you bring a spirit it is necessary to know the nature of the planet and you need to invoke its spirit to reveal its power. You also need to know what we have mentioned earlier about each planets color, taste and smell so you prepare the inside core of your body with its nature and taste and that becomes your alimentary food to keep the health of your body and you start leaning slowly to a different nature of food that matches that planet and your body starts to accept only that certain nature of food and nothing else, then you observe the location of the desired planet according to the other straight astrological signs lines. The desired planet should not be on the same line with another planet that has a different nature than your desired planet. The desired planet should be on a straight line with the earth without interruption.

Then you learn about what metals that planet is specified with and you make with those metals an empty cross in the proportion that you have ascertained from your desired planet and the cross should be empty bottomed and its top penetrating to the atmosphere and the bottom of the cross divided on two sections. Then you mount the picture of what you desire to see from the spirits on that cross, for example, you put a picture of Lion or Snake if you desire to be prepared for fighting or prepared for your enemies plans.

Or you could put a picture of a bird if you wanted to be saved from dangers or you could also put your own picture sitting on a chair if you desire to be promoted or get into a high ranking place and similar to that and also the opposite if you wanted to work on some one else you need to humiliate or punish and make whom ever you like an obeying slave to you.

When you do this on humans you need to learn the planet of the persons orbit and the time of his birth which planet it was and then you make a figure to that person from one of that planet's stones and the times for the planet. Then make sure that planet will not be interrupted by another planet or be in the same sign he is from, so it does not jinx it. Then you put that figure with the picture of what you desire to see that person in or on.

If it happens that you want to affect more than one person or you happen not to know the planets they are from then you gather seven stones corresponding to the seven planets like Cement for Saturn, Aquamarine for Jupiter, Golden metals for Mars, Gold stones that appear on the surface for the Sun, Bloodstone or mountain stone for Venus, Talc for Mercury, crystal for the Moon or similar other stones that each planet are specialized with. We make a figure of these stones at the hour of each related stone to each planet and these seven stones would carry the cross that we had mentioned earlier. The reason it is a cross shape is because we also mentioned before that everything has to be connected to its shape and that if it was not a matching shape it will not connect and we are trying to reach the higher spirits with a figure of its shape and we do not know what the shapes of the spirits are and we do not have any proof if they are shaped like humans or not and because we do not know that is why we use the cross and add our pictures to it. The cross is a just one of their symbols because this knowledge is built toward them with pictures. So many have searched for this before they determine to use the cross because it was confusing to find a shape for the spirits especially since there were so many different shapes and figures of every plant, animal and metal so they have chosen the cross. It is a shape that has height, width and weight and an outside feeling to it and the shape of the cross is more appealing to the spirits than any other and that is one of the spirit's secrets. This brings us to the fact that all people and all creatures are under the influence of the mentioned seven planets. So if the spirit connected with this figure reached its target, then that target becomes more powerful and more glorious. So whatever the desired picture is, it reaches its target so if it was a human it changes that human, if it was an object then it changes that object to what you desired it to be.

After we are done with that part, we take a brazier made from the same material of the cross and you make the brazier with an open top and an open bottom but the open top should not be bigger than a little hole so it is the only way out from the top for the frankincense that you will be using. Then to bring the spirits down you need to be in a clean place that has no covered ceiling so it is open to the sky and you cover the place with plants from the same planet's nature that you are bringing its force down. You lay the plants completely flat and not too close or too far to each other then you use the incense that has the same nature of the desired planet on yourself too then you put the rest in the brazier and the cross is on the top of the brazier facing the smoke of the frankincense that is getting in from the bottom hole and coming out from the top hole. You make all this in the one hour you have of the planet. So if you do all this the smoke of the frankincense that is made of the planet's nature will connect with its effect in the astronomical signs straight to earth without interrupting another planet with a different nature. So if the connection of the above happens with the below and vice versa then the acceptance happens and the desired wishes come true.

The seeker for this knowledge should be aware that every planet has its own privacy, rules, jurisdiction and authority those transcripts in between each planet has the complete authority in ruling and other partial authorities. That is something you need to keep in mind when you are trying to bring a certain planet's spirit because some have either more or less in that power of authorization that others especially when you decide your reasons for using that power. I also found that this is the same way to connect the spiritual soul with the physical soul. This is one of the greatest secrets of all and whom ever works with it reaches his desires. It has also been said that if any human knew his birth time he knows his partial time that connected his body with his soul and thus mixed make him the way he is, then he could figure out the planet that has influence on him and that mixes his soul power with that planets power. So if the planet that the person is connected to is known to be a planet with bad luck then that person will be born with bad luck but if the planet is a good luck planet then the person connected to it will be born with a good luck.

Chapter Six

YOU WILL BE WONDERING and searching for this knowledge that Allah gave, only if it is in your nature. Just like Aristotle pointed out in his book Kitab al-Istamatis that the desire to search and learn about this knowledge has to be inside you and that the philosopher that has this power, will be wiser and more knowledgeable about the spirits. The philosophers kept this secret between them and they did not share it with others or with their students. These wise men called the hidden secret of the complete inborn spiritual nature; Tamaghees Baghdiswad Waghidas Nufanaghdees and these four names are the names of these spirits and they used to call them when they needed them and it is also a sign for the perfect nature.

As for Hermes, he mentioned in his book that when he decided to get to the secret of creation he found a very dark basement wherein he could not see anything. Yet it had a strong wind going through it. It was so windy that he could not keep a light lit. That night he was visited in his dreams by a good looking spirit, that spirit told him to take a light and put it in a glass lamp to protect it from the wind and that will light the way for you.

Then he told him to enter the basement and dig in the middle of it and take out a statue of a talisman that was made and buried there and he said if you take that statue out the wind will stop in that basement and it will also light up the rest of the place. Then he told him to dig in the four corners of the place and he will find the creations secret, nature's secrets and the wonders of things and their nature. So Hermes asked the spirit, who are you? And he answered him; I'm your perfect nature. If you desire to see me you have to call me by my name. So he asked him and what is that name that I should be calling you with? And he said Tamaghees Baghdiswad Waghidas Nufanaghdees. Then he asked him in what form I should be calling you and what should I do in my calling to you? And he answered, when the moon comes down to the level of the Head of Aries at any time in either day or night. Enter a clean house and put a table at the eastern corner of the house on a step higher than the ground. Then take four cups; each cup has to be able to hold a whole pound. Then fill these cups with four different oils. Fill the first cup with Almond oil, the second with butter, the third with walnut oil and the last with vinegar oil. Then take another four cups the same size of the first ones and fill them with alcohol, then make a candy made of walnut oil, butter and lots of sugar, it needs to be very sweet and heavy on oil. Then take these eight cups and the candy and a glass vessel. First put the glass vessel in the middle of the table and put the candies on top of it, then put the four cups of alcohol around it facing the cardinal points starting with east, west, north and south. Then you start with the oils first the Almond oil to the east on the same pattern of the alcohol cup, then the walnut oil next to the west, the butter to the north and last the vinegar oil to the south. I found this portion in Kitab al-Istamatis too. Then take a candle and light it and put it in the middle of the vessel. Then take two braziers full of coal, then burn in one of them Kandar a good smelling glue and in the other one burn aloe wood. Then stand and face the east and repeat seven times Tamaghees Baghidiswad Waghudas Nufanaghdees then say after that:

I call you, you High and Powerful Spirit of Spirits, the Wisest of all Wise, Intelligent of all Intelligence, Knowledgeable with the World's Knowledge, answer me and come to me and get me close to your knowledge, make me as wise and powerful as you are, let me understand what I do not understand, let me see what I cannot see and protect me from ignorance, forgetfulness and cruelty and make me like the Forefathers of Wisdom the ones that had intelligence, wisdom, attentive awareness and understanding in their hearts, let all that live in my heart and never depart from it.

Then the spirit said if you do that then you will see me. Hermes also mentioned in his book that the philosophers used to do that once or twice a year, to connect to their perfect spirit's nature, the way they learned from Hermes.

Aristotle said that every philosopher has a power from the spirits that gives him inspiration and strength and opens the closed doors of wisdom that are connected to this power and that it is the philosopher's high star that affects him. This power grows with him and nourishes him. Even the Kings and leaders used to call these spirits by using these names, to ask for help, support and accommodate themselves with their knowledge for the good of their kingdoms and also to keep evil and their enemies away. So these spirits provided them with all the help to run their kingdoms and it gathered their words of obeying. These spirits, as Aristotle wrote to Alexander the Great and said:

O great wise king, here I tell you their names and I reveal their hidden secret to you and if it was not for your position and greatness I would have never revealed these secrets to you. So make a promise to yourself and commit to it not to share this with anyone. Yet make sure to use these spiritual names to help you succeed and support you in your position and ease your troubles and defeat your enemies. If you do that do not disregard the force of the stars and do not do anything without them because the stars are the main organizers of the world and with it, the microcosm and macrocosm were founded. So use and rely on your four stars that are your perfect spiritual nature, with the four names I gave you, and you will reach to the secrets. The reason there are four is because the human nature is fourfold. So call the spirits at anytime and tell them about your needs and whatever you have trouble with. Although I have seen for you my lord from your high star that you will defeat the Persians and kill their king and that the first time you will depart from your country to the Persians land you will have great difficulties in there. So if you have these difficulties and you start to lose hope in winning, connect your perfect spiritual nature with your star and call those names and tell them about whatever is troubling you, so they connect you to your star of power and that will send a ray of power on the Persian kings, ministers, army and all his supporters to lean and obey your power and will gesture for them to kill their king and obey you and when they gather at their meetings their word would braze you and it leans their heart to you and they agree on bringing their king's head to you. I see you my lord with this claim to victory towards all the kings that will all fear you and obey you and they all will ask to reconcile with you. I also see you make your wishes come true with a land of iron and a sky of gold after you kill all the kings and possess all their treasures and that is what I see from your powerful star and your perfect spiritual nature.

After Aristotle's writing to Alexander the Great, the king went to fight the Persian king and he had countless soldiers with him. As he got closer, the Persian king asked about Alexander's location and preparations and what information they had about his army and his assistants told him that their current situation is so weak and advised that, if it is possible, to consider peace with him. So the Persian king said "I see this man is approaching with the help of the upper powers to his side and no doubt who fights the upper power is defeated and has no chance to win" and that was exactly what Aristotle has told Alexander from his stars.

Aristotle mentioned in his book also that the first philosopher that worked with these talismans and had the spirits appear to him and led him to the wonders of talismans and made him connect with his perfect nature and opened his eyes to the mysterious secrets of creation. Also those spirits that told him will never appear to anyone else but you and unless they call our name and present a gift of sacrifice in our name. That philosophers name was Kirfisayis.

This man used to look with a spiritual eye and know with a spiritual heart and there were two thousand two hundred and sixty years between this philosopher and Adam. Some of this wise man's words are; "Any philosopher that works with talismans should concentrate only on this knowledge with all his senses and his mind and heart should only be for this because this knowledge requires all the philosopher's thoughts and effort to be able to unite these spiritual spirits together and any philosopher who occupies himself with more than this knowledge he would lose his intelligence and strength for this knowledge and any other". Similar to this advice, Tamtam, the Indian philosopher, in the beginning of his book mentions that the reason they are called talismans is because they are a spiritual power gathered and pulled together with intention and determination. There are four spiritual powers. The first power is spreading intentional power in the world. The second is the spiritual instrument power that pulls the spirits. The third power is the right spiritual power and the fourth is the handmade spiritual power. The three spirituals power, the Instrument, Intentions and the Handmade receive and obtains the spreading intentions power and pulls it rays and ties the parts that desired to be tied in like a man holding a mirror and tries to get the ray of the Sun and then when he does he reflects it to the shaded areas and so it lights it up and that is without any decrease in the lights power. That is how these three spiritual powers work with the power of spreading intentions to the world. It is also the moving and standing power so it pulls to it the meaning of talismans.

Tamtam also mentions in the beginning of his book saying that "when you first start to look inside of yourself, to your managing spirit that connects you with your star and that is the perfect nature that Hermes the Wise mentioned in his book saying that the microcosm, in which he meant the human, if he was perfected in his nature, his soul would be in the position of the stationary Sun in the sky that shines with its light on the whole world so as the perfect nature it spreads in the soul so its rays connects with the power of wisdom and pulls it till it is centered in the soul that is originally its place like exactly the Sun pulls the ray of the world and lifts it up in the sky".

Socrates had also his own opinion about this matter when he said that the perfect nature is called the Sun of the Wise. Some asked Hermes what he thinks about how to supply wisdom? He answered "by perfect nature". Then he was asked "what is the source of wisdom?" he answered "It is the perfect nature". Then they asked "well what is the key of wisdom?" he answered "It is the perfect nature". Then they asked "what is the perfect nature?" So he answered saying "it is the philosophers spirit that is connected to his star and manages and opens for him all the locks of wisdom and teaches him and answers that which is troubling him and instructs him in his sleep and while he is awake with keys to the closed door. The perfect nature for the philosopher is like the good teacher that teaches the boy word for word and every time he gets done with one door of knowledge he enters with him to another door and that boy will never fear missing any knowledge as long as he has such a teacher that lasts with him forever. Because the teacher always reveals to the boy everything that troubles him and teaches him what is hard this is the philosopher's perfect nature". So keep that in mind. That is why we say who learns this knowledge and works with it has to have it in nature first that is why I felt the need to bring the words of Aristotle the Wise so you can understand.

Chapter Seven

I WOULD LIKE ALSO TO TALK ABOUT some of what the faultless people had to say about some related matters to the powers. Al-Tabari the astrologer spoke about calling the planets powers. "I have what I originally gathered from the leaders of the faultless people and serving in the temple which shows what to do if you want to whisper a secret or ask the planet for something you need. You have to first feel fearful of Allah and clear your heart from all evil beliefs and your clothes from any impurity and be faithful to yourself and clear it out and look at what you desire and which planet of the seven planets you need to get it from and what is the nature of this upper planet. Then head to that upper planet that you need and wear its appropriate robe and use its incense and call it with its name after that planet is in the limits that I will be providing you with drawing from its astrological location and if you do all that your wish comes true and you get what you ask for".

SATURN is used to ask for needs that you desire from chieftains, nobles, presidents, kings, old people and dead people, criminals, recipients, the people benefiting of inheritance, heroes, deputies, peasants, builders, slaves, thieves, parents, grandparents and prominent people and if you are sad or sick with a deadly disease and every other similar request of the same nature ask for it from Saturn with the help of a drawing that I make for you and the use of Jupiter because Jupiter fixes every thing Saturn damages. The planets get to connect with each other to get your request that is why you need to ask the right planet for what is in its nature to do.

JUPITER is used to ask for needs that you desire from high ranking people, former high ranking people, scientists, judges, jurisprudents, leaders, justice rulers, leaders of guidance, dream interpreters, virtuous people, the denouncers of worldly pleasures, rulers, kings, successors, nobles, majesties, ministers, children, little brothers or sisters, asking for forgiveness, or asking for business you will be asking Jupiter for it.

MARS is used to ask for needs that you desire from bound criminals, pimps, outlaws, deputies, sultans companion-ships, heroes, soldiers, dispute gatherings, messengers of evil that try to ruin homes, rips peoples privacy and cause spilling of blood. All fires, people that work in iron industries, war creators, politicians, sheep herders, robbers, road robberies, enemies, opposites, middle brothers or sisters. You could ask Mars also for all that you need of Mars' nature like diseases of the lower parts, phlebotomy and cupping and make sure to use the help of Venus because Venus fixes what Mars damages.

SUN is used to ask for needs that you desire from kings, successors, presidents, nobles with crowns, high ranking people, sultans, nobles, princes, people with courage, heroes, justice defenders, standers for injustice, good praise achievers, judges, jurisprudents, rulers, philosophers, majesties, masters, respectable scientists, quiet honorable people, high ranking people, parents, big brothers or sisters. You can ask for things also like money, governmental or royal position or similar issues.

VENUS is used to ask about things like women, people with no manners, odalisques, male slaves, the people that carry on slavery, children and children lovers, lovers and fancy lovers, adultery making, hetrosexuals and transvestites, prostitutes, gamblers and nightclub lovers, instrument players and singers, female and male homosexuals, eunuchs, slaves, maids, hypocrites, all painters, cripples, husbands, mothers, aunts, little brothers or sisters and make sure to use Mars because Venus admires and leans to Mars.

MERCURY is used to ask for matters like book knowledge, mathematics, engineers, astrologers, public speakers, eloquent, well speakers, scientists, philosophers, wise men, debate speakers, authors, poetry writers, king's children, ministers, poetical leaders, workers, money keepers, merchants, workers in science and practical fields, opponents, controverters, slaves, heterosexuals, boys, butlers, housemaids, little brothers or sisters, handcraft makers, engravers, painters, drawers and goldsmiths and any similar professions.

MOON is used to ask for matters like kings, deputies, treaty administrators, tax administrators, promise keepers, workers, message carriers, travelers, deceivers, peasants, builders and engineers, land owners, deputies, villagers, sailors, workers in water, public audiences or gatherings, magicians, rich women, pregnant women, kings servants, mothers, aunts, big brothers or sisters. The main thing you need to keep in mind is never to ask a planet something that is not in its nature.

I would like also to present some more guidance about the nature and characteristics of the planets from the existing elements. Like the highest and closest in location from the astrological signs.

SATURN'S power is cold, hard and its core is made of misfortune, corruption, stinky, vicious, betrayal and is scary. Saturn also if he gets hold of any matter it betrays, separates and scares. It has the pursuance of gardens, rivers, plowings, farming, provides with a lot of money, cheapness, poverty, disputes, traveling to far bad places. It also has the signs of depression, grudge, cunning, circumcision, refuge, no socialization and every other matter which has to do with evil, forcefulness, jail, change, fatigue, hard work, weakness, corruption, truthful words, friendliness, determination and old age, advocacy, building, after depressions, after fear, too much thinking, worries, experiences, anger, insistent, doing less goodness, concerns, sadness, difficulties, grumpiness, death, cheating, in-heritance, accusations, old things, brooding, too much talking, the knowledge of secrets, the mysterious side of things and if Saturn is retrograde it holds the signs of disgrace, weakness. It also has the signs of bonding, insistence on certain matters and if Saturn as it is retrograde happens to face another planet it weakens that planet too and if as it was returning you happen to ask for something that has difficulties and grumpiness and the possibility becomes hard to get and at that point Saturn has plenty of evil in its fortunate and good mood in its rising fortune then Saturn becomes mild.

JUPITER'S power is medium heat and humidity. Its core is happy and it is different than Saturn in the rank and height and it is a sign of life and animal shapes, growth and creation, bounty, growth, development, justice, moderation in things, respect, purity, honesty, good doing, faithfulness, devoutness, obedient, God-fearing-ness, commendation, praise, patience, bearing, understanding, wisdom, possibilities, enthusiasm, superiority, peace making, generosity, farming, victory, presidency, desire in collecting money, inheritances, good manners, charities, freehanded, donations, helping people with things, the love of building and inhabited places, the love of mercy toward people, keeping promises and consignments, the love to joke and laugh, the love of decoration and good looks, happiness, laughter, talking too much, experience, joy with others, marrying several times, the love of good and hate of badness, command to do favors and prohibiting abominable doings.

MARS' power is heat and burning dryness. The core of it is misfortune and corruption. All the sign shows corruption, destruction, dryness, drought, fires, blazes, disputes, blood and every other matter that happens all of a sudden, injustice, forcefulness, sadness, murders, wars, riots, separations, waste, ruin, forcefulness, torture, beatings, jailing, difficulties, continuousness, fighting, foolishness, insistent, rushing things, scurrilous, obscenity, less happiness, lying, tattling, lack of manners, traveling, going around, desolation, loneliness, hate, roughness, anger, raping privacies, fear, no God-fearlessness and faithfulness, dissolute, maliciousness, swearing by using the name of religions, doing bad and less good, thinking too much about things, ugliness in marriages, messing with animals, adultery, abortion, killing infants, betrayal, spying, deception, swindling, bad neighboring, tiredness, harming, roughness, scum, road robberies, theft, conspiracies, knocking walls and opening doors, and unveiling privacies, dishonoring and every other badness and lack of goodness.

☿ Picatrix ☿

SUN'S power is heat and dryness. The core of it is mixed. It fixes and it damages. It is harmful and useful. Brings good luck and bad luck, it also shows signs of intelligence, understanding, knowledge, courage, help, exploration, strength, roughness, victory, forcefulness, punishment, unjust to the unjust and just to the just, to be harmful to every thing too close and be useful to everything that stands away, plenty of advantage, plenty of damage, keeping promises, doing good to people, happiness, reaching goals, too much talking, quick answers, passion to save money, good praising, pride in front of people, socializing, and every characteristic kings and governors need in running their politics and kingdoms. Also arranging the holy stones and making wreaths and making kings, valuable instruments and golden nuggets.

VENUS' power is cold and humidity. The core of it is happiness. Those thing which shows signs of cleanliness, wonder, glow, vainglory, pleasantry, the passion to sing, play, laugh, decorate, happiness, fun, dancing, playing any instrument, and all instruments, songs, weddings, perfumes, scents, composing, playing games like chess, dice, assassination, laziness, adultery, complementariness, flirting with women and finding comfort with them, beautification, generosity, openhanded, freedom of soul, forgiveness, good mannered, beauty, magnificence, plenty of desire for everything, swearing by using the name of religions, the passion to drink alcoholic drinks, plenty of marriages, destruction, passion for children, leaning for justice and fairness, passion of shopping for everything, loving, friendliness, acceptance, arranging wreaths, jewels and crowns, well speaking, mocking, negligence, weakness, happiness with everything good leads to the fulfillment of desires, making of paints, goldsmiths, trading and selling perfumes. Venus also has binding in places of worship and commitment to religions and praying, it also prevents desires from completing wisdom.

MERCURY is a quick-changer. It leans with its strength and nature to the power, strength and nature of all the other planets and Mercury shows the signs of understanding, speech and talking, after depressions, intelligence, insight, fine education, debates, literature, philosophy, granting knowledge, mathematics, surveying, engineering, astrology, fortune telling, healing, curing, good omens, writing, eloquence, purity of language, nice talker, swiftness, knowledge of other sciences, praise of Allah's name and his prophet Muhammad, poetic composition, the knowledge of books and poetical works and taxes, oversees all hidden secrets, the revelations to the prophets, sympathy, mercy, kindness, peace of mind, respect, happiness, corruption of money, merchants, buying and selling, taking and giving, companionships, disputes, thoughts, cunning, deception, craftiness, cleverness, grudge, lying, after depression, the use of the fake books, hostility, fear of enemies, quick acting in business, change in moods, palm reading, working in different industries, being smart in everything, the desire for pleasant work, money collecting and money corruption, helping and standing far from evil.

MOON power is cold and with humidity. The core of it is happiness, which shows signs of the beginning of works and too much thinking about things. It also has inner conversations, quality opinions, eloquence, awareness and happiness in life, the ability to get all desired either made or found things. Good merits, companionship, jocoseness, acting quickly, heart safety, eating a lot, few marriages, safety of body parts, staying away from evil, the desire to praise and compliment, happiness, beauty, the knowledge of the higher sciences, news, secret telling, marrying women, raising others kids, kindness to their own families, prefer what others prefer, very little desire for filthiness, fixing every matter, forgetting, dullness, straying away from wisdom, the passion to lie, tale bearing, grudges, deceiving, envy, cowardice, adulteress, fed up, failure, laziness, disgrace, rushing, spending too much and wasting.

☿ INVOCATION OF SATURN ☿

So if you wanted to invoke any of these planets, you need to do what I am about to tell you to. Let us start with Saturn. If you wanted to invoke it and bring down its spirit to raise its power you have to time the planet correctly where it is facing Libra then Aquarius because Aquarius is Saturn's home and he finds exaltation in it. Then time it with Capricorn because it is Saturn's second home. If it was not at any of these locations then you need to locate it when it has in its fortunes an equal extent of the same natured planet or at least at the same level with it or both are facing east when it is on the same pattern with another planet or on the next pattern and the best pattern is the one in the middle of the sky or on a straight line away of bad fortunes, bright in the middle of the sky. Also be aware of Saturn's bad luck when it is square Mars or when its house is in a descent. The purpose of that is that the planet would be at its best and away from all the bad luck just like the good person that never asks about anything and always does good deeds but if it was burned or unfortunate or retrograde or it was in a house away from the rising fortune then Saturn becomes like the grumpy person that is busy with himself and away from others. Thus if Saturn was in any of these locations, and you wanted to invoke it, you need to wear a black outfit or black hooded cloak which is the wise man's outfit and if it was concealing black fabric it would be all the better.

Then approach the location where you would like to invoke it with reverence and submissiveness as if you are almost sad and grievous with your head all bent down walking slowly and quietly. Also come to Saturn in Jewish dress because Saturn is familiar with their rotation and have with you an iron seal ring and brazier of iron and incense in it should be frankincense. Take equal amount of each of opium, myrtle, saffron, plantain, walnut, layers of bush grass, soiled wool, colocynth grease, pure black cat hair and grind what needs to be grinded then mix them all together and make it like a dough with a bundle of black goat wool then separate the threads and lift them then incense one of these threads when you are ready to invoke and face the planet and the incense smoke is rising and say:

O Spirits of the Great Master, Ruler of the Great Name and great importance. You Master Saturn the hard, the cold, the dark, the beneficent, the honest, the friendliness, the faithful, the only matchless ruler that keeps his agreements, the far, the one that keeps his promises, the exhausted, the hard worker, the only one with sadness and grumpiness, the one that strays away from happiness and joys, the old and experienced, the double crosser, the deceiver, the wise, the understanding, the fixer, the destroyer, you make seekers miserable when you give them bad fortune, and you make them happy when you give them good fortune. I ask you the First Father in the name of your gods and your generous manners to do to me this and this.

Then you quietly bow to him with reverence and submissiveness. As you are bowing keep repeating what you asked him to do for you and make sure that the time you speak to him is his time and the day is his day because then you have better chances of succeeding.

There is also another soliloquy and incense that some use. The incense they use is a little different. They use an equal amount of Armenian incense, juniper and the seed of tar tree, dates and asparagus. They grind them all together and knead them and cook them with basil. Then it gets put up and when you need it do what I told you earlier to do and face Saturn and say:

In the name of Allah, In the Name of ASHBEEL the mandatory king of Saturn in all the cold and ice, the Owner of the Seventh Orbit, I call you with all your names: in Arabic ZUHAL in Persian KIWAN in Roman CORONIS in Greek ACRONIS and in Indian SHANSHAR. In the name of the God of the Upper Structure, accept my request and accept my call and obey the God of the Dominion and make my request so and so come true.

You make sure your incense is in an iron brazier. Once you are done with your speech and incense you do like I said earlier where you bow and repeat you request over and over. Then you praise Allah and consecrate him and you present a sacrifice. The sacrifice should be a black billy-goat without any white spot. When you sacrifice it you burn the body with a fire that you put out till the smoke rises in the air then keep the blood at your place and you can use it for your business and eat the liver then your request comes true.

≡ INVOCATION OF JUPITER ≡

When you want to invoke Jupiter, you need to dress in white and yellow colors and you need to be submissive like priests and Christians because Jupiter is familiar with their rotation. So you need to do everything they do and also how they get dressed in a honey colored outfit, the region they live in, the cross. You also need a crystal ring and a white hooded cloak. Prepare the brazier for incense with liquefied oak and licorices, alkanet, fawina sandalwood. This kind of sandalwood however you break it, you find a cross inside of it. Then you also add cane powder, pine seed and juniper seed. You knead an equal amount of each and mix with alcohol. Make wicks of it and use it when you need it and you stand and do as I have mentioned in Saturn's invocation. Then you face Jupiter and say:

Peace be upon you Holy Happy Master. Hot with mild humidity, the Beautiful, the Knowledgeable, the Honest, the Rightful, the Just, the Fair, the Devout, the Wise in religion, the Apathetic, the Powerful, the Great Determiner, the Fixer, the Generous, the Great Booster, the Utilized, the Kind, the Promise Keeper, the Faithful, the Friendly, the Generous in manners. I ask you Father in the name of all your beautiful generous manners and your valuable deeds to do to me so and so, you the Core of all the Good and the one that makes all requests successful.

Jupiter's second invocation and incense, which is used by some, is done by taking three and a half pieces of chestnut, twisted ebony, bush-grass, roman spikenard and nine pieces of myrrh tree. Then take two pieces of seedless raisin, grind what needs to be grinded and knead it with cooked basil and you use this as incense when you invoke the planet. You need to put on clothes of the dutiful and people of justice and hold the book of the true religion and show an absolute submissive and peace on your face. While you are doing this use the incense that we have described and face the planet while saying:

O RAFAEL the King. The Authorizer of Jupiter, the happy, the complete, the whole, the good, with the good taste, the respectable, the smart, the far away from contamination and bad sayings, I call you with all your names, in Arabic MUSHTARY, in Persian BARGEES, in Barbarian HURMUZ, in Greek ZAWISH, and in Indian WAHSAFT. In the Name of the Upper Creators and Gods and Blessings, I ask you to do for me so and so.

When you are done with your soliloquy, you bow down to him and present a burned white sheep as a sacrifice and eat the liver as we described before and then your request comes true.

There is another way to invoke Jupiter that some do, which does not require incense. It has such great power, that some specifically use it, to provide safety in sea journeys. Beside a group of people that had this knowledge, Al-Razi has mentioned it in his book under the name of The Book of the Holy Knowledge by saying that when you face Jupiter in the sky and say:

May peace be upon you. You Noble Planet, the most Honorable and Great, the Merciful, the Handler of others matters, the Knocker on the Pure Spirits Doors, the Saver of the drowning and Beginning for help in the Depth of the Sea, the one that shines his light, his soul and his spirits on us. Fix our situation and secure our exit and wash the filth of nature away from us. Amen.

The sign of acceptance for your request is that a burning flame appears for the requester. The flame is Jupiter's spirit.

Yet the greatest in action and most powerful invocation of all is said facing Jupiter:

Peace be upon you Happiest of Planets, the most Honorable in Nature, the Magnificent, the Valuable, the Great, the Hazarders, the Fortunate Master, the hot, humid and moderate in air, the Beautiful, the Knowledgeable, the Honest, the friendly, the Legist in religion, the Divine, the Certain, of Good Fortune, the Distinct, the Faithful, the religious, the just, the fair, the devotee, the judicious, the bright and radiant, the pious, the compassionate, the great in determination, the fixer, the elite, the generous, the exploit, the superior, the promise keeper, the loyal to his words, the complete perfect, the kind virtuous, the God-fearing righteous, the immaculate, the well regarded, the far from soil and immoral words, the possessor of thoughts and religion, the calm and solemnest, the intelligent, the understanding, the wise, the dream explainer, the truthful, the worshiper, the loyal to Allah, the just between people with fairness, the obedience and religious, the good praise and prospector, the enthusiastic, the righteous, the domain, the respectable, the successful, the winner, the presidential, the sultan, the king, the noblest, the majesty, the desirer in collecting charities and saving money, the openhanded, the donator, the one that helps people to do good, who love to build and populate, the merciful with people, the promise keeper, the returner of trusts, the funny, the humorous, the one cares for style and shape, the happy, the laughter, the talker, the tongue trainer, the marriage lover, the lover of all good and hater for all evil, the commander of good and bane of evil.

Peace be upon you Planet the Supporter of Mercy, Kindness, who are in charge of peoples matters, the squander of pure souls, the savor of horribleness and the terribleness of the seas, the savor of drowning people from the depth of the sea, you are the one that shines his light, soul, comfort and your kind spirit that is attached to the upper power on our children and families. A power that guards our matters, provides us with money, keeps us from the daily worries of our life, so our living becomes more productive, easier, more pleasant, more useful and more blessed. You fix our bodies and extend our lives with your spiritual power. You provide us with health from all illnesses and pains and you keep away some and all suffering. You shed on us with your honorable, magnificent, righteous spiritual power, tribute, respect and greatness. You give us with that power acceptance between all creatures and defend us against all harms from others, from talkers and non-talkers. You provide us with love and beautiful immunity and shelter. You make sure no one talks about us. You cover people's eyes with a spiritual veil so it covers their evil eyes and make sure their harmful tongues do not hurt us. You stop these people's violent hands and walking legs. You restrain these people's evil intentions till they get pulled to your honorable righteous spiritual power that you hold us all with to our own spiritual souls. These spiritual souls that tie these people's eyes with a fear, respect, glorification and greatness in their hearts toward us, like the ray of sun up in the sky shines on the world. You grant us with your honorable, righteous and magnificent spiritual power knowledge in understanding religion and Allah's obedience. Make one of your honorable, righteous and magnificent spiritual powers surround us to support, protect, guide and tribute us and to mediate for us at our Creator (be he blessed) so he protects us from nature's superiority, falling for our desires and make us fortified with intelligence and the lights of theology. Provide us with pure souls and clear minds. Direct us with a divine superiority and spiritual power so our soul becomes motivated and our minds fascinated with the core of the universe. Make that power turn us away from our interests in mortal desires and make it easier to get our requests, forgive us and disregard our biggest sins, so we become one soul with no comparison and no one against. Look at our limits. Do not give us more than we can take. Do not change our names and shapes till we die with your honorable, righteous and magnificent spiritual power, that power that holds us and washes off the nature's dirt and gathers the goodness of the beginning and the end of life, Amen.

Here I call you with all your names, in Arabic MUSHTARI, in Persian BARGEES, in Roman HORMUZ, in Greek ZAWISH. Answer my call and make all my requests come true in the name of RAFAEL the authorizer king of your matters and in the name of DRYAS, HATEES, MUGHEES, DREES, TAHEES, FROOS, DAHIDAS, AFRIDOOS, DAMAHOOS in the Name of the Upper Gods and their Blessings, the Beginning of the Beginning, the Eternal of the Eternity, relieve me and make all my requests come true, as I have turned to you, with little that we can provide and with the hard life we live and weaknesses. We hand you our fates with loyalty. We bow and kneel to you to your godliness, worship your light as I submit to you and obey you and follow your honorable nature. Respond to my call, obey my order, make my request come true and everything I desire from you, keep misfortune away from us and give us a share in your importance, beauty, your honorable, righteous and magnificent spiritual power that holds us and fixes our matters, provides us with lots of money that carries a piece of this world's desire to us and gives us the love of the world.

Make our work, our decisions in people and our line of conduct acceptable. Make us close to kings, give us the obedience of people, make us known for honesty, give us the thoughts of all people, and utilize them with your light and soul and the honorable, righteous and magnificent spiritual power that holds us together. The power of mercy for a little child and the power of giving for an adult person. I ask you Merciful in the Name of your Honorable Beautiful Manners and Valuable Deeds. In the Name of the Light that flows on you from Allah the Magnificent, the Exalted, for you to hear my call and make my request come true, reveal what I have been hiding in my soul and asked you to give it to me. Give me some of your love and compassion that I can know your answer to me, give us mercy, relieve us from troubles, and give us an ultimate happiness that does not change by any misery. I ask you in the Name of your Rightness and beg you with your kindness, that you mediate for me to Allah the Merciful the Favored to make my request come true and my desire complete. Make it easy for me to reach my request and to master all the kings of earth and all earth creatures the talkers and non-talkers in the name of Allah. O God of the

Past Era and the Eternal Era Forever and Ever, I asked you in the Name of your Rightness and approach you in the name of your kindness, complete peace be upon you from Allah of all creators, his blessings, his mercy, his prosperity to all eternity and to all the ages of ages, be upon you, Amen, Amen and upon all your faithful keepers of your name, to Allah, to you, Amen, Amen.

They say that who ever invokes in this way and uses the incense correctly and invokes thus, Jupiter's spirit will surround the requester and make his requests and desires in the world come true and also cure him from illnesses for a year, utilize the world, overcome all difficulties, preserve him from fear of all the people in the world. You have to also understand that the bowing, the submissive, rolling your forehead in the dust will only help to make your request happen faster.

≡ INVOCATION OF MARS ≡

When you need to invoke Mars you have to be dressed in red with a red head band, carrying a sword and all you can of all kinds of weapons, or dressed like soldiers, fighters or villains and as pagans because Mars is familiar with their rotation. Do not forget to wear a copper ring and have frankincense in a brazier made of copper and the incenses are a combination of equal amounts of whortleberry, bush-grass, and aloe, the root of herbaceous plant, Phirbiyon and pepper. You grind and kneed after adding some human blood and make wicks, you put the wicks up and use them for incense when you need to invoke the planet.

☿ Picatrix ☿

You have to approach Mars with strength and courage and facing him straight in the sky like you do to the other planets and say as you are using the incense:

O Virtuous Master, the Hot, the Hard, the Brave in Heart, the Blood Spiller, the Arouser of the Intelligent, the One with the Powerful Name, the Victorious, the Dominator, the sharp rational, responsible for evil and torture, beating, jailing, lying, tale-bearing, obscenity, carelessness, the killer, the stranger, the carrier for lots of weapon, the passionate for lots of marriages, the strong in thoughts, the mighty, the winner, the war causer, the defender of the weak, the strong stander for evil, the revenge taker from evil. I ask you with your course in the orbit, with your victory, I request from you in the name of who preferred you and made you revengeful, bolder and greater in value and more dominion. Grant me and obey my requests and hear my prayers. I wish you to do me so and so, peace be upon you who protects and keeps harm away.

Remember everything you need to request. Then you repeat the speech several times as your bowing and divining to him and you will get your requests.

The planet Mars' second invocation and incense is done by taking an equal amounts of broad bean, mallow, nutmeg, bush-grass. You grind and kneed the mixture with cooked basil and you use it as incense as we have mentioned before. Then you say:

O RUBAEEL the Mandatory King of Mars the Hard, the Firm, the Fiery, the Reached, the Righteous Master, the hot, the cruel, the brave in heart, the blood spiller, the riser of disturbance and cunnings, the one with a powerful name, the victorious, the vanquisher, the rational, the strong, the responsible for all evil, torture, beating, jailing, lying, tale-bearing, obscenity, the careless about others, the fighter, the only, the stranger, the weapon carrier, the passionate for lots of marriages. I ask you in all your names in Arabic MAREEKH, in Persian BUHRAM, in Roman REES, in Greek AARS, in Indian ANGARA. I ask you in the Name of the Upper Gods to respond obey and grant me my requests. Hear my prayers I want you to make so and so for me. In the name of RUBAEEL the Mandatory King of your matters.

Then you use the incense and then repeat the invocation as you are bowing and kneeling to him. When you are done, sacrifice a tiger or wildcat and burn him as we have mentioned before and eat its liver then all your requests will come true.

Mars has another call that you do if you had an enemy that harmed you and you want to get back at him with harm, torture, sickness or damage. You need to be dressed in the clothes we have mentioned before. You prepare the brazier with incense and face Mars and say as your incense rises:

O My Burning Fire, O Saver from Disasters, Remover of kings from their thrones, Burning Wild Dogs, Disgracer of the tough, the Spiller of Sultans Blood and humiliation unto their women, the causer of bloodshed, O refuge who values your victories, your approach who cherishes you and you bring victory to who asks you and for strong Aries. Aries the tough, the hot, the one that grants all requests, I ask you in all your names, characteristics, courses in orbit, your light, your proof of sultanate to approach me so I can complain to you about this person who is setting me up to deliberately hurt me and about his conspiracies against me seeking to harm me. I ask you the last source of hope for people in trouble; you're the last shelter for refugees. I ask you with the power whom Allah of All, has provided you with, that you send on this person a domination of your dominations to be a fence between me and him so it keeps him away from me and makes him too busy to think about me, disgrace him and reveal his privacy, haggle him with torture, get the strongest and worst revenge of him, cut his hands and legs, curse him in his soul with ruin, bring to him all ruin, set the aroused and forceful spirits, the thieves, the road blockers, the greatest tumors and irritations on him. Make him go blind, make him go deaf, make all his senses go num, make him blind, deaf, mute, totally ineffective, make him tied up, let him suffer and be tortured for a long time, prevent him from eating, drinking, enjoyment and living. Set him up with all kinds of curses, set his soul up with grudge and spite in his money, in his family, in his children. Curse him with the sultan's injustice and the hostility of the neighbors, and the hate of the relatives. Set him up with the crimes of thieves and robbers, in his own hometown and wherever he travels on land or sea. Make all this as fast as possible and curse him forcefully strongly, you the mighty, the tough in spite, in the name of your powerful force that moves the universe to immorality, you make those passionate with harming and hatred to be busy only with themselves. Listen to my prayer, have mercy for my tears, in the name of ROBAEEL the Mandatory King of your matters, in the name of the spirits that you use against who disobeys you, in the name of the light you send to the heart of the people of anger and evil till they commit the biggest sins. Answer me, pursue my requests, and give me of your love, which I know you will answer with, a complete peace be upon you and on whom ever protected women from harm and pushed away evil influence and directed unfairness. Amen, Amen, and in the Name of these Names upon you. DEGHIDIOUS, HAGHIMDEES, GHIDYOOS, MIRAAS, ARDIGHOS, HIDGHIDYS, MAHIDAS, DAHIDMAS, I ask you to make my requests come true, support me with my needs, have mercy for my tears, lessen my slips, take my hand in the name of the upper gods, the magnificent competent, the biggest divine, the ultimate desire and the names of Allah, in the name of gods, the graceful, the creator of death, life, existence and eternity, help me and grant me my wishes right now, at this moment, Amen, Amen.

Then you bow and prostrate and repeat your request as you are prostrating and then your wishes come true and if you sacrifice any of the animals it is specialized with would be so much better.

There is also a rite that gets carried out to *Al-Na'sh's Daughters*¹⁰ and that is if you had an enemy that had harmed you and you wanted to set up an absolute harm or torture for them, then you need to face Al-Na'sh's Daughters and use their incense and say:

Peace be upon you Al-Na'sh's Oldest Daughter, the Highest and the Beautiful, I ask you in the Name of the Power of the Creator of All given unto you, to send on this person's spirit an air that blows him up and all his body gets ulcers and sores that numbs his organs, lives in his senses, so he does not see, hear, feel, walk, talk, eat, drink, or enjoy life at all, let these spirits put him in all danger and haggie him with all kinds of torture, with all kinds of beating, set the tyranny of sultans against him, defeatists of enemies and neighbors, make all curse him with quick and urgent curses connected to all the people in the world, so they cause his house to collapse on him and drop him from high places, pluck his eyes, untie his hands and legs and make him busy with himself. Make them be most harmful to him and remove Allah's protection away from him and do not have mercy for his tears, also make them not to lessen his slips but actually make it quicker. Here I am turned to you for what troubled me and harmed me. This person had assaulted me and harmed me. You are the last source of hope to all requesters, the ultimate desire to its supporters. I ask you to send a group of your spirits against him to set him up with their greatest power so they act quickly on what I asked you to do to him, of spite, torture, curse, shame, disgrace, force, harm, illnesses, sicknesses, harmful epidemics and circle him with the evil circle. In the Name of your Powerful Grasp, grant me my wish and have mercy for my tears and give me some of your love, which I know is your answer to me. In the Name of the Upper Gods, the greatest power, with great divine, help me and make my request come true at this moment, in the Name of the God of Gods, the God of the Upper Supremacy, answer my call, make my wish come true.

Then you bow and prostrate and repeat the words over and over and your incense that burns is made of an ounce of each of hard licorice, gum, buttonwood, Indian sandalwood and a Dirham (it is a silver coin used in different rites through ancient time for measuring which equals six seeds of wheat for each carat) of each of spikenard, musk, grind what needs to be grinded then you make the dough in the size of hazelnut and you use that as an incense when you stand for Al-Na'sh's Daughters for your request and then that request will come true.

≡ INVOCATION OF THE SUN ≡

If a person needs to connect to a king to ask him for something one should invoke the Sun, also if that person desires to get the sympathy and the acceptance from that king's heart or for anyone that is looking to make agreements with governments and states then they should seek the Sun. At the time of its rise, the Sun's own day and hour while putting the right hand on top of the left hand as he is facing the sun from a hidden spot acting like a fearful person and dressed in kingly and majestic outfits like yellow silk robes and a golden crown. He also wears a golden ring and dressed so well like the kings of Persia, as the Sun is familiar with their rotation and holding a golden brazier. The seeker of the Sun needs to get a rooster with a good crest and light up a little candle and put in the candle a stick of aloe on the side and light up the side of the stick as the sun is rising. Then let go of the rooster facing the Sun as you light your incense and say:

O Causer of all Causes that is still in Holy Jerusalem, In the Name of the Eternal Gods I ask you to grant me my wish and give me Radiance, Acceptance and the Love of this king or all the kings of earth.

Then you say:

Greetings O Life of the Universe and the Light of the World, answer my call and give me Radiance and Acceptance. O Sun I Call Thee by your Names; in Arabic SHAMS, in Persian MUHR, in Roman IYLYOOS, in Indian AARS and BRAA. You are the Light and Glory of the World, the middle of all, whom greets the universe and all evil, the fixer and connector, the highest in levels, the highest in places. I ask you to assist me with this king or all the kings of earth or support with this state or rank or presidency and make me Radiant and Accepted as you are the Master and King of the Planets. With you the world lights up and shines, I ask you the Controller of All to have mercy on me and my begging and submissiveness.

You say that as you are using the incense and that incense is known as orthodox solar incense. This incense's reaction is strange, being orthodox, and it is made of thirty one ingredients and this is how it is made. You take seven ounces of mastic, mace, myrrh, rockrose, elecampane, celluloid. Then three ounce each of roman spikenard, bloodstone or mountain stone, pine seed and five ounce of wisteria, root iris, asparagus, walnut, nutmeg sticks, bush-grass, rose oil. Then four ounces of dried red flower, saffron, Indian spikenard, henna root, henna leaves. Then nine ounces of nutmeg, elderberry seeds, mellow. Then one ounce of the root of herbaceous plant, fifty small pumpkin seeds, wood ruff, gum bulb and two pounds of seedless dates, seedless raisin and five pounds of foamless honey. You kneed them all after grinding what needs to be grinded and shape the dough into hazelnut-sized pieces. Then you use it for incense at the time of the invocation and then you sacrifice the rooster and eat the liver like we have explained before and then burn the body.

There is a lesser invocation for the sun that you can do with different incense and the way that it is done is by wearing the clothes I have mentioned earlier. As for the incense, this one is made of equal amounts saffron, licorice, brush-grass, damask rose, mordant, pomegranate flower, Indian sandalwood and seeds of yellow iris. Grind then kneed with cow milk and shape the dough in the size of hazelnut then use it for incense as you say:

Peace be upon you O Sun the Lady, the Happy, the hot, the hard, the shiny, the bright, the rising, the magnificent, the understanding, the high, the honorable, the master of all beauty, the clean, the wise, the collector of money, the controller of the other six planets that follow you and you are their master, they are disgraced without you, that is why they come back to you, if they get closer they get burned with your ray and destroyed with your light and your power yet they rise from your light so you have the superiority on these planets, you're the queen and they are your servants, you bring happiness to whom looks at you and you jinx whom you gather, so no one will be surrounded with your knowledge and no one will be aware with your core honesty.

Then you bow and repeat the speech a couple of times then you present the Sun's specialized animal and sacrifice it and what you ask her for will come true.

There is another invocation for the Sun for those who have lost hope and fear a king yet there is a important factor they need to keep in mind and that is who ever wants to use this has to make sure to do it when the Sun rises in the sign of Scorpio and the Sun is conjunct with Mars. Then take a gold brazier and put in it oak coal with a piece of amber that looks like a chickpea and you put the coal one after the other and as your facing the Sun in the middle of the sky you say:

☞ Picatrix ☞

O Source of the Proud, the Purity of the Power, the Joy of Life, the Pillar of the Highest Levels, the Source of Good, I turn to you with my needs, with the numbness of my wealth and my hands stretched out to you. In the name of your quiet motion and support with superiority, in the name of the compact you have on you of obeying who ever are faithful to you and call you for help. In the name of the power you hold the planets all together with, do not hide from me anything and reveal to me my suffering, release my wealth, move a piece of the this worlds desire to me, give me some of your glory and beauty, some of the happiness in my fate, some of your hidden kindness, make me the example everyone uses as a guide, make everyone move with my mode of life and with your meditating the world and mercy on the little child and the adults, with your guidance to preserve and to get higher in their rank, in the name of all that and all your holy books that have nothing like on earth. Hear my prayer, answer my call and may all peace be upon you and on all those loyal to you and all the ones that elevate your name, the faithful to Allah and to you.

You will get your requests and wishes after you dress properly and do all what I have mentioned earlier.

☞ INVOCATION OF VENUS ☞

Venus on the other hand has different arrangements when you need to invoke it, you need to be facing it's west side and while it is totally away of all bad fortunes on a straight line, then you need to be dressed in robes of the Arabic majesties of white color and a white turban. This is the Arabic outfit and Venus is familiar with their rotation or get dressed in elegant fancy clothes and put on your head a wreath made of pearls and do not forget to wear a golden ring with valuable jewels in it and on both your hands gold bracelets, hold in your right hand a mirror and in your left hand hold an apple or a comb and put in front of you a glass of wine also use some fragrant and feminine perfume and have with you a silver or gold brazier to burn incense as you say:

Peace be upon you Venus, O Happy Bosomed Lady, the Cold, the moderate in humidity, the clean, the beautiful, the aromatic, the generous in joy, the owner of jewels, gold, happiness, dancing, singing, decoration, having fun, listening to music, who plays an instrument, move strings of lute to make music, playing, joking, socializing, full of leisure and entertainment, the just, the passion for drinking alcohol, the passion for relaxation and happiness, the passion for marriages, I also call you with all your names in Arabic Aye ZAHRA, in Persian ANAHEED, in Roman APHRODITE, in Greek TYANA, in Indian SURFAH, in the name of all the upper gods, answer me and obey Allah and his sultanate and grant me so and so, in the name of BITAAEL the kingly authorizer with your matters.

Then you bow and repeat your invocation then you lift your head and repeat your invocation and the sacrifice being that of a colored pigeon or a dove and eat its liver and burn the body in the brazier in front of you. As for the incenses recipe you use a small amount of cane and wood sticks with fine edges, chestnut, saffron, honey Amber (it is a yellow resin with a beautiful scent), mastic, skin of poppies, willow leaves, root iris, grind then kneed with rose water and then shape them in the size of a hazelnut and then use them for incense.

The reason to invoke Venus is to grant love, affection and intimacy, that is why you get dressed in an outfit that matches the planets nature and use this combination of incense, which is five ounces of wood sticks with fine edges, myrtle, two and a half ounce of raisin, gum, mastic and one ounce of Indian cedar, mahaleb seed, wood ruff, root iris, kneed all these ingredients and mix them with spring water then shape them in the size of a hazelnut and use it when you invoke by saying:

O Spirit of Love, Harmonious Organizer, who increases spiritual desire, who increases the power of enjoyment, the fixer of manners, the former of the denier of spiritual passion, the encourager of marriages, former of families, you valuable with your power to bring affection to souls which continues toward other passionate souls, you provide love to whom approaches you with love. O Beautiful and Kind Venus, the close, you pull to you all that approach you and no one rejects you, I ask you in the Name of your Names and the Names of your Creator and operating you in the orbit and provide you with a light of the supremacy of his light. To approach me as I complain to you the hurt I have seen from this person and what I have to go through from this person's abandonment, separation, bad companionship and hurrying to get away from me and disobeying me deliberately. You are the last hope that I attach to and you are the extreme desire of refugees. I ask you to send a soul from your spirits and a power of your powers to pull his quiet spirit in his heart to me, that heart that is mad in nature and crosses through all his organs. Bring him with affectionate, kindness and move him towards me with a powerful move and a great excitement like that of fire and the excitement of fire and like the wind and the power of its whiff. You who are honest in her intimacy, the good in harmony, in the name of your intimate spirits and your compassionate power that rises desires in souls and puts love in hearts and makes the reluctant of desires to be all interested in and busy with it. Answer my prayer; accept my implement, in the name of BITAEEL the mediatory with your matters and in the name of the spirits that you use to bring back the deviators of your way and in the name of the light that you sent in the hearts of the desires so they become more passionate, I want you to answer me and approach what I ask from you and give me from your love what I can know with your answer to me. A complete peace be upon all whom are able to get two hearts together and connect the ties of intimacy and affection and make the happiness of desires his way in life, Amen.

Then you sacrifice a white pigeon and eat the liver and burn the body and hold the ash towards you because that sends the passionate spirit in the heart of whom you fed it to in your name.

≡ INVOCATION OF MERCURY ≡

The need of calling Mercury and invoking it, is done if you have any request that has to do with writers or owners of poetical gatherings and what you need to do when you approach it is to be dressed in scribal attire at all times and the moon has to be substantiated with the Moon, you also wear a ring made with a metal that Mercury is specialized with and if it is made of knotted Mercury that would be the best. Hermes always wore that ring. When you approach Mercury face him and make the invocation in a hurry, with delicacy and eloquently as if you are sitting on the chair of the ruling classes because

Mercury is familiar with their rotation. You also hold a book in your hand and pretend to be writing in the book and the incense is between your hands and also a brazier made of one of the metals of which Mercury is specialized. Then as you burn incense you say:

Peace be upon you Mercury the Master, the Virtuous, the Honest, the Smart, the Articulate, the Understanding, the Debater, knowledgeable with all arts, the cautious, the writer with good manners, knowledgeable with all matters Above and Below, the honorable master, the one with so little happiness, the useful for money, the useful for trade, the cunning, the oath keeper, the intelligent, the helper, the patient, the skillful, the kind, the preventor, the Proprietor of the Revelations to the Prophets, you are the proof of divinity, believing, intellect, conversation, news, fine education, different sciences, intelligence, smartness, literature, philosophy, advanced knowledge, engineering of the divine and terrestrial things, surveying, the Knowledge of Stars, restraining and fortune telling, the rhetorician, able to poetize book writers and the poetry gatherings with eloquence, the fast, gentile and nice talking, after depressions, working fast, the moodiness, the lying, the humoring, the enduring, the supporting, being obedient, being patient, being merciful and companionate, kindness, quietness, respect, preventing evil, good Allah follower, protecting rights, good low voice, there is not one description that does not fit you of kindness, you bring more happiness to the happy, you bring boys to boys and girls to girls, you bring Light to Day and Darkness to the Night, you blend easily in peoples nature and shapes and in all their moods. I also call you with all your Names in Arabic UTARID, in Persian TEER, in Roman HAROOS, in Greek HORMUS, in Indian BEDDAH. I ask you in the name of the divine power and the powerful sultanate to answer me and obey me in my request, send a power of your spirits to me to make me stronger and guide me and make the asking for all the knowledge easy on me so I become as like a king high in value and rank with a special spot beside them heard when needed in all knowledge, in all matters, in all services, movements, philosophies, serving poetry gatherings, in troubles, in managing and by providing me with all this grant me plenty of money that is associated with it and the high level, the wealth, the high place by all kings and all creatures. In the name of Hercules the ruling king of your matters, answer my prayer, hear my call, make my request come true by making me stronger, get me closer to the kings, with your handling me, with your supporting of me with wisdom, with your providing with strength and knowledge, with what you taught me of what I did not know, make me see the unseen, keep away all badness from me, the badness that comes from ignorance, forgetfulness, cruelties, weakness, till you make me reach the high levels of first rulers, the ones that had wisdom, intelligence, awareness, sighting, understanding in their hearts make all this in my heart and of your spiritual and honorable power a force that remains inside of me as a light to guide me in all my matters. Grant me the service of the kings, ministers, sultans and great money benefits regarding that and grant it to me swiftly. In the Name of the Divine Gods and the Powerful Sultanate, answer me and obey me in all I ask you to do.

Then you bow and repeat your request as you are bowing. Then lift your head after you are done and sacrifice a rooster and burn it as we described earlier and eat its liver. As for the incense potion ingredients; you take an equal amount of buttonwood, cumin (this is a different kind the color of it is white to yellow just like the color of chickpeas and its called Kurmani), dried Artemisia, truffle basil, base of the rose, skin of bitter almonds, ebony tree seed, cinnamon, the root of herbaceous plant, myrrh. Grind then kneed with cooked basil and then shape them in the size of hazelnuts and use them when you need incense.

☾ INVOCATION OF THE MOON ☾

Who ever needs to invoke the Moon needs to be dressed in a little boy's and miners outfit, make sure it is a white outfit and use perfumes and nice incenses and wear a silver ring. Make your moves fast, talk nice, ask nice questions and hold a silver brazier. You invoke the Moon on the fourteenth night of the month as he's fully round and bright and attached to good fortune, you approach the Moon with your face as your saying:

Peace be upon you O Moon the joyful Master, the Holy, the Cold, the moderate in humidity, the beautiful, Key of the Stars, and the master of them all, the light in movement, the one with shiny light, the bright, the happy, the commendation, full of praise, the happy king, the knowledgeable in religion, the thoughtful of things, the expert, the kind ruler, the passionate for fun, the passionate for joking and playing, the proprietor of prophets, the possessor of news, the hard in keeping secrets, the generous, the openhanded, the merciful, the great, you are the closest to us in the orbit, you are the greatest in harming and in benefiting us, you are the establisher between planets, the carrier of the light, you are the fixer of all misfortune befalling us and without your existence everything gets damaged, you are the first of everything and you are the last of every thing, you have the honor and dignity on all the other planets. I also ask you in the name of SILYAEEL the ruling king of your matters, to have mercy on my submission and my humbleness to you in the name of Allah that you obey and in his sultanate to grant my requests from you, here I call you in all your Names in Arabic KAMAR, in Persian MAAH, in Greek SAMAEEL, in Roman SALEENY, in Indian SOUM, answer me.

Then mention your request. Then repeat the invocation as you are bowing while adding the incense throughout. This incense is the incense of the little orthodox and it is made of twenty eight ingredients starting with five ounces of each of walnut, asparagus, licorices, mastic, myrtle, then two ounce of elecampane, myrrh, herbaceous plant, jufube, spikenard, chestnut, bush-grass, saffron, then fifty pumpkin seeds, four ounces of henna root, three ounces of iris root, roman spikenard, Indian cedar, peeled pine, then six ounces of Persian rockrose, dried apple skin, rose blossoms, two pounds of thickened fruit juice, two pound of seedless raisins, five pounds dates, five pounds honey and you add cooked basil when you mix them all and grind and kneed then you shape them in the size of the hazelnut and you use it when you need for incense. You need also to sacrifice a small calf. You light a fire till the smoke rises all the way to the sky as we mentioned before then you burn the calf. If it is a female sheep first sacrifice it then burn it the same way and eat its liver, when you are done your wish will come true.

This is the ideology for invoking the planets and their sacrifices, which was done by the Sabian's whenever they needed something from each planet. According to them each planet gives whatever is in its nature to give. For instance if it is happy it gives happiness and also the opposite, they also say to be cautious of invoking the planets when they are facing east and in the praiseworthy quarter of the circled orbit. You may ask the planet when it is rising, at night because then the invocation is more likely to succeed because the connecting power is easier and stronger and never ask a planet that is not ready to be approached because then the consequences cannot be prevented.

The Sabians use these invocations to this day and they have their own horrible opinions about the planets religion like slaughtering children. Every time the orbit rose with the world eight ranks or dropped down eight they slaughter a child and they claim that Hermes has ordered them so and that is what they call the Trismegestus which means the Thrice-wise, because he was a king, a prophet and a wiseman.

They also never sacrifice during their prayers at their temples any white or black rams, or any that have a broken bone or with damaged horns or one eyed and if they do sacrifice it they look at the liver if it was touched or hit with a knife they say that the owner of the sacrifice will have a catastrophe. Then they boil the liver and cut it into pieces and give a piece to everyone that is present and attending the prayer at the temple. They call Mars; Mara Simya, which means the Blind God and according to them he became blind from the extreme violence and every time he intends to do evil he cannot see. They gave it the figure of a man with a sword in his right hand and in his left hand a torch of fire. So he wipes out the world with the sword and with the other he burns it all. That is why it is valuable to the Sabbaticals and they sacrifice for him because they fear his violence. They sacrifice to him when the Sun enters Aries because it his sign and also if it entered Scorpio they sacrifice to him.

They also have what they call the youth test and that is every boy that is born among them without freedom then becomes free they take him and put him in a house they like. They put a piece of ebony wood in a brazier; they speak some words over it. Then they put it under the boy's shirt. If it bites him in his back they know that he is diseased, so they do not allow him in the temple to pray. If the fire bites him from the front he was not allowed to the temple to pray either and that is because of the fear of that he might have committed a sin from behind or front, but if he passes the test he is freed of all faults. Then he enters another dark temple where he is blindfolded and the priest of the temple puts a red headband on his head and some clothes made of the sacrifices that were made for him. Then he puts close to his right foot a bowl with fire in it and by his left foot a bowl that has water in it. The boy's mother on the other hand brings a rooster and sits at the entrance of the temple. Then the priest takes a copper, drinking cup, with fire in it and starts threatening the boy to swear and say their secret prayer and it is a private prayer for the Sun that protects them all. Then he releases the boy from his bonds and his mother sacrifices the rooster for him. Then they untie and open his eyes and the boy looks like a bird that lost his sight. So he falls and starts shivering and his mother takes him and puts some clothes on him.

That is why no one who leaves their belief and goes to another belief ever speaks of their secret because the priests instructs them, that whom ever reveals the secret of the Sabines or hints at it dies at that moment. The boy gets sealed on his way out of the temple between his index finger and thumb with a seal that has a figure of a monkey and hoopoe on it.

They also say that the best sacrifice for Saturn is the bull because it is from the good creatures. They glorify the crown on his head of horns and they say that the bulls are the best cattle and the best sacrifices. They sacrifice the bulls especially after feeding it grass that virgins collect at sunrise and they come back from different places to complete the secret that they have been told. The bull has to be without white hairs at all on his body and they put a golden chain on his eyes that wraps around his horns. They say that this is also done according to Hermes' words. When they decide to sacrifice the bull they say that the bull does not resist and there is no need to tie him up. Then they start in front of him to pray with incense and the prayer is a Greek prayer. Then they approach the place of sacrifice so he puts his horn on the side of a round small hole and the slaughterer cuts off the head in one motion he does not go over the same spot with the knife again. Then they put the head up high and they try to translate the movements of the tongue, ears, lips and eyes then they look at the blood that is in the hole, how yellow it is and foamy and what starts to form of buttery foamy shapes, so they can tell from that what goes on in their country because the country for them is Saturn and what Saturn started of rotation gets back to it and this sacrificing happens when the Sun moves into Taurus. This bull has been mentioned in the Torah in the story of the bull that ran away from being sacrificed from Beni Anoon's farm.

☞ Ghayat Al-Hakim ☞

The Sabian's use the exudation with alcohol and dust salt in the faces of their sacrifices, to alert and shudder them so it spreads the blood in their bodies with moving and clarify it.

They also have what they call the Heavenly Treasury. It is a temple that is forbidden to the public and nobody can see that there is a well within it. When the Sun enters the sign Leo they bring a boy from the cypress region. They get him dressed as we described earlier, he comes to the temple and they take him into places with trees, flowers and basil so he can feel happy. Then they make him drink till he is drunk and they carry him to the temple at night to the well and they soak him in sesame oil and dried red roses that they have collected for that purpose and they feed him in a bottle seven different mixtures of mustard, lentil, chickpeas, rice, legume that looks like lentil called Maash, lupine and wheat. On the twenty eighth day of the crescent of the month May, they snuff and sneeze him after he passes out. They go out at night to a deserted road and they separate the head from the body. They bury the body and they carry the head to Kady monastery and put it on the back of an image of stone, according to them the head starts to howl a harsh howl, then they figure out from it if the number of the Sabian's will grow or not and if the country will approach them or not. They say that the one that taught them this is a wise man his name was Buburtheem Al-Burhomy that died in India that is why they call the people from India Al-Barahimah. They have so many similar and other issues that are very hard to include in this book and it would be off our subject.

Chapter Eight

THE NABATAEAN PEOPLE CLAIM that the Sun has sole influence on the world. But then they learned that the Moon has its own influences too, without the need of the Sun's influence or any of the other seven planets. They say that all planets follow the Sun in action and they completely obey it, bow to it and praise it day and night. The Sun is the eternal era and they all continue praising it, in actions and influence because all influences belong to the Sun. The seven planets share in some actions of the Sun. So as the other fixed stars which are considered slaves of it. They all praise and bow to it. Beside their own individual influences, the Nabataeans have their prayer to the Sun and that prayer goes like this:

All prayers, praises, commendation and glorification to our bright, great, magnificent Sun God. Granter of life to all that lives on the face of the earth. Most luminous of all with its light, the one that shines on the world and holds us all with your divine strength, you are high in places you are great in your sultanate, you are full of light, wisdom, understanding, power, mightiness, greatness, and goodness. The creator of all creators, the extender of all that extends, the existence of all that exists, the strength of all that is strong, generous in actions, openhanded in giving, the solvent in his skies. Peace be upon you the glorious, the greatest, the commandant, your worshipfulness, the open-handed, we are all bound for you in our prayers, we all are faithful in our worship unto you, we all mean to get close to you because you are the shelter, the instrument for us, you are happiness, you are the preserver, you are our worship, you are our creator, you are our founder, you give us life, you are our last hope, we lean our backs to you and to your name we surrender, so your name becomes like unto heaven, you became a shelter for us from our enemies and our protector of all who means harm for our desires and to your servant the Moon the obeying king unto you, the glorifying of your power, the bower, the eternal obeisance, you provide the Moon with the light and give it strength, it always follows you in the universe to obey your glory, to rush for you worshipfulness, the monk always to you, without languishing or twinkling or any one moment of negligence. Peace, prayer and thankfulness are upon all of you from us, you the eternal of all eternity and age of all ages. Amen, Amen.

In the book of Abu Bakr Bin Wahshiyah under the name Nabataean Agriculture he mentions a prayer for Saturn and he says "Be aware of the evilness of this god if it is descending or rising or when it is east of the Sun or hidden with the Sun's rays or when it is in the middle of its retrogradation. Then you need to pray this prayer that I am about to inform you of, yet before that you need to cense its image with old leather, grease, dirt and dead bats. Also burn to it fourteen dead bats and mice, take the ashes bow with them before its image. Then bow to it on a black rock or black sand. With this you can avoid its evilness because he is the reason for all damages and misfortune and the reason behind all cries when he is mad, he is the god of all poor and troubled people, all jailed, misery.

poverty and sadness. But when he is in a good mood he gives lasting and long life, great name, wealth, money and makes the next generations of kids and grandkids inherit that too till all eternity and his good mood is when its on the east or in the middle of a straight line or when he is at his fastest speed and rising to his glories phase".

He also claimed that Daghreeth prayed this prayer to Saturn's image and he asked the image for something and the image has guided him to what he wants, and the prayer is to say:

All praises, all glory, all prayer, all devotion from us to you as we stand on our feet straight to our old, live god that was and still is the unity in goodness to all things that he is everlasting in the sky, effective in his power, the mighty in solitude, pride and greatness whom surrounds all, things forceful, who sees the unseen and every thing on earth belongs to you, you are the one that gave life to earth from its own life and it exists as long as you exist, you are the one who provided earth with water and with your power, the water stayed and lasted, you made the water run, the water became alive and cold like unto your sultanate over the plants. You made the land heavy with your weight and movement and if you desire you can make everything different but you are wise and function with the strength of wisdom, you the knowledgeable, you the mover of all with power. Bless you the god of heavens and all others, may all your generous names be glorified and purified, we worship and pray for you, we ask you in the name of all your names, that your gratitude and generosity will remain in our minds as long as we are alive and accompany our bodies and when we are dead so you will keep harm away and the worms off our flesh because you are a merciful old god, no mercy for your toughness, there is no regret for your injustice, your so patient, slow in actions, you are the god that when you give no one can stop you if you forbid to give. You are the only god within your powerful sultanate, you are the god of the planets and the stars that rotate in their own orbits, they all fear the sound of your movement and we ask you to protect us from your anger and keep your violence away from us, have mercy on us from your greatest evil. We ask you to keep your forces away from us in the name of your attributed names that whoso ever begs you for mercy you grant mercy, be merciful on us and be pleased with us in the name of your attributed names your highest name the valuable the great, we ask you to be merciful with us.

This is the prayer according to the book of Ibn Wahshiyah about the Nabataeans. We have mentioned this about the past generations that talked about the planets and their nature to show you how the worshipping of these planets were allowed and encouraged by these groups but in our religion and culture using this information is disbelief in Allah that is why we were ordered to kill the magicians in our culture because they use and work in a field that disbelieves in Allah, yet we have mentioned all this as an example but without getting off the main subject and in a way to reveal the ideologies of the other groups and their beliefs. I advise who reads my book not to fall in these beliefs because there are a lot of people with no belief in this world and in revealing such secrets I do not want it to encourage people to disbelieve in their main belief in Allah.

Chapter Nine

THE PHILOSOPHER ARISTOTLE MENTIONED in the book that he wrote for Alexander the Great called Al-Istamatis, how to bring the strength of the planets and the names of each of the planet's spirits. The spirit of Saturn is called BRIMAS and he is divided into six parts, each part is in a different direction and each part has a different name, so Saturn's spirit always calls his parts and gathers them from the six different directions. He starts with the top part and he calls it TOS, the bottom part and is called KHROOS, the right part is called CIYOOS, the left is called DIRIYOOS, the front is called TAMUS and finally the back part is called DOROOS and there is one spirit who gathers all the parts for the Spiritual rotations, movements and their talismanic position in the orbit and that one is called TAHITOOS then all that was original and the kind of spirits gets gathered in one and that one is the one that is called BRIMAS.

The Spirit of Jupiter is called DAMAHOS, the upper spirit is DARMAS, the bottom is MATEES, the right is MAGHEES, the left is DAREES, the front is TAMEES and the back is FAROOS. The spirit that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called DAHIDAS and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called DAMAHOS.

The spirit of Mars is called DAGHDIYOS, the upper spirit is HAGHEDES, the bottom is GHIDYOS, the right is MAGHRAS, the left is ARDAGHOS, the front is HANDIGHYOS and the back is MAHANDAS. The spirit that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called DAHIDMAS and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called DAGHIDYOS.

The Spirit of the Sun is called BANDALOS, the upper spirit is DAHIMAS, the bottom is ABDULAS, the right is DAHIFAS, the left is ATIYEFAS, the front is MAGHNAMEOS and the back is GHADEES. The spirit that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called TAHIMAREES and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called BANDALOS.

The Spirit of Venus is called DIDAS, the upper spirit is GHIYLOS, the bottom is HIYLOS, the right is DAMAYIS, the left is ABLIMAS, the front is BASLAMOS and the back is ARHOS. The spiritual that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called DAHTAREES and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called DIDAS.

The Spirit of Mercury is called BARHOYAS, the upper spirit is AMIRAS, the bottom is HIYTES, the right is SAHEES, the left is DAREES, the front is HELEES and the back is DAHDEES. The spirit that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called MAHODEES and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called BARHOYAS.

The Spirit of the Moon is called GHARNOS, the upper spirit is HADEES, the bottom is MARANOS, the right is MULTAS, the left is TIYMAS, the front is RABEES and the back is MINALOS. The spirit that is responsible for their rotational movements and their talismanic position in the orbit is called DAGHAYOS and the responsible spirit for all the organizing and the original is the one that is called GHARNOS.

That is what Aristotle mentioned in his book about the spirits names and claimed that they are divided to the earth's six directions so they have a complete coverage of the earth's different regions. I want you to know reader that these are the names of the planets that the people actually use when they invoke the planets and no other names. So when Aristotle said that some of these spirits flow each in every direction of every region to specific people is absolutely correct. To have different talismans and fortunes each require a different call, approach, talismans and unusual influences because some can provide with money and some takes away wealth; some give, some take and there are some that prevents and some that motivate.

Some of the spirits have certain bodies that they incarnate in. They have in certain regions their men that they get hold of and overflow their spirits using their bodies where they guide them to their knowledge and influence however and wherever they need when it meets their core and nature.

Aristotle said "If you like to bring from these spirits what you need of their regions, you need to call each planet what they have only in their region and on certain days so you need to rely on the knowledge I am about to share with you."

"To ask a specific need of Jupiter you need to approach it on Thursdays when the Sun enters Sagittarius or Pisces or when it drops down to the Moon at faces the Head of Aries or when it faces the Sun. Then you need to build a clean house, furnished with the best you can afford. You stay in that house alone and that becomes your temple.

Then make as much as you can of sweet kind of food that is made with honey, butter, nut oil, sugar. Make some hard candies and some soft that is also made of butter, milk, sugar and saffron. Then put a big table in a corner of the house on top of another solid stable table, then put in front of you a brazier made of one of the metals that is specialized with the planet. Then put on the first table musk, camphor, sandalwood, a triangle of all scents and expensive perfumes, rose of Jericho and mastic. Then arrange the items as they are and put on the other table the hard and soft desserts and you put in the middle of that a braided candle and beside that four open baskets full of bread and cold meat grilled and cooked made of lambs meat, chicken, hen and all kind of beans.

Beside each basket put a full bottle of wine and a clean glass and good smelling basil between each basket. Then cense on one side with the sandalwood and on the other hand with the Mastic, on the other side of the table. Then you invoke, while alone, these words Damahos, Armas, Helees, Maghas, Adrees, Tamees, Furoos, Dahidas, Afraus, Kayikeers.

These are Jupiter's spirits in the six directions of its orbit and Afraus the Wise said that the meaning of these words are Come along all spirits united and in harmony, smell all these beautiful smells and eat from this food and use these incenses.

You repeat these words seven times; you leave the house for one hour on the sixth time and call them again for the seventh time they come to you looking and dressed in their best. Then you ask them for what you want and wish of wisdom and knowledge and they grant you the wishes and you will be covered with their spiritual power. Then you gather your friends to eat that food, drink the wine and use the pleasant incense and smoke.

This is the Roman rulers invocation for the spirits and it is one of their important secrets and of their holy days and prayers that they celebrate each year.

To ask a specific need of Mars you need to approach it on Tuesdays when the Sun descends to Aries which is Mars's home or when the Moon is well aspected and is facing Mars. Then you go out to a desert that has plenty of fruitful trees. You bring with you a sacrifice, make it a sheep or a cow; also bring a brazier with plenty of coal and incense that is made of myrrh, carob and black mulberry and a basket that has food, the best kind of desserts and a pitcher of wine.

Then sit under one of the trees and release the sacrifice from your hand, burn the incense and say Daghidos, Haghydees, Ghidyos, Mighdas, Ardghos, Hidghidees, Mihindas, Dahidmas.

Then you say: This sacrifice and the food is for all of you. Accept it and put it where you desire. Then you take the sacrifice under the tree and cense it with the incense and then you slaughter it, clean it and grill the liver. If you grilled the whole sacrifice and prepared it then take it out and lay it on the sacrifice's skin like a table cloth then you call and say This is your sacrifice and your food, come and smell it and eat from it.

Then a red spirit will come that looks like a torch of fire and it passes by the food and smells it and burns some of it.

Once you see that ask the spirit for what you want and ask for help and support in things. If the spirit disappears, then go to the food and use of it as much as you wish and ask for things you desire. Maybe you would get it and maybe not because this spirit is a star in its core but because it is known for being moody where it always agrees and disagrees on things almost instantly so you never know with it in what mood it might be that is this spirit's special nature. So if you had to eat of the food then you might be better off to just go back home at that point.

To ask a specific need of the Sun you need to approach it when it descends to Leo's sign or when the Moon descends fifteen degrees of Aries or nineteen degrees of it and that is on Sunday. When that happens, prepare a clean house furnished with the best furniture that you can afford. Then get seven gold statues. If you cannot afford gold statues then make them of wood. If they are made of gold decorate them with red rubies and jewels. If it was from wood then dress them in expensive red silk and decorate them with red rubies and gold and put them in the middle of the house in one line and between each of the statues' hands a tray that has loaves of flaky bread, soft and hard candies that are made of ripe dates. Put in the middle of each tray a cup and bottle of wine, a plate of condiments and a plate that has spices and scents like Musk, camphor and Amber. Cense the house with basil. Then light a big candle and sit in front of the statues on a high bed and say Bandilos, Dahimas, Abdulas, Dahifas, Atefas, Maghmoos, Ghadees, Tahimarees.

Wish for what you want and eat with your friends the food and drink the wine then leave the house and your wishes will come true.

To ask a specific need of Venus you need to approach it when the Sun descends to the head of Pisces sign or the Moon is in Cancer and that is on Friday. Then you wash up, perfume yourself, and your clothes, then enter a bathroom or go under a palm tree or any other tree and bring with you a ram and a razor and say Didas, Gheloos, Hamiloos, Damarees, Teymas, Samloos, Arhos, Hatarees.

Ask for what you need and wish for anything because you could be granted everything even magic, tricks and cunning privileges if you wish for it because Venus is known to grant such wishes when you approach her. As you only need to wish what is in each planets nature to be able to get that wish.

To ask a specific need of Mercury you need to approach it when the Sun drops down to the Capricorn which is the beginning of the Persian year. Then you need to get a golden chair with a golden brazier on top of it in an empty clean house and cense with sandalwood, myrrh, bush-grass, carob and elecampane. Put the golden tray in front of you and get seven goats and prepare a wooden stick in a way that when you hit each goat you can kill it in one strike. Then you need to do that once for each goat in a row then you burn the incense and say Barhoyas, Ameras, Hatees, Sahees, Derayis, Hatees, Dahrees, Maghodees. Separate the skin of the meat then put all the goat's fat around the tray after cleaning it. You repeat the words but this time as you are veiled all the way to your eyes and censing in the same time. Then take the skinned off meats and cook it in one big pan with vinegar and you prepare of the food what you need and you put it in baskets and you exceed the greetings to the spirits and ask for what you need and they will give you what they are specialized with only.

To ask a specific need of the Moon you need to approach it when the Sun is on the top of Cancer or when the Moon is facing the Sun and that is Aries sign and upon Sunday at the sunset. You should be all washed up, having perfumed yourself and your clothes with pleasant incense. You go to the desert and you can have people with you and each one of you should bring with them a ram and a sharp knife and incense that is made of bush-grass, almond, carob, elecampane, myrrh and lean sandalwoods.

You need to be prepared with lots of food in baskets. Light up a great fire of wood. Put the food baskets opened from the top by the fire and sit around that. Then the one that will bring the spirits needs to take the ram and go to a water spring with trees around. Then he cuts the ram with the knife and throws some incense in the fire and says Ghandoos, Hadees, Maranos, Maltas, Tymas, Rabees, Menalos, Daghayos, Gharnos. Then he sacrifices the ram as do each one of the others then they let go of their rams till the spirits lead tells them so. Then the one bringing the spirits leaves the sacrifice and goes back to where the fire is and throws some more incense and calls the spirits. Then he stops talking for an hour. Then he goes back to his friends and starts skinning off the sacrifices and censes all the parts, like the leather, heads, feet and leave them in a clean place and don't eat any of those.

Then they grill the meat with the guts in it. Once it is cooked, put it with the baskets around the tree and hang on the tree colored fabric with all different colors. Then the bringer of the spirits by himself alone burns the incenses and calls the spirits three times and asks for what he wants from them and for his friends.

To ask a specific need of Saturn you need to approach it when the Sun descends to Capricorn's sign or the Moon is in Sagittarius. You make a statue with feet made of iron and put on it colored clothes, green, black and red. Then take that and go to the desert under a fruitless tree and you have your sacrifice with which is a cow or calf and an incense made of a black cats brain, its guts, carob, myrrh, juniper and you say Brimas, Tos, Khroos, Kiyos, Ghardiyos, Tamoos, Riyoos, Taheed, Seyrah, Mandool and it means "come spirituals this is your sacrifice" then ask for what you desire and would come true and all this is what was mentioned about the planets invocations in this book that is called Al-Istamatis.

Chapter Ten

ARISTOTLE MENTIONED IN HIS BOOK which he called Al-Istamatis and wrote to the Alexander four descriptions of beads that helps in forming talismans and what the spirits knowledge requires. He called the first one the Bead of Damatees. You use this bead as a stone for your ring and whoever sees or looks at this ring must submit, obey and disgrace for you and accept your orders and if you used it as a seal for a letter and sent it to a king or anyone else. They shiver and tremble as they look at it and they obey your wishes and orders. If you pointed at a disobedient giant, he would immediately obey and surrender to you. This is the specialty of the bead and the color of it is red.

The way to make this bead is by taking a small amount of red rubies. Grind it and add to it one carat of diamond that got grinded with lead, two carat magnesia, two carat sulfur and one carat gold. Put all this in a melting pot and heat it up slowly till they all melt and become runny. The diamond melts the ruby, the magnesia melts the diamond, the sulfur melts the magnesium and the gold melts all those up.

When it is all melted and runny like water, take the melting pot off the heat and let it cool. When you take the mixture out you will find it a jewel that is mixed in colors but mostly cloudy muddy colored. Put that aside, then take an equal amount of lion brain, fat of a tiger and a blood of hyena. Melt the fat and mix the brain in it, then pour the blood on them till the color becomes dusty and be very careful not to touch this mixture with your hands or let any get on you clothes and be careful not to breathe it because it is poisonous. It is the same poison that Hetrutees drank and it tore him apart and made his skin fall off.

When the mixture settles down put it aside, then take an equal amount of yellow golden metals, yellow sulfur and ginger about the weight of five carats each, grind them and boil them. Then add that to all the mixtures you have done, this will melt all together and will balance it. After mixing it very fine, put it in a little cup made of clay then heat that up slowly as it starts to melt like wax. When it does look like wax, take it off the heat till it cools and that is the mixture that helps in every charm and talisman and grants you all your needs.

The second bead is called the Head of Al-Istamatis and it works for amulets for stopping rain, cold and snow from falling on troops going to fight. It keeps nature and other obstacles away from harming any requester, his friends and his rides. This bead is dust colored and the way it is done is by taking two carats of iron. Melt it with white bush-grass. Once it is melted add one carat of silver, one carat of lead. After all is mixed well together remove it from the heat and mix it with the spirits spirit. The way to do that, is by taking bones of the hand and feet of a pig, clear them of any meat and nerves and cook it with water and salt then dry them and grind them and melt an equal amount of the bones with mandrake and fry them and put it in a pot of clay.

Keep doing this till you fill the pot with the mixture. Then put it on a faded fire that burned for a long time for one full night and that will make it melt all the way through then take it and cool it and grind it some more and add it to pure red golden metal and grind it and mix it with human blood for one full day.

Then melt the first mixture with this by pouring it slowly till it all mixes in and the spirits are harmonized then take it out and cool it. You will find the color of it is dusty. Lathe it round gently and charm it with words of what you need for three days and put it up and any time you need to stop the rain, cold or snow some where, you say the words and lift your right hand with your beads to the sky and all that stops, and you will have a complete amulet that is made of the strength of the spirits spirit.

Aristotle called the third bead the Bead of Al-Istamatis and it is a special amulet that you can carry with you in battles, wars with enemies to make the enemies swords, weapons and spears freeze and miss their targets and the color of this bead is black and the way it is done is you take five carats of iron that is melted with sulfur and you add white sulfur, magnesia, tin powder and that will make the mixture becomes white like silver, it will eat up the dirt in it and purify the core of it. Then you take an equal amount of pig's fat and brain, melt and mix them together with the blood of a black raven. When it cools off it thickens and looks like yogurt. Then take two carats magnesia, one carat of grinded diamonds, one carat pure yellow golden metals, one carat of yellow sulfur. Grind all that and add it to the first thickened mixture and heat it up in a clay pot. They will melt and look like wax. Take it off the heat and leave it cool it will become like a stone put that aside. Then take from the same iron you melted five carat and half carat of each of silver, gold and copper. Melt them all together and add the other mixture in slowly till it mixes in well with the heat and the fire eats the dirt up and clears it. That is how the spirits harmonize together and becomes runny like water. Then remove it from the heat. You will find once it is cooled, to be plain little soft in the core then lathe it round and invoke it for three days with your request then carry it with you because as long as it is with you, no metal, swords, spears nor arrows will ever hurt you or any of the people around you.

The fourth bead he called the Bead of Ghidamatees he used that to bind the soldier's desires of marriages and adultery because adultery and getting close to women in the military is a huge misfortune and it causes the enemy to win with great victory. This bead is white in color and the way it is made is by taking five Dirham of lead, one dirham of copper and iron that is melted with white sulfur, half dirham of silver. Then you melt them and add the lead to it, once it is melted all down to a smooth texture, take half a carat of magnesia and diamonds and half dirham of yellow sulfur and four carats of red golden metals grind them all and add it to the first mixture slowly till all is well mixed and you leave it to cool. Then you make a spirit for it and that is by taking an equal amount of deer fat and horse brain. You melt the fat with the brain and add bird blood to it till it thickens, then you add to that one dirham melted pig feet grinded very fine with little tin, half dirham magnesia, one dirham yellow sulfur, one and half dirham red golden metals, grind them all and add it to the brain and the fat that you mixed first with the blood. Put it on the fire till it melts then take it off the heat to cool. Once it is cooled you add your first mixture to this slowly till it is runny like water then you get it off the heat and let it cool then you lathe it round then you invoke it with your words for three days. Then make two statues of copper of a man and a woman then you put the bead on the male figure statue and you make them with their backs to each other then you take a iron needle and you say the words of your request on it three times then you hammer it in both of the figures chests till it goes all the way through. Then you put these statues in a small iron coffin you say your words on it first day and night then you take that with you and that will bind the soldier's desires and adultery feeling as long as you have it with.

The book of Aristotle also explains that mixing these amulets is very dangerous and the person that is doing it should be extremely careful because they are poisonous. Do not try to touch them with your hands or smell them. There is also an amulet that will protect you from the poison and this is the way it is done; take one carat of each of the Indian sandalwood with the myrtle seeds, mandrake seed, musk mellow seeds, one carat of musk and half a carat of betel nut, seedless raisin and white sandalwood. Grind them all together and kneed with pounded myrtle water and make wicks and dry it. When you're working with these potions then you use that on your nose, ears, lips and mouth and veil your face with this when you grind and mix ingredients. As for your hands there is a different amulet to protect your hands from these poisons and that is done by taking an equal amount of laurel seed, mahaleb seed and gentian and four pieces of elderberry oil and rabbit blood, you grind what needs to be grinded and you kneed it with elderberry oil and rabbit blood and you put that in a bottle to use when you want to touch any of these potions then you wipe your hands thoroughly with the oil and then touch the materials and poisons because then it won't harm you.

Aristotle described in his book that is called Asnotas that the spirits of the amulets could exceed and violate the maker by harming him or making him ill and that because the close connection between these spirits and the nature of certain illnesses and if that happens the sick person needs to drink this potion that is made of half ounce of human blood melted with two small amounts of almond oil and two small amounts of rabbit brain and mix them well with one ounce donkey urine. You drink an amount of two dirham of that mixture for seven days in a row, first thing in the morning on an empty stomach and that will clear every thing that the spirits amulet influenced the person and all his bad moods and any other kind of influence the other seven planets may have. This drink will settle the person's spirit and fix any harm.

Alexander has asked Aristotle in his book that he called Malatees about Kinas the wise Indian man that had the knowledge of talismans and if that man actually had a book where he mentions the way to make these talismans so Aristotle wrote this book that he called Malatees to answer Alexander's question and he based it on Kinas's knowledge of the talismans and some of the ways to do them. He started by saying that Kinas was known to be with the spirit and he lived to be five hundred and forty years old and he lived in the times of Adriyanos the tyrant, fighter king. So Kinas made talismans that bring the divine world with the material worlds with spirits that are spread in the world and with these talismans he was trying to gain this king and the other king's sympathy. He also made other different talismans, from these other talismans there is this one that he called the Daghetoos and he made it to connect men with women and the way it is done, you take half a carat of deer brain, half carat of melted fat tail of an ewe, one carat of camphor, half carat of rabbit brain, you gather the brains in a melting pot on a coal till it all melts. Then you add the fat tail of the ewe to that till it melts too, then you add the powdered camphor then you remove it from the heat and you make a statue of wax that's empty in the middle that has previously never been used for anything. You wish for the woman whose love you want. Then you make a hole all the way through and you start pouring the mixture into the statue as you are saying: Dahiyayees, Ghanmuwades, Nakaghayes, Dirolayes. Then you take a one small amount of round white sugar and add that to the statue. Then you get a fine silver nail and you stick it in the chest area not all the way through and you say Hadoraas, Tymaroos, Hanitoos, Amiraas. Then you wrap that statue in a cloth of white material and white silk and you tie the cloth with a silk thread under the chest area then you bring the two sides of the thread together and tie in seven knots and say after each knot Arghonas, Hadmiyos, Finoras, Armithas. When you are done put the statue in a new small container made of clay then dig a hole in the house of the requester of this talisman and bury the statue straight up where the head is up and the feet are down. Then cover it with dirt, then take a small amount of bush-grass and grass, put them on fire and say as you burn them; Bahimras, Omarlees, Kadamedoonis, Finores. You excite the spirit heart of that woman with love to that man and you bring her heart's spirit with the power of these spirits of spirits and their names are BAHATORES MILYORAS, OLIYOS, MATINOS. Once you do this the women that this talisman was made for will get excited with the love spirit and won't settle, sleep, awaken, sit, think or do anything till she's driven to that man quietly and obediently and with no control over herself, pulled with the power of the talisman to that place that has the talisman buried in, whether she knows about the talisman or not she be pulled into the place and that man.

Another talisman gets made to be put in food or drinks and the way that is done is by taking two grains weight of rabbit noses, two grain weight of hyena brain, three grain weight of melted fat tail of ewe, two grain weight of amber, two grain weight of musk, three grain weight grounded camphor and one small amount of the requester of this charms blood. Put the blood in a melting pan and heat it up. Once it is hot add the noses, the brain and the fat tail to it and mix them, then add the musk, camphor and amber and mix all that, then remove it from the heat. Then you mix that with wine or in sweets or bread dough or with the meat of birds or any other boiled meat or any food or drink you desire. Then put some on your hand and wish for what and whom you made it for and take with some small amounts of bush-grass and grass and burn that and as you are burning it say Diyloos, Ahidaas, Batrodlees, Bandolees, Baghyllas. With this you will have that certain woman's spirit get so excited with these mixtures and she will be pulled with these spirit's powers that she can not hold still and it will keep her sleepless restless and thoughtless till she comes obeying to the power of these spirits and their names are BIHYNOLSASER, HIYADEES, KIDMOOS, ANDALEES. When you're done with that and you invoked and censed it add just a little of that mixture in the food or drink so that the person who eats or drinks it leaves nothing behind. Make sure to feed it to the person you love. Once the food goes through the person's body he/she will get so excited that they won't be able to get hold of themselves till the one this talisman is made for comes obeying and submissive. If it was very hard for you to feed this to the person then all you need to do is to change your intentions in your request and point out as you make your wish that the person you made this for is unable to eat it or drink it. You do keep the potion as it is and you also take it put it on your hand with some bush-grass and grass and as you are burning it you say Adiroos, Batiroos, Briyodees, Fardaroos I have excited the heart of this person to this, and moved his/her heart spirit with love, and kept her from sleeping, making decisions, standing or sitting till she comes to this person submitting and obeying thus the spirit's heart of theirs shall be brought to that person with the power of the spirits spirit and there names are MADEES, AWDORAS, MANURAYIS, HANDAROOS. Try then to feed this to the person, if they eat it and it settled in their stomach, then take a small amount of bush-grass and grass and throw it in the fire and let that person say Hamorees, Tidorhes, Ayinmes, Harmas. If he says these words then he/she will come with love obeying and submissive with no control on their souls. Kinas said also that if it was hard to get some blood from the requester to mix in the potion then take two small amounts of hyena blood and one small amount of a ewe blood. Put it in a melting pot and add to it two grain weight of rabbit brain, three grain weights of hyena brain, four grain weights of melted fat tail of an ewe, two grain weights of musk, two grain weight of camphor and two grain weight of rabbit noses. Mix them all and melt them. Once it melts take it off the heat and mix it with food or drink then burn some bush-grass and grass and say on the potion these words Anoraas, Habwaloos, Fancees, Badrolaas excite the heart of this person to this, and move them spirit, keep them from sleeping, awaken them, standing or sitting. Pull and bring them with the power of these spirits and their names are BATIROLEES, BRIYANOS, OBOHEES, WANDOLAS. Then feed it to the requester if it settles in them stomach take one small amount of bush-grass, grass and a hair of the hyena's tail and let the person burn it if they burn it teach them to say Hanodees, Mahreyas, Tidoras, Omiroos then that person's heart gets all exited with love and desire to the other and can't settle till they go to their lovers obeying and submissive.

There is another third amulet that gets burned and the way that is done is by taking a small piece of the hyena's ear, a piece of male rabbit ear, half weight of white cat's pupil of the eye, half weight of white dogs fat, one small weight of bush-grass and grass and like all of them add melted fat tail of ewe. You melt the fat tail of the ewe in a melting pan and add to it all the other ingredients then mix well and add half carat grinded camphor, two carats of white sandalwood and Indian sandalwood that's not leaned, one carat of amber, half carat of musk to the first mixture. Once it is well mixed divide it to seven pieces, then take seven braziers and put coal in them and light them up. Then line the braziers up in front of you and put one of the mixtures on each brazier. When you are done start burning and say Aiyoris, Yatandas, Ahiyoles, Heriyolas excite the heart of this person to this, and move their hearts spirit with love avoid sleep, making decisions, awakening, standing or sitting till they come obeying and submissive, pull and bring them with this spirit's spirit and their names are ALBOWAREES, HIYAKOS, BODYEES, TAWADOS. Then leave and your confident that your talisman will work and that person you used the talisman on will get all excited with love and will not settle till they go to that man or woman.

The fourth of Kinas' amulets is an oil, basil, scent or done on an apple or any other similar items. Here is how it is done, you take two grain weight of rabbit noses, take a goat liver and mix it with bush-grass and put it on fire till it gets inflated and lets go of its water. Then you slice it and squeeze it till all the water comes out in a cup and put it aside in a bottle till you need to use it for this charm. Then you take two grains weight of that liquid with four grains weight of amber, three grains weight of musk add them all in a melting pot on a coal till it all melts. Once it is melted remove it from the heat and put it in a bottle. Then when you need to do your amulet you take one small weight of old pure oil and put it in a melting pot and add to it one grain weight of that liquid mixture till it melts in it. When its all melted take one small weight of bush-grass and grass and burn it under that mixture and say Tiyyroos, Fiyharees, Vitolees, Andraws excite this person for the other, move their heart's spirit to the other with love avoid sleeping, awakening, standing or sitting, pull and bring them to the other with the power of these spirit's spirits and their names are BIKITAROOS, ADILAS, MANHOREES, MANCORAAS. Then take from the oil and if you can spread it on the requester or make them use it as a scent. Every time you use the oil or the scent their spirits will be excited with love and they will not be able to sleep or awaken till they go to their lovers. If you were unable to spread it on the person then make a statue that looks like the person from wax and order them to hold it in hand and to burn with bush-grass and grass for three days at sun rise and to say these words and continue on burning and using the scent because that will move the spirits love and excitement feelings for the other.

If you want you can take basil or an apple and smear of the mixture on it worth of two grains weight of the oil. Then cense with bush-grass and grass on it and say as you're doing this Norous, Andolees, Armolas, Fimarees, excite the heart of he/she and move his/her spirit with love to the other and avoid sleeping, awakening, standing or sitting, pull and bring him/her with the power of these spirit's spirit and their names are BAROLAS, MANTORIS, FEMALOS, BROHOYAS. Then let the person smell the basil. When they do their hearts will overflow with excitement of the spiritual of love and they will not be able to control them selves till they go to the other person. If the person cannot smell the basil, then make the requester to take the statue of the desired person in one hand and small amounts of bush-grass and grass and let him with his other hand throw it into the fire and teach him to say Edidas, Bidorees, Afiyoos, Diryanos and tell the person they need to smell it first because that will move the spirit of the beloved one and excite then with love in their heart and will not settle till they get to their lovers obeying and submissive.

And these are the talismans of the spirits that are called Daitoos that Kinas made to unite men and women.

There is another talisman called Baghees and these talismans are used to sympathy the hearts of kings on their people and make them lean with love and mercies towards them. The way it is done is by taking a wax that was not used for anything before and make a hallow statue in the name of the king you desire. Then you take one carat of a deer brain, two carat of rabbit brain and a small amount of human blood. You mix them all together in a melting pot and add to the mixture half amount of powdered camphor, two carat amber and half carat musk, melt them then mix them well till they are all melted. Then make a hole in the head of the statue, pour your mixture in and leave it to cool. When it is cool, cover that hole with the wax. Then you take four small amounts of human blood, two small amounts of white rooster blood, two small amounts of horse brain, one carat of musk and camphor, one small amount of melted fat tail of a ewe. Put all that in a melting pot. Melt and mix them well, make another hole and pour the mixture in then seal it back after it cools off. Then you take a fine, delicate silver nail that was not used for anything before and poke it in the chest but not all the way through and say Akriyor, Ghidayoos, Yahiylas, Yahidoos. Then you put the statue in a new bowl made of clay; take half of a small amount of powdered bush-grass and grass and a small amount of white rooster's pupil eye. Mix all that together then take the statue and a brazier with coal and go to a hill that has a view of the city, dig a hole as big as the statue and bury it straight where the head of it is up and the feet down straight then put a stone on the top to cover it well. Then put the incense on the fire and say as your censuring Akraros, Manduras, Vilahoos, Ramalees have the mercy of this persons heart in the name of love, friendliness and mercy on this person with the power of this spirit's spirits and there names are BANDORAS, AYINMOOS, KAFINAS, MADLOOS. When you do all this be assured that you will get the mercy and acceptance of this king for all your actions.

There is an opposite charm used to set a king against someone for revenge. Here is how it is done, you make a hollow statue of a wax that has not been used before and then you take one small amount of black cat's gallbladder, half of a small amount of black dog's gallbladder, one small amount of black donkey brain, two carat of aloe, one carat black pepper and one carat myrrh. Grind the black pepper and aloe and you put the brain and the gallbladder in a melting pot you add the grinded pepper and aloe to it and leave it till it melts. Once it is all mixed and melted, make a hole in the statue's head pour the mixture then seal when it cools off. Then take a half of a small amount of black kite's gallbladder, half a small amount of black raven's gallbladder, one small amount of black bat brain, one carat aloe, one carat myrrh, four carat myrtle seed. You mix all this together with the brain and gallbladder in a melting pan on coal till it melts. Once it melts make a hole in the statue and pour the mixture in it then seal it back with the wax once it cools off. Then take a iron nail poke it all the way through in the chest of the statue and as your doing this say Kardilas, Dikayos, Baholees, Baronaas then put it in a new bowl and make a smoke of one small amount of each of black cat's gallbladder and black raven's gizzard and two small amounts of black goat's hoof and black horse hoof. You mix it all together and put it on a coal fire till it smokes and you say as it smokes Matyraas, Ghydorees, Mamulaas, Farhinoos, invest the power of the spirits on the heart of certain king on this person. Don't forget to mention what ever you desire, large or small, so the spirits influences that person with all kinds of torture, discontent, anger and all kinds of revenge and get the spirit's spirit excited with revenge on this person with their power. Those spirits names are BARMOLEES, BASRAS, VIDORAAS, BAHIMOOS. When you do this be assured that your wish will come true.

There is another charm that is called Biraas and make it to get the kings sympathy for women with eternal love. The way it is done is by taking wax that was not used before and make a hallow statue with the name of the king and a second statue also hallow with the woman's name that you want his sympathy for. Then you take the kings statue and you hold it in your hand and make a hole in the head and take one small amount of melted fat from a tail of ewe and one small amount of camphor, one carat of musk, add them all up in a melting pot and melt them with a medium fire. Once it melts you pour the mixture and leave it cool, when it is cool seal it back with the wax. Then you take two small amounts of human blood, two small amounts of deer blood and melted fat of the tail of ewe, one small amount of amber, half a small amount of musk, one small amount of round sugar and two small amounts of white donkey brain. You grind what needs to be grinded then you add all up in one melting pot and melt them on a fire with coal till it is completely melted. Then you open a little hole in the chest of the statue and pour the mixture in and leave it till it cools off, then seal it back with the wax. Then take the other statue and make a hole in the head, then take one small amount of melted fat of the tail of ewe, half small amount of camphor, half a small amount of grounded round sugar. Melt all these ingredients in a melting pot then pour it in the head and leave it till it cools then seal it back with the wax. Then take one small amount of human blood, one small amount of deer blood, half small amount of grinded camphor, half small amount of round sugar, two carat amber, two carat musk, one small amount of local white donkey brain. Gather all this in a melting pot and put it on a fire on coal till it melts. Make a hole in the chest of the second statue and pour it in and seal it back once it cools. Then take two carat camphor, two carat sugar, two carat amber, two carat white rooster brain, one small amount of melted fat of the tail of ewe, grind all and put in a melting pot on a medium fire till it melts. Then leave it to cool and thicken, then take it in hand and make threads like wicks. Then take the statue of the king and the other statue of the woman and make them hug and make the kings hand on the woman's body then tie them with those threads on the top, middle and bottom. Then take a silver nail, poke it from the kings back all the way through the other statues back and say Bihayos, Baliyas, Odriyas, Armolees. Then you wrap both of them in a white cotton cloth and put them in a new white silk cloth and tie it with white silk thread. Then take both sides of the thread and tie it seven ties and you say when you tie Badilahoos, Bahdayis, Obaloos, Manatees, Toranos, Yahygas, Butoraas. Then you put that in a new bowl made with new clay, you carry it to a hill, dig a hole for it and you bury it straight up where the head is up and the feet are down. Then put a stone on the head and seal it with dirt. As you are doing this you cense with an incense that is made of small amounts of each of grass, bush-grass, Indian sandalwood in a brazier with coal fire, you put the incense on the brazier and say Alghidoos, Maltayas, Holees, Minoraas, excite the heart of this king to this woman with love, luck, compassion and high in levels. Move his heart's spirit to her, that cannot stop with the power of this spirit's spirit and their names are BADALIMAAS, ARHAWTHAAS, MANHOREES, BATIYDYAS when you do this be assure that this charm will bring that king to that woman with love so that he will be impatient while away from her and she will have an absolute control of him.

There is another charm that is called Baghiyos and it is made for separation, hostility between men and women. The way it is done is by making two hallow statues of wax that was not used in anything before in the names of the man and woman you want to separate and you do say this statue is for this man and the other is for this woman. Then you start with the man's statue and take one carat of black cat's gallbladder, two carats of pig's gallbladder, one carat black dog's fat, two small amounts of black cat's blood, put all in melting pot on low heat till all melts and mix. Then pour that in the man's statue in a hole you make in the face as a mouth. Then take half a small amount of black dog's fat, half a small amount black dog's gallbladder, mix them together, then pour in the statue. Then take a fine iron nail and poke it in the chest as you say Hodees, Amyalous, Halwanees, Bihyowaras. Then put that statue aside and take the woman's statue and take half a small amount of pinecone, green shell of a walnut, half carat of each of bitter gum and aloe, half a carat of black cat's gallbladder, two carat of pig's gallbladder and one small amount of black dog's gallbladder. Gather all this in one melting pot on a low heat till all melts. Once it is melted do like you did with the first statue and pour the mixture in the opening you made in the face like a mouth. Then take one carat pinecone, two carat of water chestnut, half a small amount of green shell of a walnut, one small amount of black dog's fat, mix all and melt then pour in the hole you made in the statue, then take an iron nail and get it through the chest and say Adnalees, Bliyoraas, Mandorees, Baailiolees. Then put both of the statues in front of you and take a nail and put aside of the man statues chest and the other side to the woman and turn the head of each to the side and take two carats of pinecone and green shell of walnut, half a small amounts of black cat's gallbladder and black dog's fat. Mix and melt all that then cense with it and say as your smoking Mimoraas, Handanos, Bahwalos, you cut and separated the spirit of this man and this woman and raised between them the spirits of hostility and hate, you separate them as these statues separate apart from each other and as you are saying this separate the statues. Then say separate them with the power of the spirits spirit and their names are DIWAS, SWATLEES, BAYALOS. When you are done bury the statues under a fruitless tree and that will cause the separation of these two and hate and anger and hostility in the hearts of both of them.

Kinas has claimed that there were other talismans for the same purposes with a little difference in the ingredients that he had gathered from others that actually tried these charms but because of the difficulties in mentioning all of these talismans in this book would require much repetition and work. I will only mention the most important differences of each of the ingredients.

The talisman of food is a mixture of one carat of black cat's gallbladder, one carat pig's brain, one small amount of black dog's fat, two seeds of green shell of a walnut.

The talisman of incense is a mixture of one small amount of black cat's brain, half a small amount of pig's gallbladder and one carat of its brain, one carat of male black dog, one carat pinecone and one carat green shell of a walnut.

The talisman of incense is a mixture of two seeds weight of pig's brain, three seeds weight of black dog's gallbladder, two seeds weight of pig's fat, two seeds weight of sulfur, two seeds weight of golden metals, one seed weight of green shell of a walnut, a small weight of mercury oil, one small amount of black cat's pupil of an eye, two small amounts of black dog's brain and half a small amount of black dog's tail hair.

This is the sum of the differences and I thought it would be important to mention these talismans because these are spiritual talismans.

Kinas has mentioned a different talisman which is made as a picture on wax that he used to tie to peoples desires and the way he did was by pouring the mixture from a hole in the brain of the statue that is made of wax and by screwing an iron nail in the statue where the desire area is. Then he mixes his spirits from one carat pig's brain, one carat black cat brain and one carat of mandrake seeds.

Kinas also mentioned the way to undo the bound talismans and that is by taking an ounce of brain of an ewe, one ounce deer blood, half ounce human blood, four ounce of a running water that has at least seven different water springs running in different directions, one small amount of horse urine, half a small amount of rabbit canine tooth, one small amount of mandrake seeds. Grind the seeds and the canine tooth, then mix them all and spill it on the corners of four road behind the man that you want to stop his desires and he should not touch any of it, then cense in those locations with one small weight of mandrake, bush-grass and grass and this would unbind the first spirit talisman of binding the desires of someone.

Then Kinas has mentioned another way of unbinding talismans that is done on food and the way it is done is by taking four ounces of deer blood, one small amount of rabbit noses, one small amount of martin brain, one pound of ewe milk, one pound of squeezed myrtle water, mix them all together like we have mentioned before and you make the person that you want to unbind the talisman from drinking it. Then he burns with one small amount of bush-grass and grass and that's how you untie the charm as Kinas used to do it.

Chapter Eleven

NOW I WILL MENTION TO YOU some of the charms that I have gathered from others beside Kinas. There is a charm that you make to tie peoples tongue from any harmful words and turn them to kind words that force others to like and the way that is done is by taking tongue of raven, tongue of frog, tongue of eagle, tongue of viper, tongue of white pigeon, tongue of white rooster and tongue of hoopoe. Grind them all till they are dust. Then take a gem, one carat silver, one carat gold, one carat camphor, one carat tin and one carat aloe. Grind what needs to be grinded and mix it with the first dust of tongues. Then kneed them with honey and lay it on white silk cloth. Then take two hairs between the eyes of a peacock, two hairs between the eyes of a falcon, liver of a hoopoe, a rooster liver, two bones of pigeon wing, two bones of hoopoe wing. Grind them and mix them with yogurt, then lay it on the same cloth. Then make a statue from white wax in your own shape and name it by drawing on the head your name with the shape of the Sun and on the chest draw your name with the Moon then rap it with white silk cloth and put it in the middle of the mixture and tie it with silk threads and take hold of it because you will see wonders.

I have also seen from one of the most brilliant of these talisman makers, mixing spirits and concord and discord between the planets and its called charm of food in love, the way its done you take two small amounts of deer's brain, half small weight of cheetah's blood, one small amount of rabbit noses. Gather and mix them all by melting it with a low heat and this gets fed in small amounts in food or drinks.

There is also a talisman of the incense of love and the way that is made is by taking one small amount of white dog's blood and brain, two small amounts of deer's brain, two small amounts of human blood, gather them with mixing and melting then burn them and that is enough to excite your heart with the spirit of love.

Another talisman done with the spiritual power which rises desires with incense, the way its made is by taking four small amounts of donkey blood, half a small amounts of fox blood, hedgehog blood, add one small amount of phirbiyon and cense with it.

There are mixed incenses made to spread the spirit of separation and hostility and there are four of them;

The first is made by mixing the same amounts of black cat blood, red dog's brain and a fox blood. Then add colocynth and animal charcoal and cense with it.

The second is made with two small amounts of pig's noses and its fats, hawk blood, half a small amount of Egyptian vulture's brain, add nettle seed to the mix with grinded animal charcoal and colocynth seeds, then cense with it.

The third is made with four small amounts of bat brain and kite blood, half a small amount of rabbit noses and fat, add nettle and nut seeds to the mixture then cense with it.

The fourth is composed of one ounce of raven blood and tiger blood, two small amounts of donkey fat and its blood, melt all and add grinded nettle and nut seeds then cense with it.

There is a talisman made with food for hostility, the way it is made is by taking one small amount of grinded wild black cat canine tooth, add a small amount of dry, hard trash then add to food.

The wise man Aristotle said that who knew the dividing of the spirits of mandatory and the assembling of the material and divine world; nothing is hidden for him any more of all the kinds of spiritual powers, the ones that unite and the ones that does not unite, the hostile ones and the peaceful ones, the friendly and the poisonous and all the powers that are harmonized in their core and the harmful in nature beside the neutralization of their effects and knowing the spirits that causes all this.

There are talismans that tie desires that are done with the use of food and by capturing and carrying the spirit of desire away and the number of these potions is seven;

The first is made by taking one small amount of horse brain, pig's fat and the blood of a black cat, half a small amount of colocynth oil, add all and melt after grinding the colocynths oil and mix it in food and feed with it.

The second is made by taking an equal amount of horse brain, pig's fat, the blood of a female hyena, add one carat of it in food after mixing it.

The third is made by taking an equal amount of monkey blood and its brain, stag hoofs and pupil of its eyes, add all and melt, then feed an amount of one carat in food.

The fourth is made by taking two small amounts of donkey brain, half a small amount of pig's fat, half a small amount of horse blood, mix and melt all then add one carat to food.

The fifth is made by taking two small amounts of powdered pig bones, one small amount of peach leaf water, half a small amount of burned female hyena skin, black cat's pupil of the eye, donkey blood, mix and melt and add one carat in food.

The sixth is made by taking an equal amount of a female hyena blood, black cat's blood and buffalo brain, melt all and add in food.

The seventh is made by taking an equal amount of red dog's fat, a raven's blood, mix all and add to food.

There are also talismans that kill with its spirit powers that are made with the use of food and the number of those are seven as well.

The first one is made by taking an equal amount of pig's brain, vermin brain and an equal amount of mandrake seeds. Then you add one carat of it in the food or drinks.

The second one is made with two small amounts of wild black poppy seed, half a small amount of fox blood, half a small amount of human brain, two carat pig's gallbladder, gather all and melt then add the grinded poppy seed then add about one and half carat to food.

The third one is made with equal amounts of human tooth and black cat blood, add mandrake seeds and melt all then put one carat of the mixture in food.

The fourth one is made with equal amounts of pig's brain and black cat blood, melt all then put one carat in food.

The fifth one is made with equal amounts of vermin brain, pig's blood and snake fat, melt all together and add one carat of the mixture to food.

The sixth one is made with two small amounts of cat's urine, two small amounts of camel sweat, half a small amount of colocynth grease, gather all and mix it then put one and half carat of the mixture in food.

The seventh one is made with equal amounts of wild rue water, iris water, human tooth and pig's brain, add all together, melt them, then add one carat in food. And these are the seven killer talismans in their spirits.

In the book that is called The Hadytoos there are ten potions that cause fatal sicknesses:

The first one is made with one ounce of a black cat's urine and one and half a small amount of the salt of that urine, one small amount of mouse brain, one small amount of vermin brain, add all together and put one carat of the mixture in food.

The second one is made with equal amounts of pig's brain, camels sweat and human salt of urine, gather all and add one carat to food.

The third one is made with one small amount of monkey fat, half a small amount of vermin brain, jerboa blood, gather and melt then put one carat in food.

The fourth is made with equal amounts of donkey brain, human tooth, gather and grind then put one carat in food.

The fifth is made with equal amounts of human semen and deer brain, add and melt then put one carat in food.

The sixth is made with equal amounts of donkey brain, rabbit blood and camels sweat, add all up and put one carat in food.

The seventh is made with equal amounts of black cat's brain, bat's brain and hyena fat, add and melt together then put one carat in food.

The eighth is made with equal amounts of a mouse brain; black raven blood and quarter of the total weight of the first items add colocynth grease then put one carat of the mixture in food.

The ninth is made with one small amount of wolf's gallbladder and its brain, half a small amount of mouse blood and black cat's fat gather all and add one carat to food.

The tenth is made with equal amount of monkey brain and human brain, gather and melt then put one carat to food.

These are the ten mixed talismans of the planets that are proven with the spirits power that was mentioned in the Hadytoos book for Hermes, he also had another talisman and he called it the talisman to prevent the harm and evil of the world from people. The way it is done is by taking a heart of a frog and put it in the frogs head till it dries then he adds one carat each of silk threads with farina, kidney bean, gum and dried donkey brain. Hermes claims that this talisman was made by Galen for a king in the old times.

Hermes claimed in that book that the human being has many strange and different kinds of magic that the workers in this field should be careful of what they do and undo with this knowledge. There is a talisman that is called the imagination talisman and the way it done is by taking a whole human body that is fresh and put it in a big pot with eight dirham of fresh opium and you also add human blood and vinegar oil enough to fill the pot and you cover the pot with clay lid and put it on low heat for a one day and one night then you take it off the heat till it cools. You will find when you open it that it became more as fat. Take that fat and use it when you need. It has been said that when you make threads with this fat or put it on something it makes the look of things completely different than what it really is and interferes with people's imagination and makes them see the thing totally different and you need to feed some of it to whom you want them to see things differently.

Then he also claimed that whom ever took a head of any animal he desires and from his fat and some dried nuts and covers that with oil then he put that in a pot and leaves it for a whole day and night on a low heat till it all becomes fatty and uses that on things it is guaranteed that the user will see the picture of things completely different. Also if the head of the animal is different that will change the picture of the outcome of shapes. When you use the animal heads for this potion don't feed from the mixture.

Hermes also said that if you take a fresh human head and put it in a pot with the human's liver, heart, gallbladder then you put with that also the heads of cat, fox, monkey, rooster, hoopoe, raven, kite, bat, goose, martin, turtle and awl. Then you take these twelve heads and cover them with oil in a pot that can hold all this then close it with a clay lid.

On a low heat for three days then take it out after that and drain the liquid in a separate container and seal it. Take the bones and burn them in a separate pot. Mix that ash with dried nuts, black stone and keep it till you need it. You will see that when you use that on any human it will cause the ruining of that humans thoughts, to the extend that he won't know where he is, whom he is with, or even which country he's in. He will imagine many weird things, he will see and hear things. To do that you need to either feed it to him or put it in a drink. You can also use the oil as threads too however you need it. If you wanted to smear it on someone's face, that has a whole different effect on people, that could drive them into weird magical effects.

Hermes also claimed that if you take an equal small amount of dog's brain, mouse brain, and cat's brain and half dirham of sulfur and tar. Gather them and rot them together. Then you took one carat of that mixture and one carat of crane dung and burn it in any location. One who smells that incense will have a craze, fade out, loose his mind and will not know where he is and how he is.

There is another talisman that is made by gathering an equal amount of blood of different animals like dogs, donkeys, cats, bulls and goats. Then you gather and melt them on low heat and add to it small amounts of grinded gold metals and mercury, let the mixture rot with dung in a suitable pot for that. Save the mixture sealed so you don't smell it and who ever burns with one carat of this mixture and the smoke gets in his eyes he will be blind as long as you want him to be and the only way to cure it is by dropping the juice of green coriander with rose oil.

Another talisman to prevent people from talking is made by taking two dirham of rooster's gallbladder, two dirham of wolf gallbladder, four dirham of bat blood, half a dirham of lettuce seed, black poppy and the root of mandrake. Knead all after melting the blood on low heat so it mixes well, dry and grind the rest with aged wine and shape it into tablet sizes that each weighs around one carat and add them into food or drinks. One who eats these, his tongue will be tied where he can't talk at all and the only way to untie it is to chew grease in his mouth.

Another talisman to prevent people from hearing made with food. The way is made is by taking a good amount of mandrake and the same amount of bull gallbladder and goat gallbladder. Mix and grind then putrefy. Take it out after rotting and add one carat in food. This mixture will spread the spirit of deafness where who ever eats it won't be able to hear anything and the only way to untie this charm is by pouring rue juice in his ear.

☞ Picatrix ☞

Another talisman to spread hostility and hatred between groups of people, the way it is done is by taking an equal amount of lizard head, viper head, black dog's fur, black cat's fur, burn all the ingredients in a bowl and when ever any of this powder spreads on a group of people it spreads the spirit of hostility and hate. To untie this charm you need to put one carat of incense in a brazier that is made of two small amounts of hollyhock seeds, one small amount of white pigeon blood and its gallbladder and one small amount of dove's blood and gallbladder. Grind the seed and add it to the blood on a low heat fire. Then make little tablets that each weighs around one carat and that will spread the spirits of friendliness and love and take away any hostility feelings of hate.

A sleeping talisman, the way this talisman is made is by taking an equal amount of half dirham of opium, a strip of mandrake and black anesthetic seeds, one sixth dirham of pleasant smelling nuts, small wood branches and pure sandalwood. Grind and kneed with green coriander juice. Then you get putrefy it so it mixes and unites together and the spirits harmonize in it for the wanted action. Then you feed one carat of the mixture and that is enough to put anyone into a deep sleep.

Another sleeping talisman with that has a more powerful effect; the way this is done is by taking two small amounts of each of hard bent nuts, red anesthetic seeds, mandrake or its bark, black poppy seeds, three small amounts of saffron and one small amount of basswood. Add all and putrefy it for three days. Then use one carat of the mixture in drinks to get the effect of sleeping.

Another talisman for sleeping like the first two, this one is made with equal amounts of opium, mandrake bark, lettuce seed, hard bent nut seeds, rose of Jericho juice, black hellebore and the seed of black poppy. Grind the ingredients very fine and mix with two times of the amounts of each with aged wine and put in a container to putrefy for a couple of days. Then use one carat of the mixture in drinks.

Another talisman for the extreme deep sleeping, the way this is done is by taking an equal small amount of anesthetic seed juice, vaccine juice, green coriander juice, lettuce juice, hard bent nuts juice, black poppy seed juice and wine or any alcoholic juice. Add to this one tenth the total weight of the first ingredients worth opium. Melt the opium, then add fermented fig juice that was distilled at least four times and putrefy the mixture and use about one carat of this because it is very powerful mixture and the spirits power in it is very effective.

A fatal killer talisman added to food, the way to do this charm you need equal amounts of dried gecko, hard bent nuts, black poppy and colocynth grease. Grind and mix all then putrefy the mixture and keep until you need it and the amount you use is one carat of it in food and that is the poison that Galen used to kill the king with.

Another talisman, a sharp fatal killer, is made by decomposing the hearts blood, taking equal amounts of fresh horsetail, phirbiyon and a poisons plant that is called the ground olives. Putrefy all with snake gallbladder then use for revenge because it does make you get revenge fast but without killing.

Another fatal talisman for decomposing body parts and ruining them, is made is by taking as much as you find of the spotted frogs that are sick with malaria and poke through their mouths rusted metal sticks that goes all the way through to the bottom. Then put it where the heads are down and put under them towards the mouth trays of lead and that's to gather the fat that comes out the frog's mouths. Once it stops dripping, you need to know that the last drops is the most effective of them all and the first one to use this talisman was Rufus and he saw what it can do of great evil effects.

There is the Indian talisman that I feel I need to mention to show you some examples of the Indians knowledge with these charms and this one the Indian kings use it has a weird effect and what it does is that it keeps the poisons and any evil effect away from them. The way it is done is by taking equal amounts of ten stag pupils from their eyes, ten snake pupils from their eyes or ten vicious snakes and you get as the total weight of any of their pupils of the eyes, a piece of a whales forehead. Grind everything separately then after drying it sieve it and grind the pieces again till its real fine. Put it in a glass bottle with tight neck and then take some of citron acid, and about eight dirham of radish juice, one dirham white clean spider web and one dirham grass. Cut the web and put it in the acid and the juice with some mastic and leave it for two days and nights. Drain well and slowly pour on the pupils of the eyes, then seal the bottle very well and bury it in fiery hay till the pupils melt and become oily and is mixed with the acid and the juice. Then you leave it in this fire till nothing is left of the two juices and nothing is left other than the weight of the pupils then you kneed it round and you put it inside of a egg shell and round it like a ball then put another egg shell and put it back to the fire till it thickens a little. Then you make a tiny hole in it and wrap it with a silk cloth and put that inside bread dough and cook it in brick oven or put it inside a bird's craw and cook it. You cock it till it is hard like a rock then they put a thread through it and they hang it on the upper arm and the Indian kings hanged it there because they believed that the purpose of this bead is when a poisoned food, dessert or drink is brought to them or any other way of harm, the bead would quiver, move, tremble and sweat. So that is one of their wonders.

The first inventor of this bead was Kanka the Indian; he was a one of the Indian kings and wise men, he is also the one that built the city of Manaf and built palaces for his daughters that had yellow statues that were charmed, he is the one that made statues for the planets on the right side of the city and so many other wonders that are mentioned in the books about India. Kanka is also the creator of famous love talisman with weird mixtures and weird effects. These talismans when mixed in food or drinks that two people take into themselves, will create an immediate love connection between them. This talisman is an image so if it was drawn on a wooden stick and stamped in bread dough it will create an immediate love between any two that eat of that bread. If it was drawn on clothes then you always be attached wearing the same clothes, also if it was done on baggage, that baggage will stay attached to you. Kanka pointed out that there are two kinds of these images that he called the first the small image and it is symbolized and there is a big image and it is symbolized as

The way it is used is by drawing the big symbol and the small symbol with dust or you draw on food then you give the small food to whom you wish and you keep the food with the big drawing to your self and eat that, as the concept is that the little obeys the big so you give the little to whom you want and you be the big and get to be obeyed and you can use for that food like raisins or pomegranate seeds and similar fruits to conduct the talisman. I have personally tested it and it absolutely works.

Kanka is also the man that is responsible for creating the twelve days of celebration for each month for the people in Egypt. One of his talismans that he granted the people of Egypt was building this house that had four statues around and the purpose of these statues was to cure people from sicknesses. He drew on the head of each of these statues a drawing that showed which illnesses each statue cures and that made people come there from all over the regions seeking cure from these statues and they did find cure for what ailed them.

He also made another statue of a smiling woman, which any sad or upset person would look at and all their sadness and troubles went away. The people used to come to her also from all over to look at her and circumambulate around her that after a period of time they started to worship her.

He made another statue in this town from copper that had two big open wings and he painted the wings in gold and he put the statue in a location in the town that every body in that town passes by and the reason for building it was that this statue had the power to make any committer of adultery to point out to himself and to his willingness to sin and commit the crimes. So in a way to prevent the people of this town of committing adultery he built this weird and amazing statue. The people used it to test the others in that town for adultery and that made all the people of the town stop sinning for the fear of this statues power.

This Indian king and wise man had also made a cup that great soldiers drank from yet the liquid in this magical cup never decreased. At the time of Alexander the Great, Kanka had given this cup with so many other wonders to Alexander as a gift and he told him that this cup is a magical cup that is made with a variety of special, natural and spiritual powers.

Azeem the Indian was another famous wise man that had made this pond on the entrance of Nubah city with black marble that had water that never decreases or changes and it stayed the same level. Some think that was possible because of the humidity in the air. But the people of this town they knew that the water stayed in the same level because of the spiritual powers and the charm that Azeem made for them and no matter how much they drank of it the water never decreased. This Indian wise man had made this pond for the people because they were too far away from the Nile and too close to the salty water. So they can always have water whenever they need for all eternity he made this magical pond for them.

The way it works is that the sun vaporizes the water and with the spiritual power this pond captures this water vapor that is in the air and turns it into water that keeps the level in the pond always the same with no changes. With this magical engineering the water in the pond never ends and the pond has water from the air all the time with the help of its location too. Just like the bloodstone, if you put it on any of your body parts it will pull the blood out of the body because it has such a power to do so. That is why it is called the bloodstone. So too this pond works the same way. The water would never decrease even if the whole world drank from it.

This Indian wise man has made a similar pond in some of the areas in his country in India with the same idea where people today still drink from it and the water never decreases.

Azeem had another of his charms in Nubah city that was another famous one. He built this arch on the door that had four pictures. Each picture pointed to one of the four directions. In the hand of each picture there was a bell to ring. He built it in a way to make the people in this city to know if they had any one coming towards them from any of these directions. The town used it till the Egyptian pharaoh of Musa knocked the arch down.

The Indians have exceeded their knowledge in these weird charms and talismans. Some of those talismans were amazing and interesting for me, and I would like to share them with you. This charm they made required to take a manhood of a male and cut it into pieces. They mix the pieces with the dust of opium, dried nuts and anesthetic seeds. Then they putrefy it in a lead container and they keep that fatty oil to use it in food or drinks to cause the effect of paralyzing any person and to prevent people from sleeping.

They also add some more things to this mixture to make a person imagine things that are not there and see things that are impossible to see.

They had the charms of putrefying all kinds of other animal's meat and add to it yogurts and they feed it to people so they can imagine other things and they transformed humans to any shape they wanted.

They have in the semen of humans another wonders. As they take the semen of a fully grown adult human and put it in an egg and they put with that the semen of any animal. Then the semen gets mixed together. They seal the egg and they putrefy it in a fire like incubation for three days.

Then they take the egg out and at that point it is an animal like creature. They put it in vinegar oil for three days and that animal lives in that oil all that time and they abolish it alive in that oil and they do not use that oil for things like pasting or on their faces otherwise the human that uses that on his face, he will change and look like that animal that they mixed the human semen with. The universe has so many wonders that amazes us and the Indians are one these people that have so much knowledge in this field and they keep that very secretive and they do not share it with anyone other then the ones they trust.

The Indians also take the semen from a man and they mix it with his blood. Then they cook it with the same amount of honey till all mixed well together with the honey and thickens. They feed that to whom ever they desire in their town in the far away regions, and the person that eats from it can't leave his town ever and he becomes like the insane that can not comprehend anything.

They have another magical talisman that they use in their food and drink and they make this talisman by taking a female pig to a deserted empty location and they tie it to an iron bar that prevents it from getting away. They put in front of her a male pig that is tied the same way the female pig is, then they leave both of the pigs there for forty two days and that is from the first day the Sun sets down in Capricorn. During that they feed the pigs with bread crumbs in milk. After forty two days the female pig gets very excited from the male pig and who out a healthy semen that looks like a piece of meat. Then they take that after it gets assembled from the location the female puts it and they put it in a container of lead and they incubate it for forty two days. Then they take it out and let it cool and they have a unique animal that comes out of it. They feed it for three days from the mother's food then they abolish it in oil and they use that oil in their charms by adding it to any food or drinks. I had this charm from Aristotle's sixth article in his book about animals. The Indians have horrible ways in using animals in their talismans and magic that need longer explanations but I happen to provide you with the most important parts of their secrets.

Chapter Twelve

WE ALL KNOW that any laboring seeker will be able to bring out the inside of each science and he will be able to solve all his doubts and suspicious when he finds what he needs from knowledge and that is exactly what Abu Bishr Mata Bin Yunis talked about in his explanation of his second article of his book titled the Book of Nature After Aristotle when he wrote a story about Anoshawan the king of Persia with Mazdak the wise man that tried to trick the king by saying that he became a prophet.

Mazdak came up with the trick of building a house of fire. Which was a normal house but he built it with stones that are not affected by fire like the metal stones and all similar stones. Then he would hide a person in a spot of the house to talk back to Mazdak, but it would seem as if Mazdak is talking to the fire and the fire responds back to him. So the king of Persia heard about Mazdak the prophet and the miracle of his talking to the fire and the fire responding back to him and it does not burn him. The king was so amazed and wondered about it so much that he wanted to see for himself this prophet and his miracle. So the king went and stood by the house of fire and listened to the fire talking back to Mazdak. Once he understood the trick he shot an arrow toward the direction of the fire and he hit the man that was hiding in the house and this was a proof according to Abu Bishr that knowledge solves all the doubts and wonders.

You need to understand reader that you should always to be faithful and honest with yourself and never fall for doubts and prevent yourself from bad passions. You need the fear of Allah and to have passion only for him. The soul has the power of isolating itself to the lover and gives a complete desire unto passions. But the right passion and love should be only to Allah and his holy presence. Then the soul would be safe with the passion of love and away from the mortal desires because these are despised desires. The way of passion is through love and the love gets divided to several kinds of love, there is the inclined and obedience kind of love and that is like the love and obedience to Allah, Parents and teachers. Then there is the sympathy and compassion kind of love and that is like the love to your children. Then there is the benefit kind of love like the love you would have to all people and the rest of matters that requires benefit.

When you exceed the love, you do not call it love but you would call it passion and if you had passion for any thing else than to Allah then that is an evil worshipping. Allah lights up your heart to what pleases you with a delight of him to feel Allah's presence. You need to be careful with your secrets. They are valuable possessions and you need to keep them safe of all ignorant and devious people.

I would like to mention to you reader some of what I have read in Abu Bishr Mata's first article of his book the Book of Nature After Aristotle about Aristotle's opinions regarding enigmas, which he said we need to look into in these mysteries. As the power of nature and its glory is known from these mysteries. We all are used to hearing the tales and myths since our childhoods but if we look at them from the point of scientific proof they will stay as tales and myths but if we look at it as there was no proof we will be able to see the use for these enigmas and the greatness of their founders and we should thank them for finding the reasons and answers to these mysteries because of them we keep our lives and minds and we hold on to these answers. The body of nature has a power that keeps its nature and the shapes unchangeable and unmovable to a certain times and each has a special nature and the people knowledgeable in this field are called the naturalists. This nature's power is the power that holds all bodies together and makes them last so it does not crowd each other or takes time to adjust or roughens. But it keeps it as is and the connection is the sign for nature and the nature Allah gave it to us in a way that we have to discover it and know it ourselves alone it is the beginning of all soul and it is self grown, like the stone for example it falls down not because it's an object but because it's different in nature and not similar to fire that rises up. This concept for this kind of movement is called nature and we can call the movement nature for the stone as the stone's nature but each nature's name changes like the doctors call mood and the instinctive heat as nature they also call the organs movements and the soul, nature. In reality it is a united name for all lives and for everything special like the world, the sky, the power that Allah gave to things as reasons to affect the universe and the movements and stabilities in every moving and standing object. That is why the beginners called nature on every movement and stillness alone. But philosophers said nature is a physical picture and it has to be in a body with the mediate between the orbit and the soul alone.

Aflatoun the philosopher said "nature is a natural sealed core in crafting things alone".

Galen the philosopher said "with a limited industry nature is an instinct heat that reforms the body keeps away any corruptions and gives power and fixes the body balance".

Bandaklees the philosopher said "nature has very simple core with one phase which means it accepts any picture as one and does not accept all phases of things". He also said "nature has the power of life but it is also the picture of life, like the little worker boy, he builds things with power, then when he is done with his training and building for others he becomes a manufacturer of his own".

I felt the need to mention the thoughts and some of the great philosopher's opinions so you have more than one reason to strike your knowledge and to be protective for the causes of things.

Bandaklees the philosopher also said that the nature has four causes. One that happens with any power that leads to a higher force, one happens with a natural power that leads to the cause of action. Then there is the action that happens with the cause of power, and finally the cause of actions that happens with another cause of an action that all lead to four causes of nature, or we could say as others identify it as the willpower, the mind, the soul, the nature and object. As the power of will goes to Allah, the mind goes with action, the mind goes with the will power, the soul goes with action and the soul goes with mind power or at nature with action and nature with soul power and the object goes with action.

Each one of these natures is cause for what is above it of power and beneath it of action. These causes have another four medium causes between the incidental and substantial. They are the causes of intentions, which are the search for improvement and love. The search for the spiritual things, that nature did not hesitate to show us and the search for improving materialistic things. Nature and love go hand to hand and all lead to one important thing; the love and respect to Allah the greatest, he is the giver, the complete to all things and he is the beginner and he is the ender. With this we reach to the end of this chapter of this book.

1. The first of the three main branches of the human family is the Caucasian race, which is the most numerous and the most powerful. It is the most civilized and the most advanced in the scale of human progress. It is the most numerous and the most powerful.

2. The second of the three main branches is the Mongolian race, which is the most numerous and the most powerful. It is the most civilized and the most advanced in the scale of human progress. It is the most numerous and the most powerful.

Book IV

The forth book will be an extension to the same subject of the three previous books about the talismanic knowledge of the Nabataean people, the magic of Al-Habashah people and examples of the magical feats and talismans of the Kurds. I will also add in this book more magnificent matters of the same nature and after we talk about all this then it will be the end of the book, but like always I would like to start my book with a philosophical speech as to prepare your soul for the knowledge.

Chapter One

ALL THE PHILOSOPHERS AGREE that Allah had created five essences and he made some higher in ranks than others, he made the higher the better than the ones beneath. So the first essence is better in wisdom, light and morals than the rest. The five natures are, the first primordial matter and it is the upper world and the first image and it is also the first element, then the mind, the soul and the nature, which is the sky. Then the fifth essence is the celestial body, which is the element of the body. So Allah made himself as the first primordial essence on his throne, the one and only and he made that throne receive his light, wisdom and morals from his power and he made primordial matters formative and motivating. Then He made the mind in his horizon where it gets its light, wisdom and morals from his power and it is also where it forms and motivates the essence of mind back to Allah. Then he made the soul fall in the mind's horizon and this receives the light, wisdom and morals from the mind's power and it forms and motivates it. Then he made the nature in the horizon of the soul and get the light, wisdom and morals from the soul's power and it forms and motivates it, so that all these essences get back to the first primordial matter and that is Allah himself. So the first is the more honorable, most delicate and the most gracious over the mind, then the mind is more honorable, more delicate and more gracious than the soul, the soul is more honorable, more delicate and more gracious than the nature and the nature is more honorable, more delicate and more gracious than the elements. Allah made also more than one factor to motivate each essence, so he made the most intensive motivation to the one beneath in the essences, so the motivator would have a desire for the motivation and feel the need for him, show love and affection to him and to not forget him.

Then Allah created the orbits and shapes. So he made the orbit of the soul between four orbits. There are two above that are luminous, superior and mannerly and they are the primordial matter and the mind and there are two under the soul that are dark, depraved and connected and those are nature and the elements.

The soul that was dominated by leading personality is always a lit, happy, honorable and their fate and their end is in high heaven that originally came and extended there from. Then the soul that is dominated by lowers becomes dark, depraved and miserable and their fate and end is in the lower hell that they inspired and extended from. Allah also created bestial souls, plants and objects that do not need mind or high primordial matter because Allah did not feel that they needed these functions and these souls were dominated with the low forms of the nature and the elements and their fate is the dust that they came and extended from. All this is formed and done with Allah's presence and knowledge.

An example of this are the trees and plants in the beginning they are just seeds then they have roots and these in turn become branches, then all the way until it becomes a tree. The plant's soul extends from the ground and the roots and from the air the branches, then the one that has more material happen to pull the plant towards it, so if the earth has more material than the air it will pull the plant down and if the air has more materials than the earth, then it will pull the plant up and give it more height or width. The proof of this is that we see some plants that have longer stems than branches and some have longer branches than stems, some we see have dried stems but green branches and some plants have dried branches but green stems. Also the birds, if the bird's food is on the ground, then it flies less up to the air and if its food was in the air then it will fly higher and higher. The Human being on the other hand if his food was delicate simple food he would be closer and get spiritual things more and if his food has more volume and thicker, then he would be closer to earthy things and farther away from spiritual things. Evil comes through criminal things and the good comes through the spiritual things.

Let us get back to what we were saying about that the essences are divided into two parts, the first part is spiritual and the second is physical. The first spiritual essence is primordial which is the divine world, the first image and the first spiritual element and it contains the mind, the soul, the nature, the element, all the principles, all the first species that had no other kind, the first numbers that do not divide like the one, the dot and similar shapes that do not divide, because the "now" is the principle of time and the "dot" is the beginning of the line. The physical essence is what assembles of elements like fire, air, water, earth, animal, plant and object. The essence is also divided into simple and assembled aspects. The simple is what is above the orbit and cannot be acknowledged with worldly senses. As for the assembled essence it is under the orbit and can be acknowledged with the worldly senses.

Bandaklees the wise man said that every essence can be felt with the five physical worldly senses, because it is a pure and assembled bodily essence, it is also mortal and decayed because the place surrounds the body and the limits affect it. Not every essence is acknowledged with the worldly five senses but it could be acknowledged with the hidden spiritual senses because it is a pure and simple spiritual body essence that will stay in Allah's light for eternity and never decomposes and that is because there is no place or any thing that can surround it. Every essence is acknowledged by the worldly senses because it is a body between the simple spiritual and the assembled body. The assembled bodies are the one's that follow the movements of the time and the colored and the spiritual body are like light and glory and follow the highest spiritual essence and unite with it and therefore last. So by reading my book searchers, make sure to follow the happy spiritual levels and do not lose your mind's power.

We should not forget that the reality of the mind and its sections have been determined by lots of arguments between the searchers for centuries and they agree to call the reality of the mind with four different meanings, the first meaning is the description that differentiate the human from the rest of the animals, which the human is prepared to accept the theoretical science and the management of the hidden thoughtful industries. It is an instinct that prepares to acknowledge the theoretical sciences. It is like a light that Allah puts in the human heart so it prepares him to acknowledge things. This is the opinion of some of the writers.

The second section is the science that comes out to reality inside that special child that has the gift of accepting the acceptable and denying the impossible. Like the knowledge that two is more than one and the person can not be in two places at once and that is the section that writers had problems with yet they denied the first section.

The third is the science one receives the benefit of experience in with situations one goes through so that the experienced is considered smart and the inexperienced is considered the stupid ignorant one.

As for the forth it is the end of this instinct power till you know the consequences of actions and to curb the urge for desires and of fast pleasure. If this power happens, a person will be called smart and that is because of his controlling for his desires and pleasures and consideration for the consequences of such actions and that is one of the human's distinctions from the rest of the animals. The first is the source and simple, the second is the closest branch to it, the third is the first and second branch as the knowledge of experience comes with the knowledge of instinct and the useful sciences. The forth is the fruit and the reach of the desired level, as the Imam Ali said "I have seen the mind as two; one is written and one is heard, the heard does not function with out the written like the Sun is not useful if we did not have the eye sight to see it".

I want you to know searcher that I am advising you to follow what is best for you and higher in value, as the ancients divided the mind into six sections but gathered it in two words which is the complete mind and the whole mind and as they used to say that the soul too by dividing it into complete soul and the whole soul, the explanation for that is that the ancients saw that the existence consisted of three parts.

The bodies and these are the lowest of them, the active minds and these are the highest and most honorable of them for being so far away of any object.

Then there is the middle part, which are the souls, that are affected from the mind and reflects to the body.

The ancients called the angels the souls of the orbit because angels are sort of life and they are close to the complete mind like humans and they intermediate with the complete mind. That is also the reasonable mind. This expression is what we can see lots of people with. The complete mind is the mind that gets the shape of each person, some more or some less but that is when the person becomes the complete human.

Then there is the second meaning of the whole mind and the ancients give it two meanings, first meaning is the correct meaning which is what they mean by the whole world for the whole mind and that also means the total meaning, which is away from all directions wide or high. It is the fixed meaning that does not move unless there is a passion behind it and it is the total active mind that brings human souls out in the mental sciences from power to action and this meaning is the principal of all after the first principal. The first principal is the creator of all. As for the second meaning for the whole mind; the extreme body and I mean with it the ninth orbit that turns the day and night and with its movement everything else moves around. It is the filling of all skies and that is the one that the ancients call the whole body and the whole mover. It is the greatest creature of all and the one that has its sight on the throne.

The whole mind with this meaning is an absolute essence from subject and from all directions. It is the mover for the movements of all others and that is in a way to provide desire and interest in him. His existence is the first. In another meaning when Allah created the mind he said to it come, so he came. As for the complete soul what is meant is the same as we mentioned earlier about the complete mind, that it is an expression that you can see in lots of people, but when it comes to the complete soul that does not make all people the same. Each person has his special soul, as you cannot measure the complete mind the same way you measure the complete soul. The principle of the heavenly bodies and its movements, are the mind's choice, the relativism between the complete souls and the complete mind is the same proportion of our souls to the active mind and the complete soul to a close concept to the existence of the natures bodies and the level of gaining existence after the level of the whole mind.

Aristotle the philosopher claimed that the mind is not united with the body and that only the soul is united with the body and he explained it by saying that the logical soul is aspired by the mind's light, if the soul wanted to know something, it accepts the light, be happy with it and acknowledges this light that reflects on the senses and the proof of this is that if the senses had a lack of sleep the soul would not comprehend anything.

Bandaklees the philosopher also said that the mind has no limits because it is a simple essence and the simple essence has no kind or type to it because it can not be divided and the rise of the limits happens with the determination of kind, type and the category. Bandaklees said that the mind is of two kinds, the full mind has everlasting, endless and painless power. The second kind is the acquired mind and this kind gets its power from the full mind that acts as a container of everything; it is the beginner of before all ages. He also said that it is a light from the complete mind that lights the soul and does not unite because it is a simple essence and every simple essence does not divide and what can not be divided can not have a kind, and what does not have a kind can not have a type and what can not have a type can not have a part. The rise of limits is by the kind, type and part, so when it does not have a kind you cannot limit it yet you can limit the soul even if it was a simple essence and that is because it unites with the body and formed with the light of the mind. Then he said that the soul is a small power; has knowledge of its own and recognizes things because the soul is a formed essence.

Aristotle answered Bandaklees back from Aphlatoons philosophy and said, that every formed element can be untied and what you get untied is likely to be ruined, so he said how it is a simple essence yet it is also a formed essence. Bandaklees said that he meant with the first that the essence has limits and with the formed he meant that the essence has a description and it gets that its light from the mind, so Aphlatoon and Saritoos agreed with Bandaklees.

Bandaklees add also saying that the soul is a simple essence accepts all the pictures of things, its shapes and its colors. Then he said that we need to know that the soul is united with the body and not printed in it. The senses are printed and not united in the soul. What is printed cannot be apart of what it is printed in, but every united part can be apart of what it is united with just as everything printed in something is nothing but an opposite impression and everything united has a subject that is aware of the impression. It is a rising power of its own; faithful for the body that the soul is in. It renews the body and keeps it alive and constantly moving. The soul Allah had created with the mind without any intermediate and he planted it in bodies so they become the sun light that spreads in the body so it organizes it in nature with the senses, thoughts, imaginations, speeches and thinking, etc.

Aristotle the wise, the honorable said that the limit of the soul is continuous for a mechanical natural body with the power of life. So he specialized the soul with nature to differentiate it from the industrial body and he called it mechanical because it is inside dead bodies that are in the universe and he called it decomposed because it needs to eat. When he called the soul a power he meant that the soul is a false defect for the breathing body and with breathing it becomes feed able and sensitive.

Aphlatoon claimed that the soul is an essence and not an object that moves the body and united with it and this uniting continues the bodywork. Some ancients had limited the soul as a nature that constantly moves and with this it is completes the active alive body with power.

I have brought to you reader all these philosophical thoughts about the mind and soul and their essential nature so you can have a good points in your search and to win the eternal life and to leave any life other than that which will reach to that eternal life worth acknowledging and you have to be certain that is between what you are asking for and what I have provided you with of these valuable concepts. This is a long road, because what you are looking for is preventing shadow between your mind and the complete mind. It prevents you of accepting it and connecting with it. I mean the shadow is a dark obstacle, which prevents you from reaching the sunlight. The sun light at any time since the time it rises till it sets and if you can't reach it you become unfortunate and you stay in the shade without the blessing of the knowledge. So understand well what I had to say, think it through and Allah help us all and especially all the searchers for these fine, mysteries of knowledge and those things extremely difficult to comprehend.

Chapter Two

LET US GET BACK TO OUR MAIN REASON for writing this book and talk about the opinions of a group of Al-Habashah and the Kurdish scientists about the power of the Moon that spreads to the planets. As they use to obtain this power, sacrificing, making charms especially when the Moon is in the orbit of the zodiac signs. We have mentioned to you in the previous chapters the knowledge of others regarding these invocations; my purpose is to be able to bring to you all the Wiseman's knowledge in this field from different groups of people.

The invocation of the Moon at the Habasha and the Kurdish groups is done when the Moon is at its full or when it just started to decrease and when it meets with the Sun. So if you wanted to bring the Moon's power when it is down in Aries' sign. Then seek him when he rises at full in nighttime because it is more likely to grant you your wish then. You need to approach the Moon in a green open area with lots of plants by a river or by a water spring that runs towards the east. Bring with you a rooster with a divided comb. Sacrifice the rooster with a bone as no metal should be touching your sacrifice, the Habasha and the Kurdish groups have a reason for that. Then receive the Moon as your holding between your hands two metal braziers and put in it every now and then some bush-grass till it burns up. Then stand between the lit braziers and say:

O Bright Moon, the Joyful, the Magnificent, the distributor of darkness with your light, Allah praised you and spread your light in the horizons. I approach you with submission and ask you in this matter (and you mention what you need). Then you walk ten steps as your still facing him and you say "the same words again and you make this time you put the braziers right in front of you and you put in it four dirham of licorices and burn the sacrifice. Then draw these symbols with the ash of your sacrifice with some saffron in a cauliflower leaf. Then burn that and once the smoke rises, you will see a very well dressed person standing in front of you at the brazier. Then you tell him what you desire because he is the one to do it for you and whenever you needed any thing just do it the way I explained to you as this spirit will show up and make your requests come true and these are the symbols that you need to use:

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Taurus' sign. You need to know that the Moon has an effect on all the zodiac signs. For much as these effects you organize a charm for each. So if it was the Taurus' sign, you go to the same described, a green planted location, also with a rooster for a sacrifice and a brazier. You also need to be dressed in linen that is dyed with Lebanon cedar or pomegranate skin and put the sleeve all the way on your head then get close to a pond that has cooked water with nut wood. Put your right arm in the water and scoop water on your left arm. Then wash your hands, face and arms. Be very careful the sleeve does not fall off your head as you are washing. Then wash your feet and have with you a new mat that has never been used or stepped on before, rapped in veined linen with green and red. Then jump from your location on to the middle of that mat. Bow once and say Ribkar, ribkar, ekaam, ekaam, takfoor, takfoor twenty times. Then you get up you will feel an overwhelming feeling to bow till tears comes out of your eyes. Get up and go to the pond one more time and wash like you did the first time. Sacrifice the rooster and burn it as you repeat what I have told you to say earlier. As you are doing this use the brazier to cense with frankincense, bush-grass and mastic. You will see a spirit that appears that will grant you what you have asked for.

I had a friend that was so poor and he had a very hard time and his rising was Saturn and the controller of his bad luck. So I taught him how to invoke the Moon in Taurus and when he did, he saw that spirit and he asked it for what he desires. So the spirit took him to a location and told him to dig. He dug where the spirit told him to and he found what eased his financial situation and he moved from poorness to wealth.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Gemini. Approach a windy location that is also high on a hill. Have with you a rooster for sacrificing, the incense and a bar of bright yellow copper, about three cubits. A brazier that is also yellow. Light up fire in that bar in the brazier. Then put in half a pound licorice. Put the side of the bar on the rising side of the smoke and equal the other side with the circle of the moon, till the smoke goes through the bar all the way up to the sky. Then cense with half ounce bush-grass and same amount of amber. Then sit by the brazier, take the bar and extend it all around you and draw a circle that you are the center of. Then take seven handfuls of beanstalks and put them in seven different locations of the circle. Then take your sacrifice and divide it to seven parts and put each piece on one of each of the straws. Then light them up with the bar, till it lights up well and burns the sacrifice. Then stand up in the middle of all that and say O Bright Moon, with the great sultanate, the high in level, the high in place, you are the one that engineers the world. I ask you with your spiritual power to grant me (so and so). Then you bow and say Hiroot, hiroot, girooth, girooth twenty times. Then you lift your head and you will see immediately a spirit standing in front of you, then ask him immediately what you desire because he will grant you your wish.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in the sign of Cancer. You go to a high location like a room that has a view on the street or any high place that you can inspect your right, left, front and back and hold in your hand a stock dove. Then sacrifice the dove and take from its right wing, left wing and tail four feathers. Cut a part of the dove's beak, then you burn the rest. Take the feather and add two dirhams colocynth grease, four dirham licorices. Put all together in a linen cloth and then make a statue from two ounce white snow and the ash of the sacrifice kneaded in gold water. The statue head will be a man's head on a body of a lion. You get up and hold the statue in front of you, light up a fire and say as you cense O Moon that is filled with light, beautiful glory, the high in levels, I ask you to grant my request. Draw a circle on the ground and put the statue in it after you write the name of whom you want. Then repeat the words, bow to him, lift your head. Take about one pound vinegar and dissolve the whole statue in it with some musk seed, quarter dirham amber, four dirham wood sticks with fine edges and half pound of lupine flour. Put them on the fire till it boils and thickens. Then make flat disks each disk weighs quarter dirham and put it to the Moon for seven nights. The wise men used this charm in their trips to so many countries and at any place that they encountered lions, snakes and scorpions they were never harmed by them and these animals and insects would pass by them.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Leo, approach the Moon at a flat ground area that is uninhabited. Bring with you seven braziers; put them in a circle on that ground between each one of them about one cubit. As you are receiving the Moon put between every two braziers a goose egg and draw on the egg the symbol:

Then take a thick nail made of yellow copper about three spans long. Hold it in your right hand and wear on your head a yellow turban made of wool and also wear a yellow shirt made also of wool. Then sacrifice the rooster with the separated comb in the middle of the circle with the braziers around it. Then burn your sacrifice on the braziers after cutting it to pieces and put on each brazier a piece of it. Take from the blood of the sacrifice couple of drops by using the yellow nail and drop it on each brazier and also on each egg. Then pick two of the braziers and take the egg after the second and put them in front of you. Then take the nail and hit the egg and as you cense with frankincense, bush-grass and yellow sandalwood, say Andab, andab fifteen times, the spirit will appear to you ask for what you desire, the spirit will grant you your wish immediately and do not be afraid of his appearance.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Virgo. Take thirty white starlings and you cook them after sacrificing them with the feathers till it is well done. You take the birds out and the feathers will all fall off. Add a normal amount of salt to it and you make this before the thirty days is up in the sign. Then you eat one of the birds every day after censing the bird with quarter dirham of saffron and don't eat any thing after it for six hours. You do this every day and you need to be careful not to drink any alcohol during that time. When you are done with this wash up with a eastern water spring and put of this water, half a pound in a bottle that was made when the Sun was on its third day of the Pisces sign and the Moon was on its seventh day in Aquarius. Seal the bottle very well with tar that did not touch fire. Then go out to invoke the Moon's power and put in front of you a brazier that has one ounce of grass and saffron in an open empty area, then say O Moon the Beautiful Sighted, the extreme in giving, the extreme in height, the one that lights the dark, you make every soul happy, your joy and delight give us joy and fills our hearts with delight. I depend on you to get me what I desire". Then you reach your left hand to the bottle and say Afoot, afoot and you dig with your right hand in the ground, you keep repeating and digging till you have dug about a cubit deep in the ground. Then put the bottle's top facing the south and you cover it with the dirt slowly as you still repeat the names, till the ground is smooth. Then you draw with a gold needle in a piece of lead the picture of what you desire and bury it on the top of the hole. Once you do that your wish will come true.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Libra. Wear a belt that is made of thick clay that originally was in the water. You go to the eastern side of water with your sacrifice. You run opposite of the water current, looking at the Moon and holding an arrow made of copper on the day Venus is returning from the sign of Taurus and when Mercury was descending in Aries. You do this five times back and forth, then you throw the arrow in the river and say O Moon the magnificent, the beautiful. I have sent to you the arrow and I have made it for you. You can grant me my request and complete my hope. Then light up a fire of jungle trees and add to it some grass, then you start turning around the fire in a hurry holding your self till you are breathless, then stop and make a line from that location in the ground till the fire and draw on the line the words Ghinetee, Ghinetee. Then take that dust that you wrote the name in and add to it in the same amount of parasites from a well and kneed it with still water, then make two pictures one for your self and the other for whom you love, once you do that your wish will come true.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Scorpio. You approach the Moon when it is three tenth degrees in Scorpio. You go to a place with lots of trees and water in it and then you draw in the ground a square and spread in the square the leaves of nut, quince and mallow. Then sprinkle it with rose water and put in front of you seven braziers made of silver. Put in each brazier as much as you can of soft aloe wood, licorice and gum, then get dressed in white outfit with no marks or pockets and hold in your hands two ollas of pottery filled with water. Then you get a small cup and you hold it behind your back then you start to empty the water from the first olla to the second, you keep repeating this a couple of times. Then you get your sacrifice (which you can pick of any of the sacrifices the sign is specialized for). You approach it to the moon then you bow four times and you say each time Sharafiha, Sharafiha you sit up and repeat adding aloe wood, licorices and gum in the braziers. Then you bow again for four times and then you will see a human looking spirit appears in front of you and talks to you, then you ask him for what you desire and he will grant it to you.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Sagittarius. For Al-Habasha and the Kurdish groups approaching the Moon in Sagittarius is very hard because it gathers all the charms of the temples and talismans that have to do with finding hidden treasures. So you need to watch for when Mercury is at four degrees of Cancer's sign, then take ten pounds of yellow copper and make five snakes and divide what is left of the degrees of the sign on the rest of the five pounds of copper. Then go to a clear riverside and make a small creek out from that river. Divide that creek to five small creeks and put in every creek one of the five snakes you made of the yellow copper. The snakes that you made should be open all the way through and when you put them in the creek the purpose is that the water will go all the way through from the tail and out from the mouth.

Put five water skins at the mouth of the snakes. Collect the water that gathers in the water skins every other hour and pour to the ground every hour, till the water skins are full. Then you take all this and walk about twenty cubits away from the river, put the water skins on the ground make a small needle hole in each one of them after digging a hole in the ground so the water that leaks from the skins gathers in the hole. When the water starts leaking from the water skins, put by each water skin a snake. Then run fast to the river and carry as much as you can from the river's water in your mouth, go back to the water skins and spill that water on each snake and water skin. Put at the head of each snake a brazier made of silver and put in it soft aloe wood, amber and narcissus. Do not stop the censuring until all the water is drained in the water skins. Then take the snakes and put them in the water skins and bury it in the hole and on the same place sacrifice the immolation, then bow fifteen times and say when you lift your head after each bow Harkoom, harkoom, five times, then you will see a spirit at it is best shape, tell the spirit your request because he is able to seek and get it for you from the east to the west of the earth.

I had a friend that made this invocation to the Moon and the spirit appeared to him, my friend's wish was a charm for finding treasures, so the spirit carried him to a location that nobody had seen or heard about before. Then the spirit gave him a statue of an elephant made of copper, holding a metal key on his feet. The spirit told my friend to carry the elephant and walk with him where ever he wishes and where ever the key falls on the ground that will be the spot where he needs to dig for treasure. So he walked holding the elephant about four cubit and the key fell, so he found a basement under ground, he walked under till that basement opened up to a huge house full of golden and silver tombs and plenty of rubies. So he carried as much as he desired of the treasure and he repeated the invocation several times.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Capricorn. To approach the Moon you need to build a house that is big and enough only for two people. You build it when the Sun is in Cancer you spread soft basil in the place for seven days and you change the basil every day and you cense the place with sandalwood and bush-grass in the evening every day. After the seventh day, get dressed in a red outfit and say Hayawom, hayawom, bulghar, bulghar, nakraw, nakraw. Then you go out and circle around the house seventy times. Then take two ounce of sandalwood and burn it in a brazier made of silver, you put the incense once in the middle of the brazier. Then circle for another seventy times and then sacrifice your immolation. Enter the house and there will be a spirit sitting there talk to him and say In the name of the Bright, Beautiful and Graceful Moon, talk to me you repeat it three times and then he will talk to you and grant you what you desire.

This invocation is used more for love matters. The one that came up with this way of invoking the Moon had a servant that he regretted selling. So he had a great urge to get the servant back but he could not. So he did the invocation and asked to get the servant back and suddenly the new owner of the servant wanted to return it back to the old owner because he felt like he had to get rid of the servant and turn him back to his old owner. So you need to be careful reader with the charms you use and do not underestimate their power.

As an example of underestimating their power, I knew a man that tried to invoke the Moon yet he took a wrong road he should have not and he insisted to do the invoking the way he did for several nights. Till one night a spirit appeared to him touched his mouth and it got sealed as if he did not have a mouth, he lasted in this indescribable, horrible and scary situation for forty hours till he died.

The ancients said that doing a single talisman is good but doing several talismans is better in granting the wishes, as it lessens the possibility of risking your soul if anything went wrong and it exceeds the possibilities of reaching the core and generosity of the power. That is why I want you reader to be aware of the charms great powers.

The ancients had a story about a man that walked on the water all day, when they asked him how he got such a power. He said that he has been like this since a hundred years and that is from invoking the Moon's servant in Aquarius' sign and his name is Sarghatoom.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Aquarius. You need to take three male geese heads and cook them in aged wine till they shred. Then hammer them in a metal pan or lead till it is doughy when the Moon is facing Cancer. Then add to that dough half a pound of cinnamon, two ounces of sandalwood, half a pound of hard licorice and a quarter of a pound of cowpeas and plenty of tragacanth. Knead all the ingredients with the wine you cooked the heads in and make forty flat loaves, fry them in a metal pan until they dry. Then take it out to an open field in a moonlit night when the Moon is facing Aquarius. Put in front of you fifteen braziers made of yellow copper and silver and if possible to be also made with some gold in it, otherwise it will not be effective. Then throw in each brazier a flat loaf from the loaves you have prepared earlier and bring it near your sacrifice. As the smoke rises you will be able to see a spirit that appears and disappears in front of your eyes. Then take three of the flat loaves and throw them in the fire toward the sacrifice then say Hintar Asrak Hintar Asrak, ten times so he comes to you and tells you and grants you what you desire.

Invoking the Moon when it is descending in Pisces. Take some cauliflower juice; mix it with one and fifth of a pound of lettuce juice and some taro (Elephant's ear) juice. Then take this mixture out by using marble pincers, when the Sun is at its zenith and Mercury is in a straight line. Add to it four ounces of Mastic, two ounces of amber, two ounces Camphor, one ounce of wood sticks with fine edges and ten ounce of black mulberry. After grinding what needs to be grinded, add half a pound of bat blood that was slaughtered with a yellow copper knife. Mix all these ingredients together and put it in a glass bottle. Then walk to a water spring and put the glass bottle by the water spring. Take one of the braziers that you prepared earlier and put it on a rock in the middle of the water spring as the water flows. Then light a fire in it. If the fire lights up in the brazier, open the glass bottle and start pouring the mixture slowly time after time in the brazier. Then bring your sacrifice close to the brazier and slaughter it as this incense will bring the Moon's servant to you from Pisces sign. Ask him to grant you what you wish for and he will make it come true.

These charms and talismans have been used for many ages and have many reasons and many ways that the ancient Habasha and the Kurdish groups have inherited from their. The Indians have their own charms too that they call Kalfiteryat that belong to the seven planets. They have a special and unique talisman according to each planets nature.

This is what I have seen of the magical charms, the weird incenses and the marvelous talismans of the Indians knowledge. The Nabataeans and the Syrians are the most knowledgeable people in this field and Ibn Wahshiyah has mentioned so much of their knowledge in his book that I will be referring to some of it in the next chapters of the book.

»Chapter Three«

THERE WAS A GROUP AMONG THE ANCIENTS called Al-Kabut who worked in this knowledge. They were one of the most knowledgeable in this field. They were also the ones that told the stories about Hermes the first who built those famous Temples by the Nile at the Moon Mountain and made on the same mountain a Temple for the Sun that would suddenly disappear in front of the people's eyes. He is also the one that built the twelve-mile long eastern city of Egypt and built a fortress that had four doors facing the four directions and he made on each door a different statue. On the side east door he made a statue of an eagle. On the west side door he made a statue of a bull. On the north side door he made a statue of a lion and on the south side door he made a statue of a dog. He inhabited these statues with talking spirits, so if someone approached the statues they would talk and make horrible frightful noises and scare anyone coming near it, unless they come in with permission from the mediatory of each statue in each direction. He also planted a great tree that had plenty of different kinds of fruit. He made on the top of the castle a thirty cubit long lighthouse with a dome on top that changes colors every day for seven days then goes back to the first color again. He made the light from the dome shine on the city and gives it a different color every day. He also made plenty of water around the lighthouse with endless fish in it. He made amulets of all kinds around the city to keep harm away from people. They used to call that city Ashmunain. You can find these stories and so many others in the Egyptian words and the Al-Kabat groups that live in Egypt, they know the knowledge that came from the ancient barbarians, their drawings and all the knowledge they had.

Alwaleed Al-Amleeky the king of Nubah went out with a huge number of his army to defeat the kingdoms around him and to conquer as much as he can of the land and he happened to hear about Egypt and that the kingdom there was run by a Queen so the king decided to send one of his men there and his name was Awna, to see if what he heard about the people's knowledge of magic and talismans and their tyranny of using this on the people was actually true. So Awna went to Egypt and succeeded in conquering it and put his hands on their treasures. The king went to Egypt to see Awna and he helped him in killing a group of the Egyptian ministers and to rule all the way to the Nile River defeating all the other nations that tried to stop him in his way. The king stayed ruling for three years then he decided to take a rest from ruling and he gave to Awna the management the country while he continues on conquering more land. After so many years of wars passing in the Sudanese region and the lands of gold that got their name from growing the finest thickest forest trees. The king reached to Al-Batiha that the Nile River pours in, then he walked to the temple of the Sun and entered it and it has been told almost in all books and documentations that the spirits have spoken to the king and you can find the detailed story about that in the Amalika and Al-Kabat groups documents of their history. The king have reached the Moon Mountain and it is a great mountain and the reason that it was named the Moon Mountain is that the Moon does not rise on it because the mountain is off the equator line with fifteen degrees to the front which estimates about one thousand seven hundred and thirty three miles and the height of the mountain is one thousand mile. The king looked at the mountain and he saw the Nile as it comes from under passes through river roads till it reaches a pond that divides the river into two rivers then it stops at another pond then it passes the equator to a spring around the Indian volcano and back under the Moon Mountain. Then he found the castle with the copper statues that Hermes the first made in the time of Al-Nodisheer, eighty five statues that he built as water passes so the water does not pour in the sand or the farm lands but to where the people can benefit from and be able to use; otherwise the lands would have drowned.

Some people said that the four rivers come from one root from the gold city behind the black sea and they are the Seyhan, Jeyhan, Al-Frat and the Nile, they also say that before this water hits the black sea it tastes sweeter than honey and better smelling than camphor.

Then the king Al-Waleed saw the Moon mountain very high and glorious that he tried every way possible to climb it and to see what is under, he succeeded but he was able to see the stinking black sea and he was hit with the smell that so many other people died of but he managed to get down from there before it gets to his lungs. He did not get to see the Sun or the Moon but he saw a red light that looked like the color of the setting Sun.

Meanwhile when the king went away for his war Awna started to claim that he is the king of Egypt and became a tyrant over the people, he defeated them with magic, then he started to show more praise and appreciation to the magicians, the temples and ministers that made them like him and trust him. He also did not leave any girl in the country without marrying her and he did not leave any money with anyone without claiming it to himself. Till one night he saw the king Al-Waleed in his dreams were the king asked Awna about who gave him the right to take place of the king, to marry the other kings daughters and take peoples money with no right and that he will kill him for impersonating the king. Then the king in the dream ordered to bring barrels with boiling oil in it and wanted to take his clothe off and drop him the oil. At that point a bird that looks like an eagle flew and took Awna from the hands of the guards, flew with him up high in the air and landed with him on the top of a mountain. Then Awna fell from the mountain to a valley where he saw a rotten sludge. He got up with great fear as he knew very well the kings temper and merciless punishment. So Awna decided to run away and get out of Egypt especially when he received a message from the king saying that he is coming back to Egypt but he decided to share the dream with some of the magicians he trusts and he told them that he was afraid and was getting ready to leave the country. So they told him that they would save him but on the condition that he does every thing they tell him to do. Awna agreed to do anything and everything they say, so they told him that the eagle that saved you in the dream is a spirit that wants you to do the same to it, so Awna said "Now I remember the eagle talked to me in the dream and told me not to forget this favor" so the magicians told him what he needs to do is to build a eagle of gold, make his eyes from two jewels and to cover it with all kinds of valuable stones. Then he built a temple with the eagle in the center of it and covered the place with silk. He bowed to it and incensed it and sacrificed for it till the spirit talked to him and he started to worship the eagle and made the people worship it too. After a while the eagle ordered Awna to build a city and dedicated to him, which would also be a fortress and a shelter to him. So he ordered his builders to build it in a location in west of Egypt where it was an easy and breezy place between rugged mountains that no one can get through. Awna went with his magicians, his men and his builders with their heavy equipment and food on wheeled carts, the routes of these wheels can be seen on the ground even today. They decided to build the city in an area of two leagues by two leagues. They dug a well and they put in the well a statue of a pig made of copper and they made the face of the pig face east and Saturn is on a straight line with it and that is to keep it safe from any harm, as long as it is in the presence of Saturn. Then they sacrificed a pig, smeared Awna's face with the blood and they censed his hair. They took from the pig's hair, bones, blood, meat and gallbladder and they put it in the copper pig's statue and they also put some of the gallbladder in the pig statues ears. Then they burned the rest of the pig and they put the ash in a copper jar between the hands of the statue pig and they drew the spirit of Saturn. They made a door with a copper dome and around the dome they built statues of knights made of copper holding spears in their hands and they made the base of the city built of black marble with red and yellow on the top. They also made on the top of the city a great castle with lots of doors, on each door they had a huge eagle statues decorated with valuable stones and a knight holding a spear and facing the outside of the city. They brought water to the eastern side of the city.

Awna also built same number of male eagles to the first eagles he built and then he smeared them with blood. He planted enough trees, flower fields, farming grounds, pine trees and other trees that look like lemon trees that would be enough for every year for ten years. This city he built is three days away from Manaf city and he had four holidays each year when the eagle moves his upper part around. Once Awna was done with all this, he felt more relaxed and safe till he received the king Al-Waleed's letter from Al-Nubah region commanding him to send food and other supplies, so Awna sent all that to the king in boats, then he gathered all his children and wives as the king's arrival got closer and went with them to hide in the city he built and he left a successor to greet the king to Egypt. So the people of Egypt greeted the king and complained to him about what Awna was doing to them. The king then asked about Awna's whereabouts. So they told him that he ran away from him, fearing his anger. The king then got really angry and ordered a huge army to get him back. But the people told the king that he had built a fortress that is hard and impossible to get to because it is protected with magic and amulets that can defeat any army since they can not see it coming at them. They told the king that the charms that he uses are so powerful that they make the enemy's soldiers die as they are standing or some others he made that would reach them in their sleep and kill them. So the king decided to write to Awna ordering him to come back and he swore that if he does not he will tear his skin apart as soon as he lays hands on him. So Awna answered the king by saying that he can provide the king with steady supplies and ammunition whenever he needs and that he did not run away as the people claimed and lied to him, he actually built this fortress to protect the king and the city from any enemy attacks from that side of the country. He told the king that he is still a loyal slave to him but he fears that if he comes to the king and leave his position that an attack might occur and he will not be able to protect the king. He also said that to pay his duties to the king he will be sending different kinds of jewels and stones and plenty of money to please the king. The king was thrilled with the treasure, and he turned on the people instead for lying and he punished them by taking their money and rule them for hundred and twenty years. Some time after that the king was riding his horse when he suddenly fell off his horse and died. I gave you this story reader, about the king and Awna, as an example for you to see how these people were very knowledgeable in this field and how they held on to their knowledge and used it in everything in their lives. One of the late searchers in the field of astronomy, got hold of one of the documents that is written by Al-Kabat that had the knowledge about the talisman of invisibility and he said that you need to approach the Moon on the night of the fourteenth of the Arabic month with a rabbit. You sacrifice the rabbit as you are facing the Moon and by using the incense of the Moon then you talk to the Moon and say: O Selankeel the ruling king of the divine matter of magic and invisibility. I ask you to give me your support in this matter, give me what I need, that will give you the power over the spirit. Then take the blood and mix it with gallbladder of the rabbit. Bury the body in the ground at the same moment and cover it well where it can never be seen, you have to be careful to bury the body of the rabbit immediately otherwise if the Sun of the next day rises on it without being buried the spirit of the Moon will destroy you. You need also to put up the blood that is mixed with the gallbladder until you need it and when you want to disappear go out in the time of the Moon, take of that blood and put it on your face and speak the Moon's words, then no one will see you and you get to do whatever you want and when you decide to appear you stop saying the words and you wash your face and wipe between your eyebrows with the brain of the same rabbit whose blood and gallbladder you used, then you say: O spirit, reveal me and leave me to appear to other humans like me and you appear at once and this is some of Al-Kabat Moon knowledge.

The searcher also mentioned another story related to this field of magic and charms, that a foreigner from the Kurds went to a Sheikh from Babel and told him "Sir I would like to learn magic" so the sheik asked him "what is your religion?" and he said "Right now I follow the Christian religion" so the sheikh told him to do as the Christ used to do; reviving the dead. The boy said "I do not know how to do that" so the sheikh said "how will you learn magic then", the boy asked "what Christ was doing was magic?" the sheikh said "with or without his knowledge it was". The boy then asked the sheikh to teach him that. So the sheikh told the boy to take a pen and write in his hands what the sheikh told him to write. When the boy was done the sheikh told him to look in his hands and to see what he wrote. The boy passed out as soon as he looked in his hands and he stayed fainted with magic for a long time when he got up the sheikh asked him, what is wrong with you? What have happened to you? And the boy answered "I don't know" so the sheikh said if you don't know what is wrong with you and we meant to do to you with the writings on your hand then you have no power to learn such a knowledge. So the boy gets so surprised with the magic of the sheikh that he looks again in his hands and he passes out again for a while and when he wakes up the sheikh asks him again "what is wrong with you? What happened to you?" and the boy said "please I had enough leave me alone" so the sheikh told him "let go of your own self because you are ignorant with yourself, you have no luck in the magic world". Then the boy wipes his hands without looking at it again and the sheikh tells him that to have knowledge is to have understanding and the sheikh advised the boy to let go of this knowledge he has no understanding for its nature.

The people with this knowledge had their own aphorism for almost everything that I have pointed out earlier but I felt the need to mention some more of these sayings so you have an idea about some of their wisdom. One of the ancient sayings was about a man that approached Alexander the Great and showed him a ring that he was wearing that had weird engravings on it and that Alexander received the man holding a clear mirror, as Alexander knew the power of the charms so he held the mirror to reflect any effect the ring might have as it is pointed at him. So the man was surprised with Alexander's knowledge with the charms and talismans.

Another saying about Alexander was that he heard about a snake that is capable of wiping out cows. So Alexander ordered his magicians to make a cow that can wipe out the snake and they did what he wanted and the charm they used on the cow was so powerful that it wiped the charm of the snake.

Some of the other sayings were about Al-Habashi king that had sent camels against his enemy and the camels caught the enemy and brought him to the king as a prisoner.

Another saying was about the bowman that enlarged his bow to attack his enemy but instead, it hit him and killed him.

Another saying was about how any two similar shapes become magnetic.

Another saying was about a bird that got food for its chicks the food ate the chicks.

There was also philosophical sayings like, moving the calms is easier than calming the moving and moving the calm is against calming the moving.

Or like, the female is the magnet of the male and the male is the magnet of the female.

Or like, the humidity is against the dry, the modesty is against the yearning, the mind is against the stupidity, the light is against the darkness.

Or other sayings like, the lower shapes obey to upper shapes.

Or like, if the water accepted the calmness it would have became earth and if the earth accepted the movement it would have became water.

Or like the saying that the wind carries but has no hands or neck and the fire eats but it does not have a mouth or teeth.

Or like the dot in the middle of a circle and the pivot is small but has a huge burden.

Or like that the ring was the power of the king Solomon that when he wore it all the Genies, humans winds and birds obeyed him but once he took the ring off he was just an ordinary person.

Or sayings like, the stick breaks and the rope cuts.

Or like, the beginning of the thought is the end of the work.

Or like, the friend of each person is his reason and the enemy of each person is his ignorance. There are so many other sayings but we cannot include all these sayings in the book as it requires different research in a whole different field.

Chapter Four

WE HAVE GATHERED FOR YOU reader from other nations' books this valuable knowledge about the field and once you read it then you will be able to appreciate the difficulties that we had to go through to get this knowledge. One of the books that is considered the principle of this knowledge is the book that was written by Utarid Al-Babel¹¹ that he called the Secret of Secrets and I am about to include forty-five aphorisms from that book that contains different knowledge as an example for you attentive reader to have an idea about the principles that Al-Babel mentioned in his book about this strange knowledge.

- (1) The first of Al-Babel's principles and secrets is to acquire the planets nature if you want to invoke it.
- (2) The Sun's secret nature is the great solemnity, the high characteristic, the extreme determination; it is the king of mightiness, the disgracer of sultanates, the kindle of fires and the brighter of darkness.
- (3) The Moon's secret nature is facilitating the movements, revealing secrets, affecting water natures, cooling off fires, revoking peremptory deals and separating combined souls.

¹¹ Hermes the Babylonian.

- (4) The secret nature of Saturn is restraining movements, sealing secrets, desolating countries, adding more sorrows and suspicions to souls and calming waters.
- (5) The secret nature of Jupiter is collecting money, fixing visions, keeping suspicions away, calming sorrows and providing safety in the sea and in the land.
- (6) The secret nature of Mars is seducing hostility, boldness of the soul, setting up beasts, knotting the desires, cooling off fires, rising troubles and curbing the enemies.
- (7) The secret nature of Venus is forming souls, sending happiness, keeping troubles away, rising desires, having children, putting out fires and loving animals.
- (8) The Writer Mercury's secret nature is revealing the concealed, acquainting hidden matters, launching talks, spending money, disgracing shelters and sending defamations.
- (9) The brace of charms are exceeding the incenses, the soul health, the persistence to fast, the persistence to pray, aiming for the possibilities, choosing kinships and detailing responsibilities.
- (10) If your request's nature is the same nature of your planet, it will be so much easier for you to be granted your wish.
- (11) The zodiac signs might spoil the planets effects and lessen their operations and it might fix it.
- (12) If the rising sign was not from the same nature of the requester or the desired need the request would be cancelled and the requester can't be granted his wish.

(13) The charms of the fixed planets are much longer in time than the charms of the rotating planets.

(14) If you can use from every rotating planet a fixed planet from the same nature you would have the chance to gather the power of effect and the continuants of their functioning.

(15) If the rising sign was in same nature with the request and the ruling planet of its matters and you have used the help of a fixed planet, your request will be granted easily and with so much power.

(16) You could use a help of a flying eagle to achieve your movements as you require the help of reality to achieve quietness.

(17) There is a huge support in uniting planets together that you can use.

(18) There is as much states in the principles of the planets as there are in their uniting.

(19) Make the ruling planet in the middle of the sky in his honor or his home and give him a share in the rising signs.

(20) Seek the protection of the Sun any time you need it because it will lead to all goodness and rightness and to a faster response.

(21) Seek the protection of the Moon when you are trapped because the Moon has a faster effect and faster response and it also leads to all goodness and rightness.

(22) Seek the protection of Saturn if you were banished because it leads to goodness and rightness.

(23) Seek the protection of Jupiter if you became wealthy because it is faster in effects and faster in response and it is the leader to more wealth, goodness and rightness.

(24) Seek the protection of Mars if you were defeated because Mars is the most powerful in effects, faster in response to this kind of need than others and he is the leader to goodness and rightness.

(25) Seek the protection of Venus if you are burdened because Venus is the most powerful in effects, faster in response to this kind of need than others and he is the leader to goodness and rightness.

(26) Seek the protection of Mercury if you wanted to know certain knowledge because Mercury is the most powerful in effects, faster in response to this kind of need than others and he is the leader of goodness and rightness.

(27) The slow answering comes from low level knowledge, from uncertainty or from being unorganized.

(28) The charms and talismans that are made with incenses and prayers are more successful than the charms that are done with regular incenses and smokes.

(29) The rising of the Sun disconnects the planets spirits of the night.

(30) The darkness of the night and the calmness of things will disconnect the planet's spirits of the day, so make sure to use each spirit at its time.

(31) The heavy planet in its calmness is more effective than the light planet with its movements even if you compared their powers.

(32) Never ask Mars to harmonize and never ask Venus to divide so measure your requests according to that and do not try to change any planets nature.

(33) Use the planets with tails when they appear the same way you use the fixed planets natures.

(34) Hear Mercury in the silent song and use the Moon with him in all times in all your requests.

(35) Use Mercury in something if you wanted to get the opposite reaction.

(36) Launching Mercury's powers as he is in his home is more powerful to grant what you have desired.

(37) The Sun might respond to what was asked from Mars and Mars might respond to what was asked from the Sun.

(38) The Moon might respond to what was asked from Venus and Venus might respond to what was asked from the Moon.

(39) The Sun refuses what was done by Saturn and Saturn refuses what was done by the Sun.

(40) The Moon refuses what was done by Mars and Mars refuses what was done by the Moon.

(41) Venus might respond to what was asked from Jupiter and Jupiter might respond to what was asked from Venus.

(42) Jupiter refuses what was done by Mars, and Mars refuses what was done by Jupiter.

(43) Mars refuses what was done by Venus, and Venus refuses what was done by Mars.

(44) Mercury refuses what was done by Jupiter, and Jupiter refuses what was done by Mercury.

(45) Sometimes two planets that are opposite in nature could unite for personal matters and that changes between planets.

Thus I have brought to your attention some of the principles from Al-Babel's book.

There are also ten aphorisms that I would like to point to that are as important to know as Al-Babel's principles that were written by Ptolemy the master of wisdom in this field, that appear in his book under the name Centiloquium:

The astrologer is capable of conducting many of the stars actions if he knows the nature of what he is affecting and the reaction of the action before it happens or the possibilities of the action to happen.

The wise soul helps in the astrological actions as the strong farmer helps the nature in farming and clearing the land.

The figures in the assembly world are obeying to the figures in the orbit that is why the charm and talisman makers drew images for the planets according to the natures of the charms.

Use the misfortunate in your choices as the smart doctor uses the poisons in his medicine in a small useful amount.

Two people agreeing on something are a proof of that their signs are in the same nature and one of them becomes the effective chief and the other becomes the affected and follows orders.

Love and hate happens from changing the location of the two numerous in their birth and to the matching nature of their rising sign for love and hate and the obeying sign is more of a loving sign.

Use the fixed planets in building cities and use the rotating planets in building ground floors, every city gets built as Mars is in the middle of the sky or any planet of the fixed planets.

Do not neglect the knowledge that is in the hundred and twenty Quran chapters that is in the rotating planets because that knowledge is of the whole universe.

Make an exception in every case in the same amount as the possibility of failure of the requester in accepting the total of the action.

The Sun is the source of the animal power, the Moon is the source of the natural power, Saturn is the source of the holding power, Jupiter is the source of the growing power, Mercury is the source of the thinking power, Mars is the source of the anger and attractive power and Venus is the source of the desires power. That is why Mercury, Mars, and Venus are exemplary for their manners and actions.

I also saw, in Plato the great philosopher, wise words similar to these that I would like to mention, as he said that only Jupiter between all the planets that his actions lead to reality and he also said that the human body elements like blood, gallbladder and phlegm are elements of power that is the same as the moving planets with their power and weakness elements that they had since the beginning.

Plato also said that what made the knowledge of stars a clear open knowledge to all is the difference between the actions of the confronter and the standards of the charm makers.

Hippocrates said in his book regarding the same matter that if the Parcheesi gets hold of the Sun in the time of transforming into the Sun year, that year would go by with so little sicknesses and plenty of health and it would be a good year for pregnancies and deliveries.

As from Aristotle's wise words in this same matter, he said that Saturn is the dominator, Jupiter is the just, Venus is the delicate, Mercury is the manager, the Moon is the server and Mars is the tyrant.

I have brought to your attention reader some of the greatest philosophers knowledge in this field so you can see how as wise and knowledgeable these people were all their concern always was to dig some more into this field and find more wonders and secrets to reveal.

I will also include in this chapter some of Aristotle's thoughts that he wrote in one of his books about these same issues and was translated by Isaac Bin Haneen, just to show you reader another proof to exclude the Greek for being the masters in this field and to give them all the credit for their detailed researches. As I have mentioned some of the Greeks mysterious thoughts and the outcome of their researches in the first book, I will talk about the uniting of the souls and the heavenly talents and the heavenly granting's that these philosophers had and I mean philosophers like Kronyos, Plato and Agathodaemon and similar, as their studies showed that every industry has a door that the every seeker can enter through and every industry has a ladder that every seeker can climb up and reach to all mysteries. So every person that rides in this field with negligence will be facing danger and he will be risking his own life and he will never reach to his purpose.

When the great philosophers talked about this matter, their studies were a little mysterious and had so many hidden symbols and that led to missing the point on some things and that harmed more than to help in reaching to the desired results. Yet the intelligent and wise philosopher still can reach to all the hidden and mysterious answers in every field especially this field of the knowledge of the rising planets and the images that contain images inside but appear as one big image after uniting with other parts that try to imprint in the ground with the help of the primordial matter. Make sure to use your intuition when you request the bottom ground of the contributing elements towards the mutual spirits in these heavenly figures for the most desired and suitable of them and that to be able to achieve the actual harmony and imprint the figures according to the occasions and also to ask for the dualism that is considered in this industry the main factor.

So if you make sure to keep all this in mind and do your charm, that charm will be more stable and more lasting in the meaning that it reached and that does not end with time unless if the main ground for the charm is gone or the structure got untied or the state of the elements has changed or even if the life of the planet was over. The best nature that you can relate to is the nature and the action of the seven planets. It is the highest and the most lasting and that if you are able to bring down the spirit to earth from the orbit and from the holy skies. You have to know what you are doing to bring down the spirits otherwise it would cause harm more than benefit it even might kill that person who brought the spirit down for not being aware of the nature of each planet. As in magical charms it does not pass the circle of the earth and the action of the calling down, the charms do not reach its actions till the request to it is related to and involving the greatest power of all and that is Allah's power, he is the one that moves it with the orders and the law of the primordial matter that directs the earth's point.

The charm maker's knowledge has to include the knowledge of the core of nature and the actual preparer for the magical charms. The maker should be reserved between the two natures and specially between the shapes that forms hostility and there is an example that I will mention regarding that: If when forming the spirits figure with the charm of a lion, the maker of the magical charm must be someone that is absolutely not afraid of such an animal, in the form of his nature or any other form. He also should have seen before the lion and have complete knowledge with his nature and the common possibilities like to be in a passive shape like a mouse or a rooster. So the charm maker should be aware of these factors and if the maker has such qualifications and if he was determined to be a powerful person to reach his desires, Allah only knows that he would be one of the very few philosophers that have such power and will be able to succeed.

From the completeness of the charms effects that you need, you have to form it when the shape is stimulated and the type is hooked. You need to make sure to stay away of causing any changes to the released and the power that is released on, as that would cause weakness to the action and effect of every moving movement in the orbit as this power is the power that moves creatures on earth with God's magnificent prospect.

Also look at the role of the planet you choose as if you wanted your charm to last forever you need to make two shapes for it. The first is the stage and period of the planet that is also considered the main principal of each planet, the second is to know who is the ruler of the planets matters as every time that shape turned in its orbit, the power of the charm would be going back and fourth or up and down.

The charm maker should also know that making a charm to other than the rotating planets is nothing but an aggravating action for hostility and corruption so stay away from that and change your direction to what will be expected with making this charm, beside what is appearable in the orbit for that planet is what you could reveal and hide what is secret and hidden of what Allah gave of allegiance and wisdom to each planet. So practice reader and watch out for what there is of secrets to this knowledge and as I said you need to make sure that your charm is a lasting charm by using the beginning stage of the circle of horizons as it is the divider between the obvious half and the hidden half of the orbit.

We should never forget that Allah has brightened our mind with knowledge, that we understand a word like Daragah could be used as weight measurement or be used in a different meaning as an astronomical degree which equals sixty six miles and one third of a mile. It is also used in temperature measurements of heat, cold, humidity and dryness and it could be used in everything addable or parts of it. There is also the word Dakika, which could be used as a measurement and it equals five leagues and four fifth leagues. The mile equals three thousand spans of the outstretched arms. The span of the outstretched arms equals three cubits. The cubit equals two spans of the hands. One span of the hand equals one small span.

I have mentioned the meaning of the astronomical degrees so it would help with your researchers and I have to remind you again that you need to be careful with keeping the secrets of the charms to yourself or share them only with others from the same knowledge as it is very important not to reveal any of those charms. Every researcher has worked so hard to reach to these secrets and to reach where we are today and all of us have followed in this advice one of the great philosophers in his time Abu Musa Jabir Bin Hayan in keeping this knowledge secret from others and I would like to mention some of this philosopher's important words so it can help you reader in approaching your desires as he said: "Making charms looks exactly like the work of nature. As it does not happen without the knowledge of what was divided for it of animals, plants and stones and the similar to it from the planets like the rotating planets, the fixed planets and the signs to all the regions. Beside the knowledge of the forms and the fortunes of each planet, their levels, their length and width, the nature of the earth's regions, the waters, the grounds, the rains, the snows, the lands, the oceans, the rivers and their locations from the equator line, also what forms and what increases in it from animals and continues of its existence, beside constructing animals and the rest of its kind like snakes, scorpions, bugs, mice, wasps, geckos, humans, camels, riding animals and cattle's helps to know what forms in each area on earth of animals and other things so when you do the charms your knowledgeable in obtaining the items you need to use in your charm. Also bind the work on your charm with stones other than the two kinds because plants dries and burns by time and the animals rot and require patience in forming but working with it in charms is possible. There is two way to work in charms, either by collecting and bringing or by execution and smuggling. There is also two ways of time and movement and that is the time is for executions and smuggling and that is the most needed in the doors of meeting, circulate and planets. There are secrets in the stones and that is if the nature of the animal was hot the stone would be cold; if it was moist the stone would be hard and vice versa. So if we wanted to keep away snakes and wasps you need to use millstone, magnet, silver and any same kind stone. But if the animal was cold like scorpion, flies, bugs and louse then the kinds of stones you need to keep them away are hot like grindstone, copper, gold and brass and similar kind stones. As for collecting and bringing you use the opposite for snakes you use gold and copper and for scorpions you use millstone and crystal and similar stones. The reason for that is harmonizing the natures and comparing the movements or the opposite natures and the opposite movements the single of it and the revealed motioned ones. As for the patterns and the designed images, the examples to those are from animals the mice to mice, the snakes to snakes, the vipers to vipers, scorpions to scorpions and bugs to bugs. You also need to know the effect of the stone used in charms is only partial as the amount of the stone used is about one ounce to one pound and to make its effect last the amount of the stone should be about a hundred league, little more or little less.

So the charm lasts with the lasting of the calmness of the movements and with no actions and that is more than obtaining its location like the ground, water and spiritual bodies as their volumes are wider than the simple easy spiritual bodies".

Let's not forget Plato's words as he said that the bodies are the opposites of the spirits as they do not last together. So chose to ruin your bodies so the soul lasts and makes the sultanate to your selves above your desires. That is your body's shelter, so the bodies becomes the tools of the souls in their desires and don't make your souls tools to your bodies. Make one of them die so the other survives and don't kill the live with the dead. When a philosopher was asked about the confusion of the souls when it gets to hear a playing on an instrument, he said that the nature moves the logical vitalities of the soul and that moves the brutishness of the natural appearance which is the body, in a way that what the soul has of love and domination unites with the parts of the body and then the movement happens. So whenever the nature moves in a continued movement with the body parts then it hugs the soul in a spiritual love and it would connect then with the bright sides and its equals from the same world then it becomes simple and whenever you moved it in a separate movement, the primordial soul pulled it back to the bodily love. As the logical soul gets moved by the pleasant positive reaction from the nature side, the primordial moves to the parts and the partial strings towards the semi partial parts from the natural body and that is because the soul has in its shapes figures it cannot take out with logic to nature, as nature moves these parts the similar to the way it moves the body and I mean the body strings, then the soul is pleased with the movement of those shapes that it couldn't take out with logic. Then the simple movements like a movement of eyebrows or the eyes or even a smile and other movements of the body parts. That is why it has been said that the sound of the strings is the connection between the shapes of life and the soul and what is better that the say that said that the best form for the mind movement and the soul movement that the natures movement, just like the form of the movement of the strings till all movements unite. That is then the happiness of the world for its own and for everything around it. So readers turn your thoughts to these ancient wise men's thoughts that encourages exercising the souls at all time awake or sleep, as they say train your selves while sleeping because there is so much of what we don't realize we do realize in our dreams. They meant with this that when you are awake your visible senses dominates the actions of the hidden senses, that is why you need to let it go in your sleep to get the complete actions of the hidden power of your thoughts, thinking, reminders and imaginations. As the soul at that time can use the absolute power, the heat is also concealed at that point and when the heat is concealed it melts every remains in the body, so if he soul is satisfied at that time, it will show you in your sleep the explanation and reason for everything you have thought of.

»Chapter Five«

THE ANCIENTS HAVE REACHED these fine results after years of hard working and searching and after realizing the ten main sciences to each charm. The first five of these sciences of the ten, each philosopher and lawmaker needs to know very well for they are the most important between them all.

First science is the knowledge of farming, caring and navigation. The need for this knowledge in the beginning is to build cities and inhabit them and every person should have a previous knowledge of it and an advanced knowledge and to read all the books that relate to these subjects.

The second is the knowledge of leading troops, war tricks, horse training, veterinary and refining weapons.

The third is the civil knowledge that is the planner for the parts of the city like grammar, language, literature, foundations, obligations, the knowledge of the laws of that community, learning to write in all types and the talent of making documents and all other principles required in building any city for any community.

Then fourth are the policies with all its kinds like the main policies of the cities then there are the medium policies that are of two kinds, the general and the private like the certain policy of a certain city or community. Then the medium policy, the policy of a house, and then private like each persons own policies.

The fifth is the knowledge of morals and there are plenty of books regarding this matter.

The sixth is the knowledge of mathematics with all its types and there are four types, one of them is the numbers with its transactions, algebra and mathematical problems. The second is geometry with two kinds; the science of geometry and the practice of geometry and then follows land surveying, fractions, weight lifting, industries, water and air tricks, geometrical shapes and visions. The third type is the stars and followed by engineering, the forms, the amendments, the law and squaring. The forth type is music and is followed by the beat as well as metrics.

The seventh is the knowledge of logic, which is surrounded by eight books, the first wise man had guided us and lit our minds and visions.

The eighth is the knowledge of all types of medicine as a science and practical knowledge and under this science there is pharmacology, surgeries and eye operations.

The ninth is the knowledge of nature. There are plenty of books, which were written by Al-Hakim and was handled by many others that explained his books and tried to divide them as much as they could so after they managed to divide them they made each element of nature in a separate book. The first divided book is about the traditions, the second was the book of the skies and the world, the third was the book of the universe and the corruptions, then the forth was the book of higher stimulations, the fifth was the book of metals, the sixth was the book of plants, the seventh was the book of animals, the eighth was the book of soul, the ninth was the book of feelings and the feeling of things, the tenth was the book of health and sickness, then the eleventh was the book of the location movements of animals. Who ever gets the chance to read the information and knowledge in these books will have the complete knowledge of nature.

The tenth is the knowledge of the after nature and the Al-Hakim had combined this knowledge in thirteen articles that gives every reader the complete connection and the hope to reach to desires.

To reach to these two fine results it was not possible until we had reached to the latter knowledge first and we could not have realized it and obtain it till we were able to study and understand all these sciences, so the complete philosopher is the one that has all this knowledge as the first rulers did and you need reader to affect your world by achieving a success that as close as possible to perfection as Allah desired from man to do on earth wonders with his knowledge as he mentioned in the Holy Quran "I'm making on earth a successor".

Abu Bishr Mita Bin Yunis, in the book that he wrote about Aristotle's eighth explanation for nature, he included an argument that Tabit ibn Qurra had with another man about Allah's power and his creations. Qurra said that God is capable of everything and anything in the world, he is the creator. He is even capable to make the total of divided number five in five, less than twenty-five or more. So the man was unable to argue back with Qurra and he was convinced with God's ultimate power.

By being aware and having understanding for such knowledge makes your enjoyment greater with passionate love, which is highly praised. As the passionate loves limits are the extreme kind of love and some praise it and other do not. The praised kind requires watching the soul from falling in extreme passion, but to give so much love and passion only to the lover and all the goods in this kind of love. The dispraised kind of love is the extreme love of the bodily desires, to the pictures and figures and to the rosy pleasures. The passionate love unites between the soul of the lover and the soul of the other lover under certain circumstances in the first locations, as the passion for love could be because of a reason or an occasion or to be around majority of people till the love strikes one of them and he be called lover and the other is not aware of this love and here are some of the principles of this kind. The reasons exist in the nature of the souls and the reasons that come out of it, as the embodied souls have three kinds, animal soul, plant soul and articulate soul. So if the plant soul is powerful and dominator in the embodied soul that soul becomes passionate for bodily desires towards food and drinks, If the animal soul was powerful and dominator in the embodied soul then it becomes passionate to victory, mightiness and revenge and if the articulate soul dominated then the passion becomes towards all virtuous and knowledge. All this happens in the first stage and that is because each person should be possessed by a planet in his root and birth, so if the person was possessed by the Moon, Venus or Saturn his nature would be dominated with desires towards foods and drinks and marriages and if the person was possessed with Mars, the Sun or Venus his nature would be dominated with gatherings and marriages and if the person was possessed by the Sun and Mars then his nature would be dominated with the desire of anger, revenge and the passion for ruling. If the person was possessed by the Sun and Mercury his nature would be dominated with the passion for knowledge, gaining rightness and justice. If all this happens to the person and some nature dominated his passion, then the passion of love starts and in the beginning it is all in the looks and that becomes like a seed or a branch that just got planted or like the drop of the fetus that just landed in the womb. The moments then is just like a liquid that pours in the soul and keeps on increasing and growing and getting closer to the one he loves till he gets love back. Then he is able to be alone with his love and it gets easier to get a hug and a kiss from the lover till the souls combines and that is the cause of the bodily passion. The combination of love between lovers, as if the person follows the articulate soul he would love the same kind towards the knowledge and righteous and the eternal desires, toward the passion of the righteous of the articulate soul and the two other kinds. With this love the souls unite with the continuing of the looks.

Plato mentioned in his book The Book of the Souls that the people with hard nature and the evil eye are extremely harmful and corrupt to what it sees and likes. Plato has compared it to a hard animal that is in a hard dried place surrounded with mountains, and ruins everything in sight just by looking at it and that is related to the corruption in its soul and nature. This kind get to envy a lot for every good thing they see, that is why we should bless every thing and be proud to do that as that comes from the first position commencing in astronomy and it could be inherited from mood commencement. The ancients called that the universe and generating rule in the knowledge of natures. You need to know reader, that there are two organs that create the generating. First organ gives the material that which forms the animal that has all that power and the second gives the picture of that kind of animal and moves the material till that picture is complete. The power that gives the material is the power of the female and the one that gives the picture is the power of the male, as the female is a female with the power that prepares the material for and the male is a male with the power that gives that material the picture of the kind that has that power and the organ that serves the heart to prepare the material to the female which is the womb. The womb serves in giving the picture, which is the male organ and it has the semen, if it passed by the womb it sees the blood that the womb prepared to accept the picture of the human. The semen gives the power to the blood to move with it till it becomes human organs and the figure of each organ and on the whole the shape of the human. The blood in the womb is the material of the human and the semen is the mover to that material till the shaping happens. The position of the semen to the blood that is prepared in the womb is like the position of the thickening layer on top of the milk, the layer is the active in this role that thickens and it is not a part of thickener or the material also the semen is not a part of the thickener in the womb and not a material either. The fetus forms from the semen from the blood of the womb as the thick layer forms on the top of the milk. As also the pitcher forms of copper. The tubes that have the semen in are also the ones that form in the human body and it is also the veins under the skin of the penis that supports the testicles. These vanes penetrate the tube in the penis, so it flows through these veins to the tube of the penis, then it flows through that tube till it pours in the womb and gives the blood that is in it at the start power that changes with it till the organs have its picture. The semen is the tool of the man and there are two kinds of tools. Separate tools and continual tools. Like the doctors hand is considered the continual tool like the surgeon's knife, the medicine is considered the separate tool and it becomes a continual tool when the doctor uses the medicine in his treatment to provide the body of the patient with power that leads it to health. The power that the doctor pours in the ill persons body live or dead is continual, also the semen and the surgeon's scalpel are tools that do not work without the continual of the doctor that use these tools. The hand is considered in this case more powerful than the scalpel. As for the medicine, it works with the power within without the doctors continual need, so too the semen it is the tool of the man and it is the generator and separator power like the medicine. The tubes of the semen and the testicles are the birth tools that is continual for the body like the hands of the doctor are continual in treating patients.

Let us not forget that virility is an active power in plants and animals. The virility in animals is found in some and femininity is found in others, but in plants masculinity and femininity are together compared to equal a complete person and like a lot of plants that form from seeds, the plant gives the material which is the seeds and gives with it the picture and the power to move with it the shape as the one that gives the acceptance of the shape is the femininity power and the one that gave the principle to move towards the shape is the masculine power. Some of the animals have something similar to that as some has a complete femininity power beside a small amount of the musicality power but as that is not enough they need an external assistance like the ones that have their eggs with the help of the wind. There are kinds of fish that have their eggs and bury them so the males find it and moist these eggs. Then the eggs that get misted by the male forms to be animals and any egg that does not get rotten.

The human body is not like that at all as these two powers are specialized individually in two bodies each body has its own organs and these are among the known body parts. They share some of the parts and they share the souls except the womb, the testicles and the parts related to it. The male parts are hotter because he has more action and movement and he is also more powerful in motion and in the mental reactions as some lead to powers like anger and gallantry and they are more powerful in males than females. Some of the reactions lean toward weaknesses like mercy, compassion and delicacy and those are more powerful in females than males. That does not stop some males from having mental reactions like females and some females have mental reactions like males and that is how we differentiate between males and females.

There is also wisdom in splitting all the seeds, the splitting is a sign for a single muscular split and another feminine split and each seed is described thus. As we can see that sesame is two parts, wheat and barley are pairs, the oak, the nut and all the seeds are divided to two sections and there is some wisdom in that otherwise what other reason could be in dividing the seeds. The ancients say that the human being is the same way too because he is half cold and half hot. So the feminine power gets excited with the masculine but it is not enough on its own to form birth unless with the help of another human that also gets excited with the female with its masculine power and each complete each other and form the necessary need to form the birth.

I have brought to you reader, wisdom and spiritual charming as a symbol for you and as an explanation and revealing the secrets of nations that were buried under thousands of symbols. We have brought to you in this book some from their knowledge and some of their charms. So you be aware to keep this as a secret to your self or only share it with others from the same knowledge. Now let's get back to our original purpose.

The first of these is the fact that the United States is a young nation. It is only about 150 years old, and its history is therefore a history of rapid growth and change. The second is the fact that the United States is a large nation. It covers a vast area of land, and its population is one of the largest in the world. The third is the fact that the United States is a diverse nation. It is made up of many different peoples, languages, and customs. The fourth is the fact that the United States is a powerful nation. It has a strong economy, a powerful military, and a strong influence on the world stage. The fifth is the fact that the United States is a nation of ideals. It is a nation that believes in freedom, democracy, and the rights of all people. These five facts are the foundation of the United States, and they are the things that make it a unique and important nation in the world.

»Chapter Six«

ONE OF THE INDIAN PHILOSOPHERS that was the debater and responsible for much of the wisdom of the Indian knowledge in this field, had made incenses from earthly power that tied and united the charms with the divine world. They used these charms in all their general needs. The spirits of the planets were flowing over them and it was used for tying or untying the charms for them and it was not special for one desired action but it was for every benefit offered by the planets.

»INCENSE OF THE SUN«

The first of these incenses is the incense of the Sun as it requires taking five small amounts of safflower spike, yellow and red sandalwood, three small amounts of galingale, red wisteria skin, two small amounts of chestnut, ten small amounts of birds and eagles brains and blood, the brain and blood amounts should be equal. Gather all and grind then mix with honey any foam that was drained there from. Make loafs; each loaf should weigh half dirham. Then dry it in the Sun and when you use them you call and ask for the spirit of the Sun the mandatory with its matters in the six directions so the powers unites in the mixture. Put aside the mixture and use as you need.

☞ Picatrix ☞

☞ INCENSE OF THE MOON ☞

The second incense is for the Moon and that requires taking fifty small amounts of peach leaves and cinnamon, ten small amounts of peeled dried hibiscus, five small amounts of cumin, two small amounts of white snake fat, ten small amounts from each dried rabbit brains and white cats and twenty small amounts of dried fox blood. Gather all after grinding what needs to be grinded and sieved out. Then mix with honey drained from any foam. Make loafs like we have mentioned earlier in the incense of the Sun, then tie the spirit of the Moon with the spirits of the mixture to the six directions. Then as we also mentioned, continue on calling the Moon with its spirits names from all directions using the mixture. Then put aside the rest and use as you need.

☞ INCENSE OF JUPITER ☞

The third incense is for Jupiter and that requires taking five small amounts of dried marjoram and myrtle flowers, seven small amounts of bush-grass, two small amounts of dried nut seed and hazelnut, twenty small amounts of dried rooster, pigeon and duck brains, ten small amounts each of dried peacock and camel blood, three ounces of musk and camphor. Make sure the blood you need to use is taken from the major vanes that pump to the heart. Gather, grind and sieve out the mixture as we have mentioned earlier and use the same way whenever you need.

☞ INCENSE OF VENUS ☞

The forth incense is for Venus and that requires taking four small amounts of laurel, mahaleb and gum seeds, ten small amounts of mastic and fresh green sticks, two small amounts of bitter fruit, two small amounts of licorice, one small amount of tin, eight small amounts each of dried birds and horses or camels brain, twenty small amounts of dried horse blood. Gather all, grind and dry as we have mentioned before make loaves the same way to tie the spirits powers, then use as you need.

⇒ INCENSE OF SATURN ⇐

The fifth incense is for Saturn and that requires taking fifty small amounts of dried mandrake seeds and olives leaves, two small amounts of coaster oil plant, five small amounts each of dried black myrobalan and black chickpeas, fifteen small amounts of dried ravens, black cats and cranes brains, twenty small amounts each of dried pig and monkey blood. These are the ingredients for the spirit incense of Saturn and the rest is as we have explained previously for the other planets.

⇒ INCENSE OF MARS ⇐

The sixth incense is for Mars and that includes the nature of the upper and lower spirits and that requires taking thirty small amounts of red comfrey, mustard, radish, two small amounts of water chestnut and red arsenic, ten small amounts each of dried birds and hedgehog brains, twenty small amounts of dried tigers blood, five small amounts of red snakes fat. Knead all the loaves after drying, grinding and sieving and tying the powers of the spirits to the mixture, put it aside and use as you need.

You also need to keep these mixtures away for humans, from sun light or the moon light and you need to put it some place safe and hidden and in a container made of one of the metals that the planets are connected with and you need to be careful of the details of making any of these ingredients as the effect could be harmful if you make any mistakes in these charms and later on in the book I will mention what needs to be done to avoid harm from any thing that might go wrong while making them.

☞ INCENSE OF MERCURY ☞

The seventh incense is for Mercury and that requires taking ten small amounts each of the roots herbaceous plant, cedar leaves and grape leaves, two small amounts each of amber and chinaberry, one small amount of blue hawthorn may, ten small amounts each of eagles, hoopoes and turtles brain, thirty small amounts of red snakes blood. Mix all after grinding, sieving and drying the brains and the blood. Make loaves as we have mentioned earlier.

The wisdom in these mixtures is to defeat weakness by tying the spirits with the incenses to get the individual power of each charm that no one else shares. These incenses were general charms that the ancient Indian wise men used and depended on in their general matters and mutual requirements beside similar wonders that arise from the heavenly dominations and the spirit actions.

☞ INCENSE OF MOSES ☞

One of the written scripts which is mentioned in Moses' Torah (Pease be upon him) talked about the charm of incenses, that was mentioned in the meeting between Moses and God. It has been said that God told Moses to brace himself and for that he needs to use this mixture of incense and he told him how he needs to make it. Moses needed to take five hundred small amounts of the good sweet myrrh and half of that amount of redolence good smelling cinnamon; two hundred and fifty small amounts each of cane powder and chestnut (make the weight that you use for this ingredient Jerusalem's measurements which equals twenty dirham). Then add one dry measure of bitter, new, good quality oil and use that as an oil to consecrate sanctuaries, domes, graves of testimonies, tables and all its belongings, minarets and the rest of the places. This was the script written in the Torah and I brought it up to you reader as an example for some of the ancient's secrets.

≡ INCENSE OF CONSECRATION ≡

There is also another script that showed different incense and this one is made with a small amount each of styrax, the honey of storax and good smelling gum and mix it with aromatic spices till it is a pasty mixture and then uses that to consecrate the dome of time, the front of the grave of testimonies.

All the knowledge that I have mentioned in my book is the result of the hard work of the nations and the ancients, you need to realize reader the wisdom in this knowledge and to keep these secrets to yourself and not to share them with any one just like the ancients inherited this knowledge and kept it to themselves or only shared it with others from the same field.

☞ INDIAN INCENSE OF MERCURY ☞

The Indian wise men have reached to some assembled formulas that had strange effects that I would like to mention as they are known to be the best in the field of this knowledge. The first of these formulas is the one they called Mercury's formula and they used that to spread the spirit of knowledge, intelligence, insight, acceptance and deliberate-ness. The way is made is by taking twenty small amounts of the fat of each sand grouse, crayfish and sheep after cleaning it by melting it, then take ten small amounts of amber, twenty small amounts of dried hoopoe blood, five small amounts of each of dried pomegranate leaves and citron seeds, twenty five small amount of chestnut. Mix all together after melting and grinding and sieving, then add the fat and tie the spirit of Mercury with this mixture calling on Mercury as we previously mentioned. Then you put this mixture in the graves of testimonies in a container made of mercury that is knotted by the knot of the wise-men till the need to use it to wipe stuff with or cense with it and this is one of the wonders of the Indians and their secrets. When some of them needed to establish a law, he would use some of this mixture for himself and his friends and that would make the spirits favor them then the rest of the world and lift them above the others and honor their requests.

☞ INDIAN INCENSE OF SATURN ☞

The Indians had another assembled formula where the spirit of its incense spreads the fear in people's hearts as the ignorance spreads on a group of people till they establish a holy law, so they made this formula and it is a Saturnine formula to keep the ignorance, stupidity and slothfulness away from them. The way it is done is by taking twenty small amounts of each of pigs and wolves fat after cleaning and melting it, ten small amounts of each of wallflower seed and lupine seed, twenty small amounts of black myrrh, five small amounts of caster oil seed, fifteen small amounts of dried elephant blood, mix all as we mentioned earlier after grinding, sieving, drying and clearing the ingredients. You make one whole body by tying the divine force with the earth's power with words. I need to add one useful point to this matter which is that all these formulas and the incense charms of planets and the oil incenses requires purifying before use, to be able to tie the mixtures with the spirits, even your animals that you are using as a sacrifice for the honor of that planet. As for this mixture of Saturn's formula, put it in the grave of testimonies like the others in a container made of lead away from the eyes of other humans till the time you need to use it for wiping or as an incense.

⇒ SPIRIT PROTECTION FORMULA ⇐

This assembled formula is the one I mentioned earlier to keep the harm away from the charm maker if anything goes wrong and this formula is called the formula of keeping the ordinary spirits harm away, so it does not attack and harm the charm maker and it is similar to the Indian beads that they used to keep the poisons away from harming and it is used for all sections of all the planets. The way to make this formula is by taking three small amounts of eagle blood, two small amounts of white dog's brain, four small amounts each of peacock and chickens brain, two small amounts of bird's brain, one small amount of Egyptian vulture's brain and three small amounts of the male hedgehog's blood. Gather all the brains and dry them, then add after grinding and sieving two small amounts of cinnamon, sandalwood and spikenard, half a small amount of water chestnut, ten small amounts of amber, three small amounts of azalea, five small amounts of bush-grass, two small amounts of musk, one small amount camphor, eight small amounts of cinchona and two small amounts of mandrake. Mix all very well with olibanum and make seven beads, leave it to dry in the shade and as you are mixing and drying it, do not stop using the words of purifying and tying the mixture with the calls of the spirits of the required need, as the spirits remains with the mixture once it is dried and never crosses with any harm back on the charm maker. You need to hold one of these beads as you are working on any charm for any planet.

☿ Picatrix ☿

☿ INDIAN SOLAR OIL ☿

There is another assembled formula the Indians used and they called it the Sun's oil and this formula is also one of the wonders that they have used to solemnize kings, rulers and nobles. The way its made is by taking a glass bottle and wipe it with pure rose oil, then approach the Sun if it was clear on a Tuesday and you make sure that the Sun then is facing Aries or Leo and the Moon is facing the Sun. Then hold the bottle in your right hand as you are facing the Sun and you say:

Peace be upon you O Luminous Planet, how wonderful you are and how wonderful your appearance is, O Spirit of the Sun, the Golden, you are the existence of the world, the luminous of them all, the light of the orbit, you're the efficient, you are the one that created the pivot of the Sun in the four corners of the world and gave the Sun four faces in summer and winter. You have arranged the completion of the Moon without a veil. Give me in this oil the love and acceptance until the love of all the people to me runs in their hearts and defeats the rulers, kings and rulers, it is me, I beg you my lord to make in the hearts and mind of all this people and in all the places they gather, so much love and happiness to me and to mighty me. I beg you my Lord ANTOOR the one that sits in the orbit, O HARTIYOON, AKTARYA, AOODA, YAMOORA, to give this oil I'm holding in my hand the love in the hearts of all kings, presidents and nobles so they are never an enemy to me and to return to me with love and obey and make them rush in pleasing me. I beg you my Lord SLIYOBAROON the one that sits in the fifth sky, to tie the tongues and the hearts of any one wishes harm to me, make no one can say anything or think anything bad about me, make them can't talk with any harm to me at all, at all. I beg you my Lord SUSIP the one that sits in the sixth sky to tie the tongues, words and the thoughts of my enemies and to spread my love into their hearts. It is me my Lord BARHAWT the one that sits in the seventh sky to give me the love and the best logic, the well praise on me from others. Give me in this oil, plenty of love and acceptance as a must on every human day and night. In the name of the loved one the live, the one that with him all hearts harmonize and the moderate in moodiness give an extreme love in peoples hearts towards me that lasts for eternity and forever and ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, ever, Amen, Amen, Amen, Amen, Amen, Amen, Amen.

Then you save that oil and use it on your face and body when you will meet kings or nobles, then you will see wonders from them.

Chapter Seven

IN THE BOOK OF ABU BAKR IBN WAHSHIJA under the name Nabataean Agriculture he talks about the Nabataeans and some of their talismans and he says: "some of the wise-men had a long story about the laurel tree and how it talked to the vineyard keeper as one day he was sleeping in the middle of the garden and surrounded with four laurel trees and he dreamt that one of the trees told him, "Hey human do you have in your garden anything better then me? Or who could say that they have seen a tree like me". So the vineyard keeper said "What is the meaning of this?" and the tree said "You need to know my superiority over all the other trees and my high standing with Jupiter so you can sympathize with me and take care of me in watering and planting and in return I will tell you what you need to do, get up at midnight and bring with you some of the gillyflower oil, grease me with the oil then lift you head to the sky and look at Jupiter and say "Aye the source of all happiness, add to my life and to my time fifteen years" and for sure you will be granted fifteen more years more life above your life from that date". "Then you need to say "I mediate to you with this tree". Then the tree told the vineyard keeper that he needs to try it and he will find that it is true and it is useful to grant him his wishes. The tree also said that he will see the superiority and the high standing of the tree under Jupiter's rulership. That is why the tree was called the Laurel tree that talked to the vineyard keeper, they also called it the "Who have seen anything like me" tree. Abu Wahshija claimed that in this story there is great knowledge and a successful sign that this tree is a special tree with special gift.

There are other stories that were written specifically about the laurel tree that I would like to mention to you reader so you can see how many weird effects this tree has, one of them is if you take fourteen laurel tree seeds. Dry them on an iron mill that has a very low coal fire for an hour. Then grind the seeds some more till they are completely powder, put them in a clean bowl and cover it with wine vinegar. Beat it with a branch of fig tree and when any person drinks that he will turn into a crazy person that is not aware of any one around him and won't know what is wrong with him. The only way to remove the spell and end this persons madness is to feed that person three medium sized radishes with their leaves sliced into small pieces and the person should eat it all without leaving any pieces behind, then the effect of that madness will go away in about an hour as soon as the radish starts to digest in his stomach.

It has also been said that if you pick one leaf of the laurel tree without dropping it to the ground and put it behind your ear you wouldn't get drunk no matter how much you drink and you wouldn't get any headache from drinking either. Is not that a strange charm?

If you also take from the laurel tree leaves a moist leaf and as you are grinding it mix it with one small amount of jonquil and good vinegar, then you put some of that on any part of your body and you put on that part a red hot iron bar you won't feel anything, also if you use it on your hands and hold a red hot iron bar it won't burn you or harm you at all.

There is a similar story that was told by Shifahy but this one was on the hollyhock tree that Shifahy claimed that is as magical as the laurel tree. He said that this tree used to talk to him in his sleep all the time and while he is awake too. Every time he heard the tree telling him anything he would immediately write it down fearing that he might forget it. So one night the tree came to his dream and told him "you need to know that my name is one of Mercury's names and you think that I'm only a hollyhock tree. I had so many arguments and disputes with mandrake because he claims that he is entitled with this position rather than me and that everything in the ground is his, he knows that he cannot change his location, nature and specialties. The mandrake is so ignorant and stupid for claiming all this and what I say is impossible, he says it is possible to be done. I ask you Shifahy to write to the wise-men of Babel so they can judge between me and mandrake, as they know so much more about this knowledge then you do and as you know I can not write to people or tell them anything I want, I told you because I have chosen you for this mission over all the other people". Then the tree disappeared in the air as soon as it was done talking and Shifahy never saw the tree again. So he wrote to Babel's wise-men and he received an answer that says "We have received your letter and we were very pleased for your safety. The hollyhock tree for us is not in the same importance as the mandrake tree, the mandrake has greater position and more valuable to us because of its actions and use and even in its harms. Yet with all this, the mandrake is tricky, shifty and we can not stand his evilness or his strength and we prevent his evil not to be against hollyhock but just to prevent his evilness, as both of the trees have the same nature of coldness, heaviness, slowness and they are both belong to two strong planets, Mercury and his father Saturn. These plants are intelligent and we were surprised to know that there is a dispute between them as the disputes and evilness would happen between two fools, but to happen between two intelligent plants is surprising as they should not have any dispute or evil. For a dispute to happen between two intelligent plants there has to be a cause that would lead to that but when it happens between two fools, it just happens because of their nature. The intelligent have one cause for dispute but ignorant have two causes as the dispute then would happen for so many causes and not from one cause. We have judged for mandrake plant as we use it a lot in our work and it does a great effect. We also use the hollyhock plant in some places and some certain situations, like connecting, passion and deep sympathy and in some charms that requires the benefit of hollyhock. But the mandrake plants effect in evil is more powerful and we use it more for that reason". So I brought the letter to the hollyhock tree and informed it with its arrival. Then I left and the hollyhock tree came to me in my sleep and I told it what the wise-men have decided and that they said that they have judged for me not for him by saying that I am good and he is evil and also by saying that they praise him and prefer him because of his evilness is a great proof that I am better. Just as there are in animals, the maliciousness between them like predatory animals you would fear them for their evilness. Or like the kinds of snakes that are terrifying in their evilness, but because they are evil they are miserable and burdensome not like the good ones which eat the grass and are happy for being good and that is why the snakes are sought to be killed but the fish and turtles are safe and happy. So the wise men actually judged him with evilness and fear but I am better and happier. Just like those who are good in human kind are better than those who are bad among them in all the many ways and the only exception between bad and good are the comfortable consciences of the good and the uncomfortable consciences of the bad. As the one with the comfortable in conscience enjoys the life and its food and drinks but the bad ones cannot enjoy anything because their hearts are always busy with evil". That why Shifahy the wise-man of Al-Garamika ordered his people to build in their statues a figure of a man holding in his right hand a branch of the hollyhock tree as he is leaning on the tree itself and the knots in the tree showing clearly a great snake rapt around it and on the top of the branch there is a cross made of gold and the snake mouth is wide open facing the man. Due to this statue this group of people has so much knowledge and magical symbolism in using the hollyhock and the mandrake tree in their charms.

Abu Bakr Ibn Wahshija has written also in his book that he called The Secrets of Mercury some of the mandrake tree's symbols and effects in talismans. In the Nabataean Agriculture book it has also been said that if you look at the hollyhock trees flowers you feel happy and it takes all the bad feelings and problems away and that is done by moving around the tree and looking at it from all sides.

There is also the laurel tree that is against human kind not in nature but in features, which are capable of changing hearts. The wise-men use it in their talismans just as they used the mandrake and hollyhocks and it is also called the tree of the Djinn as they go to it at night after sunset to gather and hide under it. Also if women smell its flowers they get so sexually aroused that they have a strong desire to have sex like the birds in spring and the wolves in winter and usually the women harm themselves from the extreme sex desire that they feel. The wise-men also said that if someone took a branch with leaves from the laurel tree and put it on his head like a wreath would get very happy suddenly for no particular reason just an extreme happiness in his heart.

Also if you take one flower, one leaf and some of the root of the laurel tree, and you put the flower, leaf and root in a tin made of fine silver, then cover it with white silk cloth and white silk thread, then put it in your pocket, hang it on your clothes or put it in your sleeve, that will cause everyone who sees you to feel an acceptance and admiration in their heart towards you and if you had any need from any of them they will accept granting your request with no objection.

There is another tree that is called Abraham tree that also has weird features and it is used in a lot of charms for it has great affect and power. According to Sokolonya the messenger of the Sun if you take five pounds of mandrake fruit and leaves with Kotrip tree leaves and fruit (It is a tree that grows in the Nabataean and Kanaan areas) and put the leaves on top of each other with the fruit in between, then take one pound soft green branches from Abraham tree and wrap it on the leaves and the fruit, then take three leaves from cauliflower leaf and wrap it around the whole thing and put it in a clean place to putrefy and cover it with twenty-one flowers of Abraham tree and pour on all this four pounds of churned cow milk and one drop of tar. Put the mixture in a container made of clay and cover it. Dig a hole in soft ground three and a half cubits deep. Put the mixture in the bottom of the hole and fill the hole with donkey urine and leave it for an hour till the ground absorbs the urine, then cover it very well with dirt and leave it there for forty-nine days. Then take out the mixture and open it and you will find an animal in the shape of a fish that has two wings like a bat and two goggled eyes like the crabs eyes and two hands that have five fingers in each and a bottom like the tail of a fish. Do not hold it with hands, leave it in the container for one to three hours in the sun as it will die during that time and you will know it is dead when it stops moving. Leave it in the container and cover the lid and leave it there for seven days without touching it. When you open it after seven days you will find that it has split into pieces and that is a sign of attainment and awareness of the purpose of making it. Then Sokolonya mentioned a couple of the functions that this mixture is capable of doing and he said that if you go to a wide open deserted area or on top of a mountain at a time during the day where you can see the planets and the sun in the sky and take with you a brazier with coal and a small part of this animal without touching it and with the use of an iron hook put it in a container. Then add to it dried Kotrop plant and mandrake and put it on the brazier till the smoke rises to the sky. Add some bull's gallbladder and some of gladiolus tree to the mixture. As the smoke starts rising to the sky from the brazier a huge noise and fearful roar will erupt, that people will be able to hear for miles away and that horrible noise will continue as long as the smoke rises up in the sky. Then as the smoke dies out the planets will disappear to the visible eye one after the other just as the noise will fade slowly.

There are some other wonders about magical feats and other talismans, written by Daghreeth in his book that he called the Secrets of the Sun and he said that there are other uses for this animal in talismans and weird magical feats. As each part of this fish is used for a different purpose and those who use it and it's oil and fat are the talisman makers of Saturn.

Abu Bakr claimed in his book that the magicians told him that any milk, oil and grease taken from any plant can be used in any potion and that is because the milks and the oils are faster in granting the request behind the potion than any other. Like the potion they have, which can get any person they wish that drinks from that formula very sick in the body and in the heart.

Then Abu Bakr also said that there is a big dispute between the Caldaeans and the Kanaanites over this issue, as each group claims that they are the ones that created this formula. Even Tashid Bin Al-Kanaany went as far as sending Anuha a letter scolding him about their claims, of being visited and inspired by Mercury's spirit. He also said that the Kanaanites are the one that reached this knowledge and all these wonders with their own minds, like the potion of the milk that gets any one who drinks it very sick in body and in heart. Tashid said that is more effective then him claiming being visited and granted the acceptance of Mercury's spirit. He also told Anuha that his mind made him think that he had found a potion in the fruit of caraway but in reality he can't reach to the level of the wise-men and all the potion makers.

According to Kothamy that the first one was able to reach to this knowledge is Masy and he said that Masy had written a book about it and that he lived for a hundred and eighty years after Adam his grand father died. He wrote in his book how to prepare the animal that you can use his fat in charms and also how to prepare the plants that you can use its oil in making potions and he has explained all that in long detail in his book.

Kothamy also said that there is a great effect in using myrtle and mixing it with other ingredients that he does not like talking about because he does not have so much knowledge about it, but he said that the Nabataeans are the ones that know how to use it in potion that affect peoples souls and he said that they do that by shaping the plant from the root and give it the shape or the figure of the man or the woman they chose and they write their names on it. They add the figure of an animal with that human and this could be a lion or snake or any other poisonous animals like scorpions and they make those figures around the shape of the man or woman. Then they make all the preparations matching the time and hour of the planet they are aiming for. Then once the potion is done that person gets sick with any of these animals diseases and becomes crazy, scared and in so much pain. Then Kothamy said that the magicians are people he fears to interfere with and will not say anything about them because they are extremely dangerous and evil and could harm him.

From the other useful plants that are used in potions is the olive tree as Rawahty mentioned in his poem that he wrote in his book The Cultivation, he said "This tree has lived in glory as it says "I am the golden that my oil is in the color of the gold and has a cure for ninety-eight diseases. There is no other oil that strengthens the heart and builds the body and pleases the soul other than my oil. I am the blessed that if any one picks any of my branches, leaves and fruit and stored it in their homes they would never see any poverty, grief or worries and that person would live with his family for a whole that year a very blessed life away from any desolation or scruple or evil thoughts. I am the blessed in that anyone who would hold and hug me with his hands every day at sun rise, I would give him happiness and joy all day and keep away any harms, worries, disability, sadness and bad evil thoughts. I'm the tree of Saturn the heavy, the slow in motion. I am its greatest and largest name, I am the company that every lonely one enjoys, I am the one that removes the misfortunate and bad luck, I am the one that rebuilds the ruins. Since the beginning my blessings with the regions of Persia, Garamikah and Sudan were able to have the best habitation, the oldest engravings, long lasting and most solid fortifications, the biggest and longest rivers, the coldest wind, the clearest directions, the highest orbits, the longest tail and the best and mightiest place".

Rawahty said that Daghreeth mentioned in his book that there is a group among the ancients who would take some of the olive trees fruit and leaves at the time that the Sun is facing the head of Aries, the head of Cancer, the head of Libra and the head of Capricorn and they put it in their homes to be blessed with and they used it as a good omen and for safety and they would live longer and be healthy.

Then he also said that if at the time the Moon and Mercury was in Gemini and you buried some citron as it is in the root of the olive tree and you dug it deep till the citron is touching the root of the olive tree and you covered it with dirt about a cubit high and poured water on it, after seventeen days in that spot a plant will grow that looks like the rice plant that burns with fire and the ancients used this plant in their charm making.

Daghreeth said that if any person would take from the branches of the olive tree the ones that have only green leaves on it and without any yellow leaves and that is in the first hour of the day of the first of the month when the Moon is crescent. Then put that branch in the house for one month then take another branch and put it the place of the first one and take the first one, put it on the brazier and burn it and keep doing that every month as that will protect you from Saturn's epidemic and make your soul happy all the time and you will never get worried or troubled. It was claimed also that who does this his wealth would be blessed and would increase and that death would stay far from him till he is old and if you add to it some of the palm tree root it will make every one in that house healthy and never get sick and if they looked every day at the branches with the green leaves on it that will fix their eye sight and make it better.

Also if you take ninety olive seeds, clean them until they are smooth. Then make a hole in them and run a thick black silk thread in them and hang it in the room of a lonely and scared person this charm will take those feeling away and replace it with more happy feelings and confidence and also will change his nature to be more social and add good thoughts and feelings to his heart instead of hateful feelings.

Also if you take seven olive seeds and stand facing the Sun and throw them one by one with all your power at the Sun and say: O Sun have mercy on me and cure me from this disease or sickness. That disease or sickness would be cured even if the person had it for years and you need to do it seven times with total of forty nine olive seeds.

Also if you take a hundred and seventeen olive seeds and wash them with hot water very well, then with a cold water very well, then dry them well with a clean cloth and add oil to it. Then put the seeds in the shirt sleeve of your left arm and go to a running river and look at the water and say: O Running Water that is against the burning fire, calm the anger of (this person) and remove the hate he has for me from his heart and replace it with love then you throw a seed in the water and repeat your words till you have said your prayer for a hundred and seventeen times and have thrown all your seeds in the water. That will calm the anger of that person on whomever even if he was a tyrant and stubborn king that no one can stand and even if he was extremely angry, this will remove the hate and anger and replace it with acceptance and love.

Also if you take a bottle made of crystal or glass that is very white and clear, then you fill it with a clear oil and seal its top very well, then you look at that bottle many times a day and everyday it will strengthen your eye sight and keep any diseases away from you, when you do that you make sure you are sitting in the shade and the bottle is in the Sun and that will give a great happiness in the soul and increase the wealth and acceptance in the heart of whom sees you.

Also if you had a water spring that the water decreases more than the usual amount it usually flows in, take a pretty young slave and make her sit by the spring on something high, then order her to play the flute continuously for three hours during the day and to point the flute as she playing it towards the water spring. Then you order another slave girl as pretty and as young either similar in age or younger than the first one, to take a drum and as she is playing on the drum to sing in her best voice and the first one with the flute to follow this second slave's singing, then the water will rise and increase in the spring either at that moment or after fourteen hours from that time or in the same time of that flute playing for three hours and the singing of the second for six hours so the total of nine hours will rise and increase the water in the spring the next day so much more than the usual amount.

There is another charm that you can do for increasing the water and that is to take a couple pretty and virgin slave girls and order them to dress in different color dresses that do not match each other, then you give two of them flutes to play with, one of them a drum, the others an musical instrument, a mandolin and the last one a different kind of flute. Then as they are facing the water spring they play the instruments and sing as they are standing about two cubits away from the spring, then slowly as they are playing and singing move further away from the water, they do that till they are twenty cubits away from the water. Then they approach the water slowly the same way they went further away from it and without stopping, they continue playing and singing, they do that till they are one cubit close to the water. They do this for a full seven times and the water will rise and increase more that before either at the same moment or after that within a little while.

The ancient Indians said that the using the bush-grass in their charm formulas is very useful and important for their thoughts and minds even the people around that they smell the smoke of it and the Indians used it as an incense for their statues or even chewing it. The Kasdaniyoon has said that bush-grass is accepted by all statues and images, which is why it is used in all the incenses and formulas.

From these formulas there is one among them where the bees do not come near the bee keeper when he gets close to the bee hive to get the honey out and that is by taking powdered hibiscus leaves and wet it with oil then rub it all over the body or any part which will be revealed to the bees.

There is also the charm that Kothamy said he tried for killing fleas is by taking colocynth seed with quicklime and the root of Egyptian cucumber. Grind them and add some stinky red comfrey. Melt plenty of salt in water and soak the mixture in that water, then spray it around the beds and the house and you will never see any fleas again.

There is a formula used for rotten alcoholic drinks if they are already rotten or about to be rotten and taste like vinegar and the way it is done is by taking chickpea, rub it with oil and put it in a pan, fry it on very low heat and stir it constantly. Then grind it after it cools down and add to the alcoholic drinks according to their sourness and level of rottenness starting from two ounce to quarter pound to one third of a pound in each ten bottles. Then leave it sit the same amount of time that requires making the alcoholic drinks and that will take the rottenness away.

There is a formula for preventing hailstones from raining down and the way it is made is by taking a snake and cut it into pieces and you put piece after piece on the brazier facing the wind and the smoke of the snake will prevent the clouds of hailstones from raining down and it would keep it away from that area.

The other formula to keep the hailstones away from an area or a region is by getting three women that had children and they go to the area you see the hailstones cloud coming from and they take their clothes off and lay on their back with their legs wide open facing with their privates the hailstones clouds and those clouds will stay away from that area and not one hail will be rained down.

There is another formula that Masy Al-Surani has tried to keep the hailstones clouds from raining down and the way it is done is by bringing seven men that are holding in their hands cotton, they throw that cotton towards the clouds and they have another four men that are continuously clapping and rising their hands towards the sky as these men throw the cotton, they also yell loud like they do to keep the birds and ravens away from their plants and if you had more men clapping and throwing cotton to keep the clouds away the process will be faster as the clouds stay away from that area if the number of the men reaches forty men or sixty and the number should be double.

Kothamy has tried a formula that he read for Yanbushath and the way it is done is by taking a very healthy man that has no defect in any of his body parts and make him hold a big mirror made of shiny metal and wave it towards the clouds, that will prevent any hailstone from raining in that region.

Kothamy has mentioned another formula that he tried from Yanbushath for keeping the hailstones and any other harm that comes from clouds and winds and damages vineyards and that is by taking a board made of wood or marble and you draw grape branches with grapes on it and you do this drawing during twenty two days between January and four days before the month of February and you put that board in the middle of the vineyard and that will do the work of a amulet and keep the vineyards from any disasters from the sky or earth as well as keep the hailstones away.

There is another charm to keep the wolves and vicious wild animals away from the vineyards and other crops and it is made by taking the dung from black dogs and wolves and mix them with human urine that has been kept for seven days. Put that any where you want and that will keep the wild animals like wolves, foxes and pigs away, you do that for three full days and that will also keep snakes and vipers away from the yard as they love the vineyards and crops when they are first growing as they like to hide in the branches for their wide shade. The grape tree is among the coldest trees in the heat that is why the snakes and vipers hide in its shade to cool off.

Masy Al-Surany said that pomegranate wood and the smoke from its skin keeps away all snakes. That is why one of the ancient kings that was so afraid of snakes he would put pomegranate branches and the smoke of its leaves everywhere he gathered.

There is a charm formula that Masy Al-Surany came up with to keep snakes, geckos, lizards, mice, cockroaches and beetles away and the way it is done is by taking black cumin, mustard, henna, deer horn and a hoof of a goat and mix them with ammonia, then grind it very fine and pour on wine vinegar till the form of the mixture becomes doughy, then add pomegranate seeds and grind it very well and kneed them all together and make small round shapes of the dough in the size of hazelnuts or chickpea and house it in a glass container and use it when you need to keep snakes or any other harmful vermin and that is by putting the dough on a brazier and cense the area with it and all these will run away and as much as there is smoke coming out the pests like mice, cockroaches and beetles will run away.

Surdana had a formula to kill mice with that he came up with by taking lentil and yeast and grinding it with one sixth of their weight of flower and add some oil to it, then make small doughy hazelnut sized balls, then smear the balls with cheese that has a very strong smell and put them where the mice are located and when the mice eat them even a small amount of this will kill them.

There is another charm made in a copper container with the mix of tartar oil and grinded black veratrum. The house that has this container will see that the mouse comes to it for the oil and once they drink from it they get drunk and fall in the oil and it kills them.

Daghreeth also said that if you want to kill a scorpion peel a radish and put the skins on the scorpion it languishes the scorpion till he dies.

Some of the magicians claimed that if you soak beans in alcohol for one day and night when the Moon is in one of Saturn's houses then gets cooked the next day and the person that has a deep love and passion for someone in his heart will end when he eats for three days and he even forgets he ever loved that person.

Also if you take the root of asparagus, dry it and moisten it with sesame seed oil, then wipe your hands and feet and any part of your body with the mixture and went to a bee hive, the bees or wasps will not harm you and if you get bit by a wasp you will not feel it.

There is a grass that grows in Armenia that is very poisons and the Armenians use it after squeezing it to get the juice out of it by using a squeezer and not by hand, then they soak cotton balls in it and they put it in the heads of their arrows and use it against their enemies at war, As the poison kills the enemy immediately when the arrow breaks their skin.

This grass poison is specialized in killing, if it touches the human skin it does not harm it, if it was eaten or imbibed it would harm but does not kill. If it was mixed with iron or touched blood it would kill immediately. It does not have any cure that would work with it or remove its harm other than human feces that you take some soft and some hard of it, if it was soft swallow about two dirham of it with the same amount of pure violet oil or rose oil and that will prevent any harm to the person. But if the feces were hard you take the double amount of the soft one and you drink it with same amount of grinded roses. This plant that is mentioned by Kandas is similar to a mixture that we use that also kills by touching the blood of the enemy through the arrows breaking the skin.

Then Kandas said that in the region of Kabil and other Indian areas there is a plant that grows there that is called Beesh, which is considered one of the most fatal poisons, a small amount of it like two wheat seeds would kill someone in four hours. We could not find a cure for it other than eating hard or soft human feces as it rescues that human from the certain death by that plant and revives him and keep the harm of it away. This way also cures from most of the hot poison and cold poison and from snakes and scorpions poisons.

As for the bite of a snake you need to compress very fine grinded radish on the wound and the ground radish will ease the pain and suck the poison out of the body. If you realize reader all the wisdom, magical charms and talismans that I have brought to your attention about all the other nation's knowledge in this field, is nothing but a sign for Allah's great wisdom and blessings that I can't thank him enough for.

There is another charm that Masy Al-Surany has tried and that is by taking three dirhams of laurel tree leaves and seven dirhams of its branches, two dirhams of its seeds. Dry and grind very fine like powder then add half of the total weight of the other ingredients and human feces and kneed all with soft honey and do not make more then this amount. Then store this mixture in a silver or gold container and use it as an antidote for all poison. The ancients also used to hang laurel trees branches in terrified little children's rooms to stop their nightmares and fears and it is very beneficial for them. Also they said if you plant the laurel tree in the house it would keep evil away and it would increase the good morals of the people in the house and they would have a better nature. There is another plant called shilam and it is a Persian name, this plant numbs the brain and causes loss of eye sight, it is very harmful and it is used as an anesthetic. Rawahty said that the shilam is a kind of anesthetic that anesthetize people and make them lose their minds and tie their tongues so they cannot talk or move and that is something the evil people and the swindler robbers do to rob people's money and property. Rawahty also said that the shilam is one of four anesthetic mixtures and they are saffron, bush-grass and the dregs of the wine. Add a small amount to any food or drink.

Then they add four other mixtures to the first four mixtures and it becomes eight and that intoxicates and anesthetizes any person till they loose their minds and they forget where they are. The other four ingredients are wild opium, mandrake seed, wild lettuce seeds and anesthetic seeds. Ibn Wahshija has said in his book that you need to keep this mixture a secret so your enemies do not know about because the effect of it is so harmful and fatal.

Ibn Wahshija also mentioned that rice has a significant characteristic for magicians as they take a handful and throw it in a basin that has snakes in it and that makes the snakes stand on their tails and dance in that basin. This is what the magicians; tricksters and the eye magicians (The magicians that their hands are faster than their eyes) use to trick people. The rice plant's other feature is that the green plant would burn under the sunlight through a magnifying glass like the Sun burns thin cloth through the magnifying glass.

Leguminous also has significant features if you mix it with rye and soak it in wine vinegar for one day and night and then throw them where the crows and ravens can eat them the birds will pass out and will not be able to fly or move and will not resist if they get picked up by hand. Also if any one has leprosy started in their body can take a hand full of leguminous and face the Sun at it is rising in the morning and say "Aye glorious and great god, here I throw the leguminous behind my back to cure me of this leprosy and take it away from my body, from my chest and my soul" every time they say these words they throw some of the leguminous behind them and repeat the words till they throw all the leguminous. They need to do this seven times in seven days when the Moon's light is not bright or even hidden and they will be cured completely of leprosy.

Chickpeas also have a special feature and that is if you have any number of warts take in the same number chickpea seeds and you do this when the Moon is opposing from the Sun. Heat the seeds on low fire in a pan and put it on the warts and remove it quickly. Then wrap it in a black cloth and tie with a thread. Then throw it behind you and do not look at it and you will see a great benefit from this formula. Yanbushath mentioned another useful formula for chickpeas and he said the way it is done is by taking a quarter pound of chickpeas seeds and put them under the Moon when it is very bright for one night. Then in the morning before the Sun rises, oil the chickpeas and soak them in water and cook them in the same water till they are overdone and shred. Then eat it hot or cold and that will give the heart happiness and will please the soul, makes you forget all problems and end all bad thoughts.

Daghreeth said that the Indian cannabis has so many functions and the Indians use it mostly in their incense mixture that is used in the temples and some people prefer it more then the dregs of the wine and Yanbushath said it is also called the Chinese seed.

Ibn Wahshija said that the Sabistan plant has seeds that are called the nut seeds or as the mountain people call them the Darshishan is mainly used by the magicians as they say it is very powerful for separating any two people, in dominating people and in works of hate and this plant is sort of like a sister plant to the laurel tree. It is also the same plant that the Persians call Fangikisht and the Kurds eat its bread.

The Nabataean people had a tradition that they followed and believed in doing on the night of the first of April and that is no man, woman or child sleep that night unless they had a piece of bread, four dates, seven raisins and a silk wrap that has salt in it, under their pillows because they believed that the old woman that is called the servant of Venus comes on that night and goes around and checks everyone's belly and looks under their pillows and the ones that she finds with empty bellies and no piece of bread, raisin or dates under his pillow, she would tighten his income for the whole year and also calls Venus to dominate him and she would make that person sick till next year. All the people of Babel followed this tradition and never failed to do it and that is one of their wonders.

The watermelon also had its own special features because both the Moon and Mars share this plant so the magicians claim that if you plant a seed of the watermelon in a human skull and covered it with dirt then you bury the skull in the ground and water it all the time the seed will grow to be a watermelon but whoever eats from this watermelon their level of intelligence and the quality of their knowledge will increase. The opposite of that effect happens if you put the seed in a donkey skull, bury it, water it the same way you normally water the watermelon plant and the person that eats from it becomes simpleminded, stupid and would forget everything. The magicians use it all the time in their magic and they use every part of the plant like branches, leaves, seeds and roots for different purposes to get different effects. They use it inside of things like skulls and bones and different animals give different results. The results are different because of the nature of each animal and the power of the acceptance and harmony between the two natures but if it matched with the human nature the result is amazing most of the time.

The magicians also claimed that if we take a mandrake seed and some of its root, then bury it in the middle of a watermelon field and leave it there till it grows the effect that it will have on the watermelons and the people that eat from it is very amazing and the magicians had divided their magical work into male and female functions.

I have read in the month of December in the year three hundred a book that was written by one of the famous workers in this field and he is name is Abu Mansur Al-Hussein Ibn Mansur also known as Al-Hallaj. He wrote that the watermelon seeds have many magical functions such as if you put a watermelon seed in a fresh human skull and bury it in an agricultural area and cover it with dirt that is useful for the seed and will help it grow. Then you water the seeds with human blood that is mixed with warm water and this will make the watermelon that grows there has a horrific reaction on the human mind and body if it is fed to any one.

Al-Hallaj also mentioned that there is a charm between the chicory plant and the rooster especially with white roosters and he said if you take some of the chicory plant leaf and wrap it then feed it to the rooster three times a day for a three days and make sure that the first day would be on Wednesday. Then that rooster will be very acquainted with the human that fed him the wraps and will not recoil from him like he does with other humans and these are some of the magical secrets about animals and charms.

Some of the other charms that are done if someone has a toothache and the way it is done is by taking a hand full of chicory plants leaves, stand outside looking up at the sky, when the Moon is rising in one those nights that the Moon appears right after sun set, then you say: Aye I swear by you Moon if you stop the pain of my teeth I will never eat chicory ever again. The toothache will be gone and that persons teeth will actually get fixed on its own and becomes completely healthy, but to keep the teeth this way and to stop the pain from coming back, this charm needs to be done again in the beginning of every month.

There is also another grass that grows between the vineries that is called the peak of the vinery, it does not grow on a stock, it grows lying on the ground and even some of its parts stay under ground so not every one can notice the plant. It has very tiny leaves smaller than the rue leaves almost in the size of chickpea leaves or smaller. This plant if it grew in the dessert with no plants around it would do wonders in charms and weird magical tricks and Adam had described this plant and mentioned lots of its functions in his book as he said in one part that if you carried some of this plant's leaves and branches and mixed it with wax then left it in your pocket, you would disappear where no one can see you coming in or going out or what you are doing. Then he also said that the person that does this formula would feel afterward with a tightness in the chest and his soul for two to three days as long as the time that he stayed invisible from people's eyes. Since an hour of invisibility would equal a day of that chest pain many people refrain from doing it because of this pain that they feel afterwards. Also if the leaves and branches were used as an incense on a strong coal under the sky after an hour from the smoke rising in the sky a strong horrifying roar will start which people can hear for miles away and once the smoke stops so the horrifying noise stops with it. If you also mix some of the branches and leaves of this plant with pig's fat and grind it in a mortar till it is well mixed then shaped it into the size of a walnut or smaller, then hold it in the left hand and cover the left hand with the right hand and go to a barn where there are pigs and walk back and forth in there, the pigs will rush around and will surround you from all directions and they will keep their eyes on you all the time. Adam also said that the region of the Sun is the dexter region of India and that causes great wonders he used to show to the people there. He also claimed that the Nabataeans had homes with the statues of the seven planets in them and that they had a house they called Al-Nainaah that they worship and use in their making of charms, like the charm of softening the bones, horns, stones and metal objects and every other solid items till they get soft and doughy and they way it is done is by taking ten pounds of alkali and ten pounds of fresh blossoms. Then pour three times the weight of both ingredients in a container of clear water and soak them and leave them for seven days and drain the water, then add another alkali and blossoms like the first time then water again and drain and you do that for three times each time you leave it for seven days and on the third time add to each ten pounds water, half a pound grinded ammonia and two ounce bat milk. Then put all on a low heat or in the heat of a very hot Sun, like its heat in the months of June, July and August and leave it in this hot Sun for ten days and cook it for one day, drain it and then soak whatever you want of horns, canine tooth's and all hard edgy objects in this mixture and leave it in the hot Sun or on fire but cover it too keep any dust from getting into it with a piece of cloth and however you cook it, in the Sun or on fire, cover it with a lid because that will soften all the hard objects and makes it doughy so it is easier to be used in any of the magical charms. There is also another formula that gives the same effect on objects but it is done with different ingredients and the way it is done is by taking equal amounts of citron acid and rice vinegar and mix it with three dirham ground sea foam and ammonia and keep stirring constantly for one day, then leave it in the Sun for three days and soak the solid objects that you need to soften in it and put it in the hot Sun till it is soft and easy to kneed with and use in the magical charms. This formula is great for softening sulfur but because of the strong smell of the sulfur, this formula is not used in the edible charms but other objects like stones and solid objects are used in charms that have very strange effects.

Daghreeth said that taking a weight of ten dirhams of ground saffron and mixing it with alcohol, then give it to someone to drink will make that person laugh till he dies and that he will not be able to control himself or stop himself from laughing also no one will be able to help him or do anything to stop him from dying. Daghareeth also says that the amount in this formula is what is unique about it because if we use ten and a half dirham or nine and a half dirhams of the saffron we will not get the same effect and the person that drinks it will not be affected, will not laugh and will not die of laughing. The effect of saffron and its specialty is in its weight because if we increased or decreased the amount it will not give any effect. I preferred mentioning this formula in this chapter rather than the later chapters were I talk about the specialties of each plant, because there was a direct connection with this formula to the Nabataean groups. There is another plant that is called the lion grass, this plant is harmful to all the plants around it and the way to avoid its harm is by ordering a maid to hold a white rooster with a comb and to walk around the location of the plant holding and moving the rooster till the rooster starts to flap his wings and once he does that several times it will cause the plant to dry and stop its harmful affect on the other plants, the rooster scares the plant and causes it to dry out.

Spikenard is also one of the plants that have a weird effect on birds if they smell it, as it causes the birds to remain with the plant and they cannot separate from it and on some of the birds it has the effect of continuous screaming and that is really weird.

Daghreeth said that he realized from roaming the Indian regions and other places that each land has a different special plant; like the elderberry plant grows only in Egypt, the ebony plant grows in Sudan, the black wood grows in Africa, the banana and prickly pear plants grow in Morocco region and others that are on the same line from the east like bush-grass. So all regions have their own plants that only grows there and not anywhere else and not necessarily the nature of the region like the air and water that made the land suitable for certain plants to grow in some and not in other regions. Then the gathering of the nature of the land and the specialty of the place that it grows in forms the first reason of the line that region is with the planets that pass by its horizon and causes things in these plants that does not happen in other plants in other regions.

Adam also confirmed that the changes in the nature of the plants and their effects come from the effect of the planets on some regions and he gave an example of some from the east and the west regions. So he pointed out that in the Andalos regions on an island there called Kades in the green sea, a place where no ship ever sailed, there is a plant that grows in the spring which looks like wild watercress and it is called in the language of the Kasdanyeen and they are a group of the Nabataeans, Al-Helfaan or the Askataas in the language of the people in that region. The people in that area are shepherders so they feed that plant to the sheep in the spring and the sheep themselves love to eat it and when they milk the sheep and drink the milk they get intoxicated or if they eat the seeds of the plant they get drunk like they had alcohol and the effect of the intoxication would vary for each person like the effect of alcoholic drinks in the blood of each person. Adam said that the people in that region know that when the summer comes the plant stops growing and disappears so they keep the milk and the seeds by drying them and mixing them with the wheat flower and they eat it piece by piece. They know that it still intoxicates them in that shape but they say it is good to calm the people down in the summer heat.

Siglimasah is one of the close towns to Al-Andalos region, there is a tree there that grows to be about three cubits tall or little taller sometimes. The leaves of this tree looks like the laurel plant, if any person made an wreath from this tree and wore it on his head and kept it all day, that person will not sleep as long as he has the wreath on his head and he will also not feel any tiredness that normally a person would feel from the lack of sleep.

There is a tree in the European region that if any one sits under for half an hour during the day or touches it or cuts a branch or a leaf from it or if they were to shake the tree would immediately die. In the Sakalibah region there is a small plant that looks like leguminous with a leaf that looks like rue, if you soak this plant with its leaves and branches in cold water after washing off the dirt, it will make the water hot like fire and if you take it out of the water the water will cool back to normal and that is very weird. In the region of the Romans they have a gentile tree that grows on the beach and has a leaves so small in size as that of chickpeas and the length of the tree is two cubits, they gather some of the leaves and branches from the tree then they squeeze it till some juice comes out of it, then they take that juice and freeze it then they dry it and when they put one and a half ounces from it in old wine it gives whom ever drinks it a strong desire to have sex with anyone and he never gets bored or tired. In the Indian regions there is a plant that does not get burned and there is a tree that if a branch of it was cut and thrown on the ground it would move like snakes or walk like insects. In some of the regions where the northern wind blows a tree that people can hear in the spring and summer seasons a human whispering and this tree is called the tree of the (Sun) and the people in those regions say that the tree looks like a human being and they look like a male human and none of these trees look like a female figure, only male.

In the regions of Bakiyan there is a tree that glows like a lamb at night and if any one comes near it at night they would not need any torch or light because the tree is so illuminated, that it sheds light on a large area around it and they call it the Moon tree. These wonders were inspired by God unto Adam, which is why he wrote a book of a thousand pages about the features of the plants, which has plenty of wonders and secrets of the plants. In the book he also talks about a tree that he called the invisible tree. He said that this tree does not appear during the day to anyone, it only appears at night for two hours then it disappears again and these are some of the wonders that he mentioned in his book.

Adam also said that there is a tree that the Indians call Al-Kast and it grows in their region, this tree has a more pleasant smell than the other Kast trees in other regions and the Indians use it for incensing their statues and their temples and the Chaldeans say that it is the best tree to use for sacrificing unto Venus and it is valuable for sacrifices used to ask for certain requests. Daghreeth called it the Munjih and he talked about it in long detail and a group of them would mix it with buttonwood, soft and hard licorice, rose leaves, myrtle splashed with saffron and they use that to cense their clothes and statues on their many holidays. Daghreeth also said that smelling the incense of this mixture keeps the bad, diseased and contaminated air away from them, especially if it is mixed with bush-grass. The Babylonian's call this incense the incense of the Kurds.

Daghareeth also talked about the Rabakshana tree that he called the Jupiter tree. It is a short stocky tree, which rises above the ground about one cubit, the Persians call it Dar Shyshnan and the Greeks call it Asbalathon. This tree has small leaves that look like myrtle leaves and they grow in Babel. It has many thorns and if you peel the tree bark you will see that the wood is bright red inside and is very pleasant smelling and the spice dealer uses it in making scents and perfume oils. The Chaldeans have stories about this tree along with their kings in the past and one of the stories is about a king that got mad at his wife for a great sin she committed. The king loved his wife so much but he had to order her death because he could not bear the thought of her sin. He chose for this mission one of his loyal followers, but he also asked him not to slaughter her with a knife or cut her neck with a sword. So the king's servant decided to hide the king's wife in a hidden place and asked to find a woman in the wife's shape and size who looks very close to her, so he did find a woman that died and looks a lot like the wife of the king and he promised the family of that woman that he will bring her back to bury her. He took the dead woman to the king and he told the king that he had killed his wife by smothering her and the king ordered him to get her to so he could see her, and they brought the dead woman to the king. He looked from a distance at the body and he did not examine her very closely so he just saw a woman that looked like his wife and he did not suspect anything. So he ordered for her to be buried and the servant then took the body back to her family and gave them a thousand Dirhams.

Days past by and the king regretted very much killing his wife and he was sleepless and thinking only about her. So he turned to Jupiter's temple, calling unto his statue and begging him and sacrificing for him as the musical instruments played and the singers sang to please the statue. That night he saw in his dreams the statue of (Jupiter) telling him to get from Rabakshana tree some leaves and use them to incense everywhere you go, then take get a branch of the tree and wrap it with the tree leaves as much as you can around it and put it under your pillow, then see what you will see in your dream. The king immediately did what the statue of Jupiter told him and "he saw in his dream the tree of Rabakshana which is in the middle of his palace talking to him and telling him that his wife is alive in the world and if you call your servant he will get her to you because he did not kill her as he told you". The king was thrilled and very happy to hear that and he called his servant and he told him "woe unto you who disobeyed my orders". The servant said "I did not kill her because I know how much you love her and I thought if I kept her and the king regretted his decision then I would have a great prize and acceptance by my king but if I failed in my thinking and made a mistake in disobeying my king then I will accept any punishment you order". The king said "You have won my acceptance and a big reward and I thank you for keeping my wife alive as I did regret greatly her separation from me, so go and bring her back to me".

The servant brought her back and the king bowed to her from his happiness and thankfulness and he ordered a huge reward for his loyal servant. Then the servant said "Aye king I want to assure to you that I did not touch your wife and I want you to make sure of that by examining me as I'm barren and if the king does not believe me he can order my death", the king said "no matter what, your value in my heart is greater I do not need proof". But the servant insisted so his king would be assured how loyal the servant was for his king and the king did order his doctors to check him and he was saying the truth so the king doubled his reward and was very happy with his servant. The king bowed and worshipped the Rabakshana tree for the rest of his life which lasted seventy five years in ruling and this story spread in the Chaldean region and they called this tree the love tree and they wrote poems about it and they worshipped it till the king Kathoor came and he forbid that worshipping and what they did with the tree and that is how the people stopped from even mentioning the name of the tree.

Then there is the Myrrh tree that keeps the bad, diseased and contaminated air away and they use it to incense the their temples and they also make a formula of its wood and glue by adding bush-grass and licorice and they call it Sokokomsa and it means in Arabic the pleasure of the statues. The Chaldeans say that this smoke incense pleases Venus and they approach it by using this incense so that whom ever desired to approach it they would burn this incense between the hands of the statue and play the flute and drums for an hour while they ask Venus for what they desire and Venus grants them their wish and does what they ask her to do, even if what they asked for is impossible, for no obstacle would stop her not even the other planets including Mercury. Daghreeth said if we add to this smoking incense some saffron and Kast plant it would be more powerful and successful. The Chaldeans do not add that to their formula and they use it till this day, but they worship Jupiter more and ask him for their requests more than they ask the other planets and the experience have proven that both groups of Chaldeans and Kasdanis are right and powerful in their ways and with their own formulas that they use for different planets.

Daghreeth also says that there are a lot of hidden secrets and wonders that the ancient wise men have reached in their searches about plant knowledge and their functions related to the influence of the planets on them.

These ancient wise men have kept their secrets to themselves or only shared them with others with the same knowledge and never spread it to the public because this knowledge is very valuable and they only wanted to share it with the group of people who appreciate it and understand the value of it. Also Abu Bakr the translator said that Daghreeth also wrote a book, which mentioned in detail each plant and their loyalty to the planets like which ones are loyal to Saturn or Mars and the rest of the seven planets. He also said that he had made pleasant descriptions with the colors of the plants, the different animals, camels, sea creatures and birds and others. There is some that are pleasant for the eye to see and others are weird and he described them like the jewels against the sunlight, the Moon and the planets and the rays of the lights that shines from them and most of this happens with magical feats and that is how we get the wonders and secrets out of the visible sense motions that please the soul, makes it busy and captures it. The colors of the plants, like narcissus with its yellow flowers that are mixed with white and its green stalk is what captures the soul of every good human just like it also captures the best kind of animals, then there are also plants like the prince of all plants the gillyflower, that has seven colors and every color is very likable and pleasant. There are also plants, like the ones that are engraved like asparagus, that have colors like white, red, yellow and turquoise. There are also big trees like the bitter orange tree that carries some green, some yellow, some have sweet and some a bitter nature, just as in white roses there are so many different colors in them that please the soul. Beside the wonder of colors that the plants have they also have wonders in shape, for instance some have the shape of human beings, like the tree that Adam saw in the Indian regions and brought pictures of it to the Babylonians and there is another tree whose flowers looks like human shapes and these are wonders of nature.

These are all that I have captured from the book of Al-Wahshija and brought to your attention reader. This is the knowledge that he wrote about the Nabataeans and what they have of the plants natures and features and that is but a corner of the world of many corners in this field, as we know that the whole universe is composed of three main elements, the animals, the plant and the objects and the connection between them is that the plant and animal both grow and the plant shares the metals in the stones nature and their feeling. The plant is used for useful items more than the others since it gets divided into groups. One of them is the curing group, where we use the branches, leaves and roots in curing illnesses, then comes metals and salts, stones and elements like mercury and the rest like gold and silver. Then there are animals; we use all their parts like the meat, the fat, the feathers and the plants are closer to animals than metals. We prefer some plants over others because of their scent and we also prefer metals like rubies over others, we prefer the gold in the stones but the best of all are talking animals that have all the functions we have mentioned earlier in one. As the whole world is under the control of the mind and the mind Allah has specialized for humans with a soul over all the other creatures and that means that it is the efficient subject to all not the reason. So you need to understand reader that what I have gathered from the people's tales and their secrets is to be aware of the honor of existence, the mystery of things and to use the mind that Allah gave you to reach to your desires and these are some of the Nabataean's secrets that were translated by Ibn Wahshija.

Chapter Eight

WHAT IS LEFT IS TO MENTION to you reader are the effects of things which happen by their own features and not deliberately and that is the best kind of magic from one point. The knowledge that I will include comes from a book that was found in an Assyrian temple in the times of the queen Cleopatra. I will try to give examples of this knowledge just like I did before from the other nation's books and that is to make you reader aware so you have a complete idea of the knowledge of the wonders and the secrets of this field and all the experiences of the ancients that worked in it.

The effects of pure clear emeralds on the snakes that have heads shaped like oak nuts is very strange, if these snakes see an emerald their eyes tear up immediately and they will eventually loose their eyes and as soon as the snakes feel that burning effect they immediately look for elecampane and wipe their eyes in it so their eyes heals. The eagles use diamonds to keep the vermin away from their eggs similar to the use of onions to keeps bears away.

Some of the other wonders like the bones of the hoopoe, when it is thrown in running water some of the bones would sink and some would rise. Also owls in their sleep, they keep one eye open and the other closed so the open one captures the actions of every thing around while the closed continues sleeping. Also like the talon of a vulture that is used to heal gout disease, which is done by hanging the talons on the right and left sides, it heals the disease and stops the pain. There is also a stone that is called the Nasif stone, it is a Kharasany stone very white in color, one cannot use a rasp on it but it has an amazing healing ability for all stomach illnesses.

Above the valley of Khazlaj there is a stone that is dusted with black or white or spotted colors and it is found more towards the bottom, if these stones are rubbed with each other, it causes rain and no one enters through this valley out of fear they will die from the strong rain since walking on these stones causes it to rub and then it rains. There is the Ikab stone; it is a red stone in the color of the cypress clay, this stone when you shake it you hear another stone inside of it but when you break it you find that it is empty inside and it makes the birth giving easy. The salamander is a small animal which is colored like the fox, the skin of this animal does not burn and also has fine white skin on top like the ostrich's palate and the skin in its throat and the whole stomach skin will not burn either even if you put a red hot steel in the stomach it would cool off the metal and melt it. The feather of any bird has the ability to lift things off the ground and that is making a shape that is medium in size then constantly rub it on a clothes or by hand so many times then hold it close to any object smaller in size it will lift it off the ground powerfully.

The Bahit stone is a stone in the color of the red golden stones that has a glow to it, this stone if anyone looks at it they laughs until they die and nothing would save them even if the stone was covered after this person saw it, it still will kill them. The only thing that stops the effect of the Bahit stone is if the gallinule bird, which is a small black bird with a red ring and red eyes, steps on the stone and then anyone can look at the stone with no harm. The Fawina is a Habashi sandalwood when it breaks it breaks in the shape of a cross even if you continue breaking the broken pieces it will still be in the shape of a cross and that is one of natures wonders and if it is used on the patients sick with epilepsy it would cure them from it but it will make them addicted to it as well.

One of the other ways to keep the snakes away is the smell of the horns of the camels, just as ants run away of the smell of cumin and geckos run away from the smell of saffron and would not come near the place and the flea runs away of the blossoms if they are spread on the ground and would also run away by using the salt marsh if it was well spread in the houses and the bed bug stays away if you cense with ebony wood. Another one of the wonders is that the moss plant does not burn just like the jujube wood does not burn. The eagles spread buttonwood leaves in the nest because that will keep the bats out of the nest and away from its eggs. The Tiraz stone is a stone that does not break or divide neither big pieces nor small pieces of it. There is also a stone in the Nile in Egypt, it is so heavy yet it floats and never sinks and the Jimset stone if it was divided into pieces and put in glasses and imbibed with alcohol, it prevents from getting intoxicated. The Tabary stone does the opposite effect if it was divided and added to drinks it causes quick intoxication and it makes anyone lose their mind and to start to have horrific thoughts. The loadstone has the power of pulling the metal but if it was rubbed with garlic it would not work and if it was soaked in a bull blood it gets the power back and pulls the metal again. If any human looked at the snakes in the valley of Khazraj they would die and if they looked at themselves they would die and the glare from each of the snake's eyes is about ten leagues.

Another of nature's strange wonders is if a pig was carried on the back of a donkey and the donkey urinated deliberately or uncontrollably the pig would die on the back of the donkey immediately. If any woman that has her menstruation at that time were to lay on her back naked and her legs up in the air in a planted field the hail stones would not rain on that field nor in the fields around it. There is a strange feature between the dogs and hyenas; if the dog was on a hill and a hyena past under that hill and according to the location of both if the shade of the dog met the shade of the hyena under the hill, the dog falls of the hill and then the hyena kills and eats him. Also the skin of the wolf; if a person with scarlet fever sat on the skin he would be cured from the illness immediately. The significance of the number fifteen in the three houses means successful easy delivery. If a person with scarlet fever had so much pain he would be cured if he uses damask rose and it eases the pain quickly. Also if elephant dung was hung on a tree, that tree would not produce for a whole year and if it was hung on a woman she would not get pregnant for the whole year either.

The table of fifteen that Imam Abu Hamid Al-Ghazali may his soul rest in peace, pointed out.

The yellow water stone has the power of curing the stomach and the body parts from any illnesses as it takes the illness power and breaks it up and voids its power. There is a metal that is called Allaiyah, this metal when it is mixed with mercury it congeals it and it makes the mercury leap like it is boiling. Also the stripped spider cures from the scarlet fever and if it does not completely cures it in some cases it at least slows the illness down, the sap of the pine tree also if it is added to the spider the cure becomes faster.

The snakes and vipers run away when they hear the sound of the owls. There is a metal called the Isfidiroyah if it is mixed with some silver that was extracted from copper then when put in a nest of a bird that bird will not be able to move until he is removed from there by the charm maker. The lion and donkey especially of all the other animals have the feature of following any human anywhere he would go, if he was wearing an outfit or holding a piece of meat or had on his body the scent of another human's semen. Mercury is a metal that can harm humans. The Rabbits forehead has a feature of shredding the human flesh if it touched it. Plastering the gold with lime and mice dung is like plastering it with acid and using the bird's dung on gold gives it back the shine and nature. If the gold also was mixed with any object that changed its quality add some molding or sulfur or other golden stones it will clear the gold and return its shine and nature back.

Sulfur kills and burns any object yet it revives the gold and makes it better and higher in quality. The Dahnaj also softens gold and makes it moist, if it was plastered with lime or mixed with tin it would be much easier and faster to work with. When the low grade gold was to be washed in squeezed henna water and put off in that water couple of times that will soften the gold completely, if salt was added to the gold it will make it very red in color and if the silver smelled the sulfur it gets extremely dark and if it was mixed with salt it brings back its clearness immediately.

Ammonia has the feature of pulling things from the deep and from any height. Al-Natroon is a metal that washes off all objects from any dirt and clears it and returns it to its bright natures. If lapis is mixed with gold it makes the gold brighter and higher in quality and if it was put on coal with no fire it would start fire in that coal. The Sepj works wonders in curing the eyes. If the sulfur inside the Markishithya was burned and plastered with lime until it is white as flour it becomes a material used in industries. The magnet has lead in its ingredients that is called Andrademos and glass cannot be made without it. The Tutya is great for the moisture in the eye and the best kind of it is the white in color. Coral is used to take fillings out of teeth. The ashes of lobsters are very useful for almost all the eye's pains and illnesses. If a dog would eat the spleen of a camel he would die immediately and that is really strange. If the dung of a white dog was blown in or smeared in the throat of one strangled or the slaughtered it would cure quickly. If a female turtle's pupil of the eye was put in a pot on a fire for the whole day it will never boil. The Haray tree is a short tree from Kharasan, this tree has a male and a female kind, if any woman was to drink five ounces of this tree's female kind, she would have an extremely increased sexual desire and would disregard any manners and if any man would drink five ounces of the tree's male kind, he would stay awake and will not sleep at all and the only way to remove the effect of the tree is by drinking two ounces of chalk. The seeds of the male kind of this tree if it was fed to someone in his food that person will be continuously flatulent from the time he eats till it digests in his stomach and he has no other option at that point. The seeds of the female kind of this tree when fed to someone that person would sleep for three days nonstop and the only cure is to make him drink hot water with the Rukaby oil. The leaves of this tree get grinded, kneaded with sulfur water then used for patients with leprosy and it cures them immediately from the first use. The wood of the Kandar tree, which a snake or a scorpion falls on, it would die immediately and quickly. The salt is used for the bite of a scorpion, snake or wasp. A kind of the leguminous is called the Bakla Al-Hamkaa stops the bleeding from a cut and it would heal the wound and cure any cough if the patient eats of it for a day or two. The goat would die naturally if he feels the presence of a lion and if some hair was taken from the goat when it is in this position and was cut with the left hand then a person with scarlet fever was to incense with it he gets cured immediately, it might come back for a little while stronger than before, but it will be cured after that and it will not come back.

The scorpions die immediately when they see a gecko just like the snakes with owls. Among the wonders I found from the queen Cleopatra is a ring that is made of Chinese metal or it could be made of agate and has the following twenty six letters engraved on it, this ring will protect and grant the person that wears it any thing he desires and it will protect from a tyrant king, a criminal or any other fear and if one letter was missing from the twenty six letters it won't give the wanted effect.

Chapter Nine

WE ALSO FOUND IN THAT BOOK in the temple some talismans that were used back then in the time of queen Cleopatra that I would like to share with you reader, these talismans do wonders with the natural functions they posses. Of these talismans there is the kohl talisman that the person that has a snake bite or scorpion sting or viper or wasp or all other vermin bites use it as a cure and the way it is made is by taking the gallbladder of a kite and let it dry in the shade, then put it in a clean glass bottle with some groundnut juice and use it when someone is bit by any of these vermin use it for three days and that will cure that person from the bite. The talisman of the rattling bell that is used to force snakes and scorpions out of their holes and the way it is done is by taking a pharaonic glass bottle and steel fillings and melt them in a container with red arsenic and red magnesia, then take the mixture out and break it into small pieces, then grind some red rust with black henna then add it to the melted metal and make a bell of it and make the handle of the bell out of loadstone. Once you are done making the bell use it to get snakes and scorpions and similar vermin out of their holes and then you can make what you would like with them. There is also a bird that has the feature that he could get the snakes and scorpions out of their holes by shrieking out loud.

The smoke talisman that gathers mice together in one place, the way it is done is by taking the juice of white grape and the juice of onion, tin, Indian red cowpea, grind the cowpea with the tin and kneed it with the juices and make it into a dough and make small balls in the size of chickpeas and dry them in the shade, put them aside until you need to use them then burn one of the little balls on a coal fire the mice then will gather where the smoke is and then you can use them for what ever you need.

A talisman that gathers crabs, the way it is done is by taking the leaves of the apricot tree and the leaves of the fox tree with some rabbit blood and grind them all till it becomes soft in texture, then put it in a cloth and hang it with a thread in a watery location that has crabs dwelling nearby and the crabs will gather and hang in trying to get to the mixture.

A talisman that gathers fish, the way it is made is by rotten millet plant and adding to it goat fat and grinded beans and some bull blood and mix them all very well then put the mixture in a cane container and tie it with a packthread then put it in a location that is known to have lots of fish, the fish will gather for the smell and then you can throw your net and catch the fish.

A incense talisman that gets burned under a tree that causes all the birds on the tree to fall, the way it is done is by taking a sea turtle's fat with the Egyptian Nile's grain, an equal amount of the green shell of the walnut and horsetail. Grind all and kneed with donkey urine, then dry it in the shade after making it into small balls in the shape of chickpeas and put it aside until you need it, when you do use one of the balls on a coal fire under a tree that has birds cover your nose so you do not smell the smoke, when the birds smell the smoke they get drunk and start falling and if you wash their feet with hot water they would immediately get up again.

There is another incense talisman that has the same effect but this one is done by taking an equal amount of mandrake and sugar cane and kneed it with the water of the moist carob, shape it the size and shape of chickpeas then dry them and burn it under the tree but do not burn it on a windy day because the wind spreads the smoke and carries it away and once you are done cense the tree with a mixture of bush-grass and chestnut so that bad smoke that you have burned earlier will go away from the tree.

The talisman of the wreath which if anyone would wear gives him strong vision in which he can see very far things and if the person takes that wreath off he would get back to his normal vision, the way it is done is by taking branches of a tree that is called Katla, it is a tender tree so it is easy to make a wreath with it, and wear it to see the far vision. In the squeezed juice of this tree a very huge benefit if it is mixed with wine vinegar and used on the areas infected with leprosy it cures it immediately.

The talisman of a glass in which those who drink from it never get drunk and the way it is done is by taking thick copper and an equal amount of citron acid vinegar elevated with gourd and alembic and the juice of Nibty cabbage and the juice of soft galingale, then wash the glass before you pour this formula in it repeatedly until the glass has had the formula in it for about a pound then empty it and keep it until you need it and when you take it out to use rub it with some bitter almond oil and who ever drinks from it will never get drunk.

A talisman to put on the dining table so the flies do not fall on it and the way this talisman is done is by taking fresh bush-grass with yellow arsenic and dried truffle, add all and grind and kneed with the extract of grapes and rub your hands with some oil and make a talisman with this mixture and put it on the dining table and that will keep all the flies away from the table.

Another talisman that keeps all the vermin away from the dining table and the way this talisman is done is by taking a skin of the horse tan it like any other skin and make a dinning table of it and use it the same way we pointed out earlier and these skins are now is sold in Makah.

A talisman for snakes with ink and the way it is done is by taking grinded birthwort and add it to wild frog meat then after grinding them very well add black ink. After drying in the shade make it in the shape of hazelnut and when you need dissolve one of the small balls with ammonia water and write with it whatever you desire on a piece of paper and put it in the bag of the snake charmer with his snakes and the snakes will die as soon as that ink on the paper touches their skin and that will tear them apart right there and then.

A incense talisman if the incense rises into the sky it looks like a stream of fire and it scares everyone and the way it is done is by taking the root of Kotrop lit grass, it is a grass that lights up at night, grind and kneed with the deer brain and a gallbladder of a bull then make it in the shape of chickpeas and dry it in the shade then burn it on a low fire as a weird smoke will rise of it like it is a red fire in the sky and it will scare every one and it does not work in the cloudy weather or in the windy days.

A talisman like a torch of light that makes one who is carrying it temporary blind and unable to see anything but the person behind him can see through the first person everything in the house and the way it is done is by taking the oil of a fish called Dokhs and they call it in Egypt the dolphin, melt the fat of the fish and when you need it make a wick of linen and put it in the oil with grinded verdigris then light it up and use it as we mentioned.

A talisman that if it was put under of a pillow of a sleeping person it would keep him awake where he cannot sleep at all and the way it is done is by grinding the grass of Birshawshan and sieve it then kneed it with the milk of a female pig that is breast feeding and make of this a statue of a little boy that is epileptic and put that under the pillow of a human he will be distracted and absentminded and will not be able to sleep again.

A talisman that if a man wrapped it on his groin and had sex will not have children and the way this talisman is done is by making a statue of a monkey from copper and make a hole in the back of the statue and add some sequoia and wrap it around and that will prevent one from having children.

A talisman that who ever carries it on their person the dogs will not bark at him or come near him and actually they would run away from that person and the way it is done is by grinding the root of the mandrake plant and knead it with the milk of the female dog then make the shape of a dog and carry it with and walk through a barking dogs they will stop and fear you.

A talisman of water that makes metal melt when it is soaked in it and the way this talisman is done is by taking a small amount of sugarcane, grape and fresh pomegranate skin mix all this together after grinding and knead it with wine vinegar till it is very well mixed, then reduce it into a container and put the heated iron in this mixture and it will turn the iron into water, leave it for about an hour and drain the water, the iron will be in the bottom of the container heavy, very shiny and did not mix with the water.

There is also the talisman of cold water (Acid) that would burn any clothes when it is sprayed on them and the way this talisman is made is by grinding some golden stones and kneading it with wine vinegar then hang it to drain drop by drop take the drained liquid and putrefy it in manure for fourteen days and keep changing the manure every three days and that is in a bottle well sealed then take it out and bury it in the bran as it is and when you need to work with it use it in a bottle and be careful not to touch it by hand or let it touch your clothes and use it where ever you desire to burn off clothes as it is the cold fire that burns and never extinguishes.

The talisman of red water that is poured in lamps to light the house and shine it in the color of red rubies and for that you need to get the a kind of the green cypress cabbage, cook the cabbage in a very hot furnace till it becomes red then grind it and add to it five times the weight wine vinegar and put it in a thick bottle and leave it for three days and shake it every day three times that red water that will come out of it will be like purple put it in lamps and you will see wonders.

Another similar talisman that is used to light up with and this one is purple in color, the way it is made is by taking some of the dry hard blossoms and some of the tinctures, after grinding pour their weight four times water. Put in a pot till it boils smooth, then leave it to cool and clear up and that will turn into red water like ruby that shines.

A talisman to make green killer scorpions and the way they are made is by fasting for a whole day then chew on wild cucumber leaves and you put the chewed leaves in a glass bottle and seal it and hang it in a dark moist house that does not get any sun light and after forty days scorpions will be born that are green and if they sting any human it will kill immediately and it is useful to cure from scorpion stings if it is soaked in oil and hung in the sun for twenty one days until it dissolves and dies then use it on the sting and it takes the pain away and if you drop one drop of this oil on any scorpion it would kill it immediately.

A talisman to make a red snake and the way it is done is by soaking big spiders in female donkey milk in a glass bottle and leave it for three days then take the fat from a turtle and grind it with the spiders and the milk till it takes on the form of a brain and put it in wool cloth and bury it in manure and after seven days strange red snakes will be born and if you used harvestman instead of spiders then the snakes that will be born it will look like serpents because the harvestman is the enemy of the serpents in Egypt as when the harvestman sees the serpent it follows it all the time until it fights with it and stings it to death and the serpent would die immediately.

A talisman to keep bugs away from the home or the village and the way it is made is by taking hair from the comb of a reindeer at the moment it is struck by a male bull, then make a bug of copper and tie a hair on each bug and make it like a bunch and put it in a yellow jug and seal it and bury it in the middle of the house or the village and that will keep the bugs away.

The talisman of making paint that kills the person that enters the house that is painted with it from the smell or it would pass out and the way it is made is by taking small amounts of bull blood, cupping blood, fat from the horses hooves and gather all that in a glass container and beat until it is well mixed then take quarter of the amount of the mixture some bat milk and half of the amount of the bat milk some nightingale milk, grind and add to the first mixture, mix all very well then paint the walls of the house and the ceiling and make sure to put cotton that is soaked in violet oil in your nose as your painting and hurry out as soon as you are done. After painting, cense with brushwood, grain and the green shells of the walnut and then close the door for three days and make sure the door and the house is well sealed so the smell does not come out and the air does not go in either and whoever opens that door and smells the paint will pass out and the person that would go in will die.

This talisman is made by the people of Antakya and it is an ointment talisman that they rub on wood and when they light it, it lights like a candle and the way it is made is by beating the fat of an otter and mix it with Daphne oil, soap and some sulfur and it becomes like ointment, then they rub it on a stick or wood or cane and they light it and it lights like a candle and does not burn off till the end of it.

A talisman of a drum that is used to scare wolves and the way this charm is made is by taking porcupine, slaughter it and pluck its feathers and it looks like arrows that he uses to kill animals with. Then skin it and tan it and make a drum with it and use it at night and any wolf or wild vicious animal which hears it will run far away from the area also if any of the vermin hear it they would die.

An oily talisman to catch crocodiles and the way it is done is by taking equal amount of the fat of a mole, jerboa and lizard, melt it till it becomes an oil and when you decide to catch a crocodile, slaughter a dog and skin him and rub that oil on the dog and hang him with a hook that is tied with packthread and throw it in the Nile, the crocodiles will come to it and when one of them swallows it pull him quick out of the Nile water and that is how they catch a crocodile from the Nile.

A light talisman that silences frogs in rivers, lakes, or any small ponds of water and the way it is done is by kneading crocodile fat with wax and make a wick of it and light it up in any of these locations and the frogs will be silent as long as the wick is lit.

A talisman for scorpions is made by grinding the Burghnatha grass and the Shikaay grass and adding grinded antidote stone and red henna, knead all the ingredients with bramble water and make a statue of a scorpion and make from the rest little round balls in the size of chickpeas and dry them and put the statue in a location in the house and between its hands coal in a brazier and use the little balls for incense and the scorpions will leave the house.

These are the talismans that were provided in the book and I had to mention it in the book so you be safe reader and aware of the knowledge of talismans and to make sure to keep the valuable secrets to yourself and as I am ending my book I would like to advise you with Socrates' nine admonitions that he used to advise his students and they are to accept the natures of each other from the beginning of the knowledge that will make one know how to thank when one has plenty and that will make life at its best, he also said do not trust your secrets other than in your heart because you cannot trust time as it can attack you with its cruel army, do not underestimate things as they can grow and be useful to you, also raise your friends with love and manners like you raise children and do not show all your feelings at one time because if you do he will return with hostility, also stay away from tyrannies because it wastes magnanimity and honor and manners, also use love and refuse the injustices so you will not surrender to evil and surrender to goodness, also do not restrain anyone with their actions or they will avoid restraining your enemy, also do not prevent people from asking you because then you would be the only one holding God's luxuries to yourself you have to thank God for giving you all this by giving who does not have it and have so much less than you as who gives that is a way of thanking God, he also said to know the value of things we owe and love very much it will return the love. So this is the advice that Socrates used to advise so be aware of their values.

Also Pythagoras the philosopher would advise his students with seven admonitions after teaching them and he would say, correct your balances and know them, fix your mistakes if you would be safe, do not light fire when you see a cutting knife, balance your desires and your health will last, use justice you will gain continuous love, use time like the rulers that control you and have your fate in hand, do not waste your bodies and soul or you would regret losing them in bad times. Be aware of this reader may Allah protect you and bless you and hang on to this knowledge.

Here I end my book and I thank Allah for that, he is the one that granted me the light of mind with no end and the thanks are to Him first of all and till the end with no purpose, Glory to Allah and his prophet Muhammad Peace be upon him and all his followers ≡

❧Translator's Preface❧

When I was first asked to translate an eleventh century Arabic manuscript, I suspected it would be a daunting task. Arabic is a living language, with many dialects as well as a modern standard form. It has continued to grow (and sometimes shrink) as the necessities of the age required. Translating historic texts has always required a historical knowledge of Arabic as a language. Words change their meaning depending on when they are spoken or written, where they are spoken or written, and sometimes by who speaks the word. The theologian, for example, may use Arabic words with more specific intent, as a lawyer today might, than for example, the average author.

With this in mind, I was nevertheless surprised at the difficulty of translating a medieval work on astrology. Muslims have historically had a very embracing attitude to the pursuit of knowledge and the various scientific disciplines often intersected one another. Ghayat Al-Hakim was at once a metaphysical, philosophical, theological and a scientific work whose language borrowed meaning from each of these disciplines.

Translating this work became a many-layered obsession. To translate a work, you must first understand it. Although this may seem obvious, far too many works are translated as a technical exercise. Each work must be treated as poetry. What is the author truly saying? How is he or she using the words, the grammar and the syntax to convey his or her feelings? To do this, the translator must obviously have an understanding of the subject. There must be some common bond. I found that bond on a number of levels. Ghayat Al-Hakim deals with and assumes a knowledge of much Islamic theology and philosophy. However, it also deals with a science of many disciplines, which either originated in the Muslim world or were rediscovered by Muslims examining the works of those great civilizations before them, and which are no longer actively pursued. While Arabic as a language continued to develop, the science it was used to describe in this book became one of primarily historical interest.

This required me to engage in an examination of astrology on a much deeper plane than I had initially expected. Before translating could begin, true understanding had to start. I jumped into this with increasing interest even consulting with modern day astrologers to discuss concepts and terminology.

Ultimately, I feel I have provided a faithful rendition of this complex and fascinating topic. Those readers familiar with Arabic and particularly with historical Arabic texts may be surprised at the relative simplicity of the grammar and syntax used. Arabic is a poetic language and the modern day belief in conciseness and brevity were not a staple of the period. One Arabic sentence in Ghayat Al-Hakim could be the equivalent of one paragraph in English. I also endeavored to be faithful to the author by maintaining his approach and style in writing. The Ghayat Al-Hakim is a philosophical work as well as one concerning astrology, I have found much wisdom in these pages and my translation was often slowed as I reflected on the author's assumptions and on the different levels of meaning he may have been implying. It is my hope that this translation allows the reader the ability to catch at once the basic intent of the author as well as providing some context with which to examine the rich depths of the work.

❧{Introduction}❧

This first English translation of The Picatrix, or Ghayat Al-Hakim as it is titled in classical Arabic, represents a major contribution to the corpus of Hermetic literature. The Warburg Institute, which published excellent scholarly editions in Arabic, German and Latin, decided not to do an English translation with the idea that only Medievalists would be interested in reading it, along with the prohibitive cost of a new translation. However, the continued increase in popularity of Hermetic studies as well as the growing number of English readers desiring to refer to this book, has made the publication of this English edition necessary.

Long regarded as source material the text of this Medieval work consists of four books covering the art and practice of Astrological, Talismanic and Astral Magic. The author has compiled information derived from 224 books by "ancient sages" with the intention of uniting all these diverse arts into a practical system. Although attributed to Pseudo-al-Majriti the question of exact authorship remains unanswered. The style in which the author of the Picatrix presents information resembles that of the Ikhwan al-Safa whose encyclopaedia, the Rasa'il, influenced Hermetic philosophy during the 10th and 11th centuries. Known as the Brethren of Purity, the Ikhwan al-Safa drew their philosophy from many diverse sources; Aristotle, Plato, Pythagoras, the Greeks, Persians, Indians and the Arabs [among whom perhaps Jabir Ibn Hayyam was the most famous]. There are even passages within the Picatrix taken directly from the Rasa'il, implying that the author shared some of the views expounded by the Ikhwan. Clearly, this sort of synthesizing reflects the tendencies of later Hermetic philosophers who were trying to unify all spiritual and philosophic traditions. It is unfortunate if not surprising that there is little information available in English about the Ikhwan al-Safa.

The Picatrix, like the writings of Jabir, could be an important connection between Hermetic philosophy in the West and the esoteric traditions of the Middle East. Its importance was first recognized by Alphonso the Wise in the thirteenth century, who had it translated into Spanish. Why Alphonso thought the Picatrix was worthy of his attention remains a mystery at least to the present editor. Nonetheless we have him to thank for the transmission of this work to the West and, while the significance of this document as compared to the Rasa'il is slight, it remains an important link in the history of Hermeticism. Brought out of the obscurity of the Middle East it passed through the hands of such prominent figures as Marsilio Ficino, Pico della Mirandola, Peter of Abano and Henry Cornelius Agrippa. A Latin translation made its impression on the Bard Rabelais and the Venetian Inquisition cites it as a cause for the arrest of Casanova. With such colorful figures surrounding the Picatrix, it is no wonder that scholars such as Lynn Thorndike and Francis Yates would dedicate many pages to it. Citing Henry Corbin, Christopher McIntosh suggests that it may even have influenced Johann Valentin Andrea when he wrote the Fama Fraternitatis.¹ Here we read the words of Aristotle, Plato, the Nabateans and among others, Hermes himself. Various ideas are brought together and presented as a whole system utilizing the symbolism of Arabic astrology and alchemy. Consequently we see a complicated astrological scheme united with talismanic magic and imbued with the mysteries of those correspondences to attain mastery of the Royal Art. Finally after 1000 years, the Picatrix is available for the eyes of English readers.

❖{Prologue}❖

IN THE NAME OF ALLAH, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. Praise be to Allah Whose guidance broke the darkness of ignorance; through His divine decree, miraculous events are created, and unto Him all shall return. With His decree, day and night became different. He creates things from nothing. He creates all beings and assigns them their allowances. He is the perfect original designer of every being; He neither treats things nor abandons them. Attributes are not sufficient to describe Him, and injustice is incompatible with Him. Words cannot adequately describe Him, and events cannot happen to Him. May Allah grant salvation to the Master of Messengers and the Seal of all Prophets to whom the Book (the Qur'an) was revealed in the unequivocal Arabic language. May Allah also grant His last Prophet, who has been recorded in the ancient Psalms, and His pure and righteous family salvation. May peace be upon him until the day of judgment.

For those who are inspired to delve into the science of philosophers in order to look for their secrets and search for their miracles, I would like to say that my motive in writing this book, which I titled The Goal of The Wise, is what I came across when I wrote the previous book titled The Rank of The Wise. I started writing this book in the year 343 when I finished editing The Rank of The Wise, and I completed it in 348. I was encouraged to write this book by the widespread interest by our generation in the book in which I talked about talismans and the art of different types of magic although they were not aware of what they were looking for or what approach they should follow. They desperately tried to find what has been made off limits for them by the philosophers who prevented them from discovering it and intentionally concealed it, made it vague and veiled it by indecipherable symbols because of the destruction it entails for the world. However, Allah, Who protects His World, forbids that from taking place. For that purpose they erected temples and sculptured pictures on them as signs to knowledge seekers and clues to researchers. They left many books replete with symbols, secrets and an indecipherable scripts that can only be understood by philosophers like themselves.

Accordingly, I sought to make it known and explain to the people the darkened path which leads to this divine conclusion and to point out what philosophers have concealed concerning this magical outcome as I endeavored to do in developing this result. I have divided this work into four books as I did in The Rank, and every book is divided into several chapters:

The First Book consists of seven chapters because the fast planets are seven. The first chapter deals with the Virtue of Wisdom. I discuss in the first book the astrological ratios and the pattern of these ratios in making talismans and how planets cast their light on other orbiting planets. Additionally, I present in the first book the vague meanings which have been withheld and concealed by philosophers.

The Second Book deals with the astrological pictures and their functions, and it explains the secrets which philosophers have concealed about these functions. This book also deals with the patterns of borrowing magic in the world of formation and dissolution as called by the philosophers of the elite. Moreover, it explains why Plato calls for finding these pictures.

The Third Book is about the fortunes of the planets from the three generative origins, and it explains that there is nothing left in the world of formation and dissolution that agrees with such functions; reactions are impossible because of their fluidity and susceptibility to interaction, and consequently, nothing remains. I also mention their tempers in dealing with one another to attain the required magical function through the effect of the original or natural heat or both either by means of emanating incense or by whatever cooked food or drink that can get into the stomach.

The Fourth Book talks about the magic of the Kurds, the Nabateans, and the Abyssinians and examples of the magical tricks which are considered the best type of magic. I complete this purpose without withholding or concealing anything. I beseech Allah's assistance to help me complete this endeavor. He is my supporter, and with His support I hereby begin, Allah willing.

Book I

❖Chapter One❖

I WOULD LIKE TO ADVISE YOU, my brother, may Allah enlighten your mind, that wisdom is one of the most virtuous talents and one of the most preferred gains. Wisdom is the knowledge of sublime reasons for which beings exist, and the obvious reasons for things which have reasons for their existence. You must be certain of their existence and what and how they are. Although they are many, they ascend in order to the One Being, who caused other beings to be, whether they are far away or near by.

That One is first in reality and His Being does not stem from any other being. He is self-sufficient and thus, His Being does not gain from any other being; by no means does His Being benefit from any other being.

Fundamentally, He cannot be a body or in a body. His Being is different from all other beings and, in actuality, there is nothing in common, except the name only, although not in the concept of the name.

He can only be One; He is One in reality, and He is the One Who gave all other beings their identities by which we learn to identify them. He is the original Truth who assigns to others their truth. His truth is self-sufficient and consequently, He does not gain from the truth of others.

It is unimaginable to think that there is more perfection than His: not to mention that it does not exist, a more complete truth than His, or more complete Oneness than His. He is All-knowing of how other beings derived their essence, their realities, and their identities from Him. He is also All-knowing of how cause-and-effect gains its characteristics.

He is all-knowing of the ranks of all beings: some are first, some are middle, and some are last. The last have causes, but they are not causes per se for things below them. Similarly, the middle beings have causes before them, and they are causes for things under them as well. The first are the causes of what are under them, but they do not have causes above them. He is All-knowing of how the last ascend in rank until they reach the first, and how the order is managed at first and accepted by all beings in their ascending order until they reach the last.

This is wisdom in reality, my student; so what do you think of the one whose approach is this? Wisdom, may Allah bless you, is broad and noble, and seeking it is an obligation, as well as a virtue. It enlightens the mind and the soul with an everlasting and splendid light as they seek it and understand it and pay little attention to this mortal world. Wisdom will motivate the mind and soul to ascend from the world from which they were originated to the higher distinguished world where they shall grow and settle so that Allah may advise them of the cause-and-effect of the world and the reason for relating the cause to its effect. Allah is in their midst so that they may certainly know that He is the cause of the world, and the world is His effect, and the reason for this effect is worshipping Him and recognizing His existence. He said, "I have only created djinn and men, so that they may serve Me,"² that is to know Me. He will protect them and provide them with material subsistence so that they may thank Him and praise Him. He can bring about misery, as well as happiness to whomever He wills, and He can keep whomever He wills in His ever-lasting Grace.

Wisdom has three subjective characteristics: it grows and never vanishes, it chastises and disciplines, and it will not approach anyone who is not interested in it.

You may know that this conclusion, which I am about to disclose, would not have existed without Wisdom. It has been rightly called conclusion by the wise. To people specialized in logic, a conclusion is the fruit of analogy as mentioned in the introductions. The only purpose for presenting these two conclusions is to motivate you to seek knowledge. Knowledge can only be obtained by the wise who are well versed in all arts of wisdom: some of these arts are religious such as the science of revelation, the science of asceticism and the science of *fiqh*³, some are natural such as the celestial, the world, the universe and evil, some are theological such as the knowledge of the self and the Creator, and some are logical and analytical. Accordingly, the rank of these two conclusions on the scale of wisdom is similar to the rank of deduction on the scale of analogy. This is the best of what has been presented in the introductions. I hereby have disclosed to you a miraculous secret. This is to let you know that the outcome is the fruit of the two introductions, which is called the indicia. If the outcome is productive, it is called accumulative, whereas the Greeks call it 'syllogismus'.⁴

The introduction is composed of a theme and some information related to the theme; the theme is the subject in the philologist's discipline, and the information related to the subject is the predicate. This information may be true or false. It is certain that the introduction or the related information are not defined because what is stated in the predicate is taken or drawn from the subject, although some of it could be defined and some could be drawn. Thus, the information is neither limited or drawn, although some of it could be limited and some could be drawn. Informational statements are usually used in most cases. Most of the other styles of speech are not used by philosophers such as the imperative, informative, interrogative and vocative styles because they do not bear truthfulness or falsehood. What we have presented needs a long explanation, that is beyond the scope of this book. Whoever likes to get further information about this topic, may consult relevant sources.

❧Chapter Two❧

YOU MAY KNOW that this conclusion is what is termed as magic. Magic is, in fact, everything that absolutely fascinates minds and attract souls by means of words and deeds. This fascination and attraction are demonstrated by exclamation, following, listening and approval. They are difficult for the mind to perceive, and their causes are veiled from the simpleton. That is because it is a divine force associated with advanced reasons for the purpose of understanding it. What I am working on is a vague discipline. Its subject is a spirit within a spirit, that includes analysis and imagination. A talisman is a spirit within a body, while chemistry is a body within a body. In summary, the causes of magic are beyond the understanding of the majority and it is difficult to invent.

The fact about a talisman is that its name is reversed (The letters of the word talisman in Arabic are 'talsam' and when this combination is reversed, it becomes 'maslat' which means domination, control); it is domination because its essence is coercion and control. It functions according to the purpose it was composed for: overpowering and coercing, by using numerical ratios and placing astrological secrets in certain bodies at appropriate times and by using incenses that are powerful and capable of bringing out the spirit of that talisman.

This situation is similar to that of the second result, termed elixir, which transforms a body to itself by coercion. It is an interacting yeast that changes things from their essence; it is like poison that travels in similar bodies and consequently, changes them to its nature in order to transform a person to another by a force placed within itself. You may know, brother, that a talisman, to philosophers, is like yeast, which is an elixir composed of earth, air, water and fire, the composition of which is transformed through interaction to its condition and is reversed to its image. Another example is Alchemy, which does the same thing; it quickly transforms the body to itself and changes it from one state to another of a higher quality; a new form, new characteristics, more solid and clear of corrosion and impurity. That is how the forbearers understood it.

The term elixir means the coercing force of the forces acting on it and compelling it to be transformed into its essence and thus become similar to it. An elixir can only be some sort of a combination of animals, plants and metals. To them this combination makes up the world and with this combination the world is made up and administered; plants can not survive on their own as well as animals which need the plants for their survival. Similarly metals need fire for melting and forming in the presence of mercurial humidity. This is what I have overlooked in The Rank Book. I would like to go back to our topic to state that: magic is limited to two branches: theoretical and practical. The science of magic deals with knowing the positions of fixed planets, the location of their pictures, the manner by which they cast their light on orbiting planets and the astrological ratios. These are the elements to be known in order to achieve what you are looking for. Under the science of magic, all options and talismans were dealt with and discussed by our forbearers. You may know that he who chooses to do this, will have delved in magic. This is necessary. The best part of the scientific magic is speech. The Prophet is quoted as saying, "Verily, some of the speech is charming". Plato also said in his book *Al-Fusul*⁵, "As a friend may turn into an enemy by unfortunate words, an enemy may become a friend by nice words." Is not that a sort of magic?

The practical science deals with the three generating origins and with what the orbiting planets are emanating in them from the planets' forces. This is termed as the special attributes by their authors although they do not know their causes or realities and they do not see any need to uncover the secrets of the forbearers or their (the three origins) mood in interacting with one another. The element heat is sought before the incense to get the help of the complete forces to overcome the incomplete forces, or a natural heat is sought from food. No other types of heats are sought and no help by animal or human spirits is needed. The magical tricks called nayranjat are the best type of this practical magic.

You may also know, my brother, that some of the magic is gained and some are tricks. The gained part is about what the Designer of the paths of the د, ب, and و has done. In this regard, it is noteworthy to quote The Almighty, "Take four birds, tame them to turn to thee"⁶.

The ancient Greeks specialized in the nayranjat, flipping the eye 'Tarjih'⁷, and talismans, which they called 'Syllogismus', which means bringing down the high spirits. They call the totality of the above magic. The ancient Greeks were not able to deal with this science without astrology. What is necessary to know about astrology is that the celestial equator, which is known as the crown, consists of planets. It is also necessary to know that these planets are grouped into twelve signs, which have certain implications on all beings in this world and that the seven planets have certain fortunes acquired from the signs according to their particular direction and situation. Furthermore, it is essential to know the relevant characteristics of similar signs, the characteristics of the seven planets, the two nodes and their positions in the celestial band, the characteristics of the planets' implications on all beings in this world, what happens to the seven planets individually and in their inter-relationships, as well as the authentic implications of the principles governing the behavior of stars. Moreover, it is imperative to know how to exploit the most dominant of the seven planets, the order of its dominance and how to pull out its arrows. Additionally, it is crucial to know the position of the seven planets in the celestial band. This knowledge about astrology is necessary. It is available for anyone who would like to have more information in available books. In this regard, the Wise said, "I am the One who is elevated above the seven heavens". He means that He attains them with his intellectual faculty. The Almighty also said in this regard, "And We raised him (Prophet Idris) to a lofty station"⁸.

⁸Sura 19 verse 57

﴿Chapter Three﴾

YOU MAY KNOW, O seeker of the truth and reality of astrology, that the celestial sphere is a physical ball perfectly circular, and so is everything contained therein at all times and in all states. Some people thought that certain events may change the circular shape of the celestial sphere at certain times. By no means will this ever happen because the shape of the celestial sphere is the cause for its shape, since its essence has this shape. I mean that it is the first to be a perfect shape, and this perfect shape is the circle because this circle is made of one line. This is the primary cause of perfection. However, this cannot be easily proved. Astrology is an essence and dividing it into angles is a man-made technique. If we start with this technique, we will ascend from it to the essential obligation.

The method of learning this subject must follow a reversed procedure. Similarly, learning the technique of angles is the approach of learning the state of the celestial sphere. Nothing of the celestial bodies in the world of formation and dissolution will have a place in the celestial sphere and no part of the celestial sphere will have a place in the world of formation and dissolution at all unless that is achieved by coercion. As we mentioned, the celestial sphere is perfectly rounded from all sides. It is formed by one curved line; there is a point inside it and all distances from this point to the circumference are equal. This point is the center and the lines refer to the beams of planets cast on the world at the center. This is the influence of talismans. It acts as if it is an edge or a drawing that has been agreed upon. Since the celestial sphere is a comprehensive ball encompassing the entire world, there is no space or living beings beyond it.

Ether is in a static state; it is the medium where other celestial bodies return. The celestial bodies are located in its abdomen in a slanting position from the center, because its center is at the side of the slanting center of the earth. The behavior of all celestial bodies is the same, and follows the motion of the celestial sphere. The heat emanating from it contributed to bringing this world to its being. The number of angles of the celestial sphere are 360, and the number of images is 360. The rules (for the management of the world) are built in because they follow certain ratios.

Some people surmised that the celestial sphere is useful, that the usefulness of ether in the higher world is demonstrated by planets and heat and that the pictures within the angles resemble the positions of the planets when they combine together.

Others believed that the pictures within the sphere's angles are the heart of astrology and the cause of all beings.

As for the angles' functions, when an angle falls within a point, any point, where one of the fixed planets is situated and at the same time one of the orbiting planets gets to that point, then you will know that is the status of that planet's influence on Earth. Examples are: ♄ moves cold and dryness; ♃ moves heat and humidity; ☿ moves heat and dryness; ♀ moves low heat and high humidity; ♁ moves low heat and dryness; and the ☿ moves cold and humidity.

The fixed planets have similar functions. Thus, if an angle has the function of a planet that moves heat and releases low dryness and humidity to its followers, and the ☉ alone was at that place, then it decides that dryness and humidity must grow and increase. Similarly, if it happens that the planet is functioning by the ☉'s force, the growth will be faster. This was a very difficult and vague subject for ancient philosophers. Vagueness, to them, is to veil the apparent meaning of the text and conceal its intrinsic meaning. This is called vagueness, so be aware of that.

❧Chapter Four❧

THEN WHEN THE PEOPLE needed to make talismans, they found that they must know the planets' direct ratios, affecting their spreading functions, which are the essence of making talismans. I am presenting to you some of these ratios to be used as foundations upon which further steps can be built. This, therefore, becomes the astrological subject for making talismans. The maker of a talisman must be knowledgeable of the astrological ratios and formulas, confident of what he is doing and clear of any doubt or uncertainty in what he is doing in order to enforce the function of the speaking soul whereby the will, from the same causes reaches its (the talisman's) maker to obtain the sought result. I would like to introduce you to a certain state in the space close to our world, that is, do not start any work until the $\mathfrak{D}$ is in the position of the degree that produces this function. There are certain functions for the $\mathfrak{D}$ that are apparent. I will present a group of these functions later. At this time, I would like to talk about the functions of the $\mathfrak{D}$ in relationship to its particular position, in accordance with the consensus of the Indians, especially when it is in the 28th position.

❧1. THE HOUSE OF AL-SHARATAIN❧

It starts from the beginning of the Υ position to $12^{\circ} 51' 26''$ from it. The Indians indicate that when the $\mathfrak{D}$ is at this position, they travel and use laxative medicines. Thus, you may use this as a principle in making a talisman for a traveler and his safety. Also, when the ☿ is at this position, a talisman can be made to create discord and animosity between spouses or two friends. Furthermore, at this position, a talisman can be made to arrange for a particular slave to escape or be released, and another to sabotage a partnership agreement between partners because it is a fiery evil. I would like, at this juncture, to advise you of a principle: Let the ☿ always serve good deeds, and be safe and clear of any sinister or burning act. However, if it serves evil and sinister acts, let it burn. I want you to understand that.

❧{2. THE HOUSE OF AL-BOTEIN}❧

It consists of 12°, 51', 26" starting from the ♀ position to 25°, 42', 52" from ♀. Talismans are made at this position for drilling wells and rivers, achieving wishes and digging out buried treasures. Other talismans are made to help the growth of crops or they may be made to sabotage a marriage before it is consummated. Some talismans create excitement and stimulation because of their fiery fortune. Talismans may also be made at this position to release a slave or to worsen the situation for a captive to harm him.

❧{3. THE HOUSE OF AL-THURAYYA}❧

It consists of 25°, 42', 52" starting from ♀ to 8°, 34', 18" from ☿. Talismans at this position are made for the safety of those who travel by sea, for sabotaging a partnership, for releasing a prisoner or torturing him, for the beneficial use of chemistry and fire, for hunting, for promoting friendship and love between spouses, for destroying sheep, goats and cows, and for a slave to disobey his master until he is released. This type of talisman usually brings good luck. Thus, you may be aware of that.

❧{4. THE HOUSE OF AL-DEBARAN}❧

It consists of 8°, 34', 18" starting from ☿ to 21°, 25', 44" from it. Talismans are made at this position to corrupt a city, to build a building which is not expected to last or to stay in good condition, for destroying crops, for maintaining a slave under his master's control, for ruining the relationship between spouses and maintaining estrangement between them, for bringing about bad luck to a person engaged in drilling, as well as causing misfortune for a person digging out buried goods and talismans for attracting scorpions and snakes.

❧{5. THE HOUSE OF AL-HAQ'AH}❧

It consists of 21°, 25', 44" starting from ☿ to 4°, 17', 10" from ♀. Talismans at this position are made to promote the welfare of children, for advancing in their education in Islam, in writing and in trades, a talisman for the safety of a traveler and his well being as well as a speedy voyage. A talisman for the safe structure of buildings, for sabotaging partnerships, for promoting reconciliation between spouses especially if the ☿ and the star of destiny represent a constellation sign of a good human being clear of misfortunes and burning as we mentioned above. The constellations that represent human beings are: ♀, ♀, ♀, and ♀.

❧{6. THE HOUSE OF AL-HAN'AH}❧

It consists of 4°, 17', 10" starting from ♀ to 17°, 8', 36" of it. Talismans at this position are made for corrupting cities and confining them, for retaliating from kings, for inflicting harm and damage on enemies, for ruining crops and trusts, for promoting the welfare of partners and the conditions of hunting, and for causing adverse effects of medications when they are administered.

⁹The Pleiades Constellation.

﴿7. THE HOUSE OF AL-DHIRAH﴾

It consists of 17°, 8', 36" starting from II to the end of it. Talismans at this position are made for the promotion and blessing of trade and crops, as well as the safety of a voyager, for reconciliation between partners and friends, for preventing flies from entering a place of trade where they may spoil the product and necessitate redoing it. For the fulfillment of a wish from a ruler or a dignitary whom you hope to meet, for promoting the welfare of an escaped slave, for disposing of property, a house or money or similar assets from a person.

﴿8. THE HOUSE OF AL-NATHRAH﴾

It starts from the beginning of 69 to 12°, 51', 26" from it. Talismans are made at this position for reconciling love and friendship to an estranged couple, for the welfare of a traveler, for a longer period of imprisonment of captives and prisoners, for the deterioration of kingdoms, and a talisman to repel mice and bedbugs.

﴿9. THE HOUSE OF AL-TARF﴾

It consists of 12°, 51', 26" starting from 69 to 25°, 42', 52" from it. Talismans are made at this position for ruining crops, disgracing travelers on land, causing harm to others, planting discord among partners and for jailing an adversary whose harm is sought.

﴿10. THE HOUSE OF AL-JABHAH﴾

It consists of 25°, 42', 52" starting from 69 to 8°, 34', 18" from 61. Talismans at this position are made for reconciling differences between spouses, for harming the enemy or a traveler, for making the situation worse for a captive, for strengthening the structure of a building, and for bringing partners together for their mutual benefit.

﴿11. THE HOUSE OF AL-ZUBRAH﴾

It consists of 24°, 47', starting from 61 to 21°, 35', 2" from it. Talismans at this position are made for gaining the compassion of kings, dignitaries and brothers, for planting discord, animosity, disease, complications and destruction, for an opportunity to meet kings and appeal for their favors, for contacting dignitaries and endeavoring to pay for releasing a slave. Talismans for these purposes are recommended for releasing captives, for besieging cities, for increasing trade as well as for promoting the welfare of a traveler, for a strong and long-lasting building and for reconciliation between two partners.

﴿12. THE HOUSE OF AL-SARFAH﴾

It consists of 21°, 25', 44" starting from 61 to 4°, 17', 10" from 111. Talismans at this position are made for increasing farms and newly planted trees, for inflicting harm on a person by causing him to lose his assets, for breaking ships down, for promoting the welfare of partners as well as for reconciling differences between them for improved work conditions and product, and for improvement of conditions for successful hunting.

﴿13. THE HOUSE OF AL-AWWA﴾

It consists of 4°, 17', 10" starting from 111 to 17°, 8', 36" from it. Talismans at this position are made for promoting trade and farms, for enhancing the welfare of a traveler and the consummation of marriage between spouses, for releasing captives and for contacting kings and dignitaries. So be aware of that.

﴿14. THE HOUSE OF AL-SIMAH﴾

It consists of 17°, 8', 36" starting from 111 to a complete 30° from it. Talismans at this position are made for reconciling differences between spouses, for recovery from illness by treatment, for ruining farms and newly planted trees as well as damaging trusts, for harming a traveler, for the promotion of the welfare of a slave and a voyager and for bringing agreement and harmony among partners.

﴿15. THE HOUSE OF AL-GHAFAR﴾

It starts from Ω to $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ from it. Talismans at this position are made for drilling wells, digging up and retrieving treasures, for obstructing a traveler from making his trip, for creating discord between spouses, for spoiling friendship between friends and ruining partnership relations, for expelling and expatiating enemies and for the destruction of communities and towns.

﴿16. THE HOUSE OF AL-ZUBANA﴾

It consists of $12^\circ, 51', 26''$ starting from Ω to $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for damaging merchant shops, newly planted trees and farms, for separating friends and spouses, for the severe punishment of the wife if the husband so desires, for harming a traveling adversary and creating discord between partners, as well as for releasing captives from captivity.

﴿17. THE HOUSE OF AL-IKIL﴾

It consists of $25^\circ, 42', 52''$ starting from Ω to $8^\circ, 34', 18''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the improvement and increase of livestock, for isolating cities and stabilizing buildings, as well as for the safety of a traveler at sea. There is a consensus that a friendship initiated when the $\mathcal{D}$ is at this house will not be broken. Accordingly, this house is selected for tailoring talismans to make friends.

﴿18. THE HOUSE OF AL-KALB﴾

It consists of $8^\circ, 34', 18''$ starting from $\mathcal{M}$ to $21^\circ, 25', 44''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for pledging loyalty to kings to help them overcome their enemies, for stabilizing buildings, for marrying a widow, a divorced woman or a deflowered but not married woman when the $\mathcal{D}$ is at the House of $\mathcal{O}$ and when it is at the Previous House. Also, talismans can be made at this position for releasing slaves, for the growth of newly planted trees and the safety of a voyager, as well as for creating disagreement among partners.

﴿19. THE HOUSE OF AL-SHAULAH﴾

It consists of $21^\circ, 25', 44''$ starting from $\mathcal{M}$ to $4^\circ, 17', 10''$ from $\mathcal{A}$. Talismans at this position can be made for isolating cities, defeating enemies, fulfilling wishes, making a person lose all his money, for separation and alienation, for the welfare of a traveler and the growth of crops, for releasing a slave or enabling him to escape from his master, for breaking ships down and destroying them, for creating discord among partners and for enabling captives and prisoners to escape.

﴿20. THE HOUSE OF AL-NA'AIM﴾

It consists of $4^\circ, 17', 10''$ starting from $\mathcal{A}$ to $17^\circ, 8', 36''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the discipline of riding animals which are hard to tame, for a speedy travel and making the distance shorter, for bringing a concerned person home, for promoting friendship, for restricting captives, as well as for worsening the situation for partners.

﴿21. THE HOUSE OF AL-BAL'DAH﴾

It consists of $17^\circ, 8', 36''$ starting from $\mathcal{A}$ to a complete 30° from it. Talismans at this position can be made for stabilizing buildings, increasing crops, for retaining assets and live stock, for ensuring the safety of travelers and for a wife to be divorced from her husband and never to be able to marry again.

❦22. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-DA'BIH❦

It starts at the beginning of Z to 12° , $51'$, $26''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the treatment and recovery from diseases, for the separation of spouses and lovers, for causing a certain woman to be raped, for the release and escape of a slave from his location, for creating discord between partners and for the release of captives and prisoners.

❦23. THE HOUSE OF SA'D BULA❦

It consists of 12° , $51'$, $26''$ starting from Z to 25° , $42'$, $52''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for the treatment and recovery from diseases, for damaging assets, for estrangement between spouses as well as for releasing or saving captives.

❦24. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-SU'UD❦

It consists of 25° , $42'$, $52''$ starting from Z to 8° , $34'$, $18''$ from X . Talismans at this position can be made for the improvement of merchant shops and the condition of spouses, for bringing victory to armies and military detachments, for damaging the circumstances of partners and also for releasing captives. Additionally, he who tries to start a trade at this position will not be successful and will never be able to finish what he started. So be aware of that.

❦25. THE HOUSE OF SA'D AL-ALIBIYA❦

It consists of 8° , $34'$, $18''$ starting from X to 21° , $25'$, $44''$ from X . Talismans at this position can be made for isolating cities, for harming and defeating enemies, for dispatching successful messengers and spies, for damaging crops and rendering a husband impotent, for making the situation worse for a captive and for establishing and stabilizing buildings.

❦26. THE HOUSE OF AL-FARGH AL-MUKDIM❦

It consists of 21° , $25'$, $44''$ starting from X to 4° , $17'$, $10''$ from X . Talismans at this position can be made for achieving all sorts of good things: for restoring love and friendship, for the fulfillment of the wish of a traveler to be able to make a trip, for stabilizing buildings, for the safety of travelers by ships, for damaging the relationships between partners and for restraining a captive and torturing him.

❦27. THE HOUSE OF AL-FARGH AL-MU'HIR❦

It consists of 4° , $17'$, $10''$ starting from X to 17° , $8'$, $36''$ from it. Talismans at this position can be made for a successful trade, productive crops and quick recovery from diseases, for damaging the assets of the person you are concerned with, for damaging the relationship between spouses and for hurting someone riding on a ship, prolonging the captivity of a prisoner and harming slaves.

❦28. THE HOUSE OF AL-RISHA, OR BATNAL-HUT❦

It consists of 17° , $8'$, $36''$ starting from X to the end of X . Talismans at this position are made for a successful trade, productive crops, treatment of diseases and destroying trusts, for ensuring a traveler's safety, for restoring relationships between spouses, and for restraining, harming and torturing prisoners, as well as for hurting someone riding on a ship. You should be aware of that.

The Indians relied on the above 28 pictures in their choices and attempts. That is what we have found as we reviewed their books in this regard. The important thing, as we mentioned above, is that when you try to do good things, the D must be clear of any misfortune or any burning and replete with good luck. Also when you start a good endeavor, let the D move from one good luck star to another and when you start an evil act, you do the opposite. So you should be aware of that.

As we have mentioned before, the talisman maker needs to be certain of what he is doing. He needs to be prepared and ready to accept the outcome of the intended effects. This readiness can only be realized in the human experience. However, preparedness, in fact, is the reaction of the physical realities, such as the preparedness of wax to accept the picture and the reaction of the killed to the killer; it is the preparedness of the killed to accept the killing because his organs are too weak to fight. Preparedness for weakness develops in reaction to strength. This kind of strength must be available in the substances needed to make talismans, since not every substance is good for every action.

There is a consensus on this principle in all available books. Since there should be preparedness and readiness for acceptance, acceptance must already be there and because acceptance must already be there, the sought action will exist and emerge. Existence is the acceptance to reflect the picture so that the primordial acceptance and the picture become one, such as a person's picture sticking to water or to a mirror, as well as the incorporation of the divine deity to a human being, as in Christianity, and the incorporation of the soul to the body. So understand that and be aware of it. This is to let you know that my objective in presenting these details is only to uncover what the people have concealed. Allah, Most High, does not entrust these details except to those whom He pleases. This is His way of doing things, praise be to Him.

Going back to our objective, I would like to say that if you are working during the daytime, let the ☿ be in the ascendant, and let the ascendant be one of the daytime constellations. Similarly, if you are working during the night, let that be one of the night-time constellations. If the ascendant is one of the straight-ascending constellations, work will progress smoothly to the end, however, if the ascendant is one of a curved-ascending constellations, work becomes difficult.

Nonetheless, what determines whether work is good or bad depends on whether the overlooking planets are bad luck or good luck planets. If the ascendant was in a straight-ascending constellation, but a bad luck planet was looking over it, or there was bad luck in it, that will damage the work and make it very difficult. But if it was in a curved-ascending constellation, and a good luck planet was looking over it, or if there is good luck in it, that will make work easy. Similarly, if the daytime and night time constellations ascend in a different form; that is if the daytime constellations ascend at night and the night time constellations at daytime and the good luck planets are looking over them, work will progress, but if the bad luck constellations are looking over, it will become more evil.

A talisman maker must necessarily be knowledgeable of the straight, curved, fixed, variable, of the physical shape, as well as of the night time and daytime constellations. Moreover, he must necessarily be knowledgeable of the good luck and bad luck planets, the clarity of the ☿ from any symptom of diseases it may be exposed to, and which planet and constellation are used for what type of talismans. He must also be aware of the ☿'s eclipse.

Avoid as much as you can the ☿'s eclipse when making talismans for good deeds. Wait until it is released from this knot; that is when the ☿ advances or stays behind the ☾'s aphelion¹⁰ by 12° from the beginning of the eclipse to the aphelion of the ☾, and 12° after it leaves the aphelion of the ☾. Also beware of the presence of ♀ or ♃ within 12°, or if the ☿ is declining towards the southern latitude or advancing ahead of Al-Ras or Al-Deneb¹¹ or entering or facing the ☾ by less than

¹¹Al-Ras, the Head; Al-Deneb, the Tail.

12°. Then it will be burning because it will be in contact with the ☉. This is the worst misfortune; its motion will be slow and it may not be able to reach the 12° destination. In this case, its motion resembles ♄'s motion. It will be on its way to burning, the climax of which starts from 18° from ♈ to 3° from ♍, or that can be at the end of the constellations because it is within the domain of the stars causing misfortune. Or it could be declining from the midst of the sky to Al-Tasi'.¹²

When a necessary task that you cannot delay crops up, improve the situation of the ☽ by letting ♀ and ♀ be in the ascendant or in the midst of the sky, and they will protect the ☽ from getting burned.

¹²Literally, "the Ninth", referring to the astrological house of that number and also considered the Mid Heaven. See chart.

❧{Chapter Five}❧

EXAMPLES OF THE CELESTIAL BODIES' relationships relied on in the making of talismans:

*A talisman for two lovers to get together
and to have a long-lasting relationship*

Talismans of this type are made when the ascendant is in the hour of ♈, and Al-Ras and the ☽ together with ♀ are conjunct to them or facing them and when the sign of Al-Sabi is connected to the sign of the ascendant in a triangular or a hexagonal¹³ form. Combine them side by side and bury them in the location of love. A talisman of this type is also made for a man who leaves his family whom you wish to have return.

A talisman for the destruction of an enemy that you want to drive away from his location.

A talisman for such a purpose is made in the hour of ♈ when the ☽ is in ♍. Bring as much misfortune as you can to the ascendant as well as to its master. Also bring misfortune to the house of fatefulness and let the ascendant master be connected to the house of destiny. Additionally, bring misfortune to the house of the ascendant and into the house of fatefulness which will be connected to a misfortune in Al-Rabi or in Al-Sabi. Bury the talisman outside the city.

¹³These are Trine and Sextile respectively.

A talisman for the destruction of a city.

Perceive the image of the ascendant of that town and bring misfortune to the house of its livelihood and to its house of fatefulness, to the master of the ascendant, to the ☽ and to the house of the master of the ascendant. Bring misfortune to Al-Ashir and bury it in the middle of the city.

A talisman to improve a city or a location.

It is made with the ascendant of a Sa'ad¹⁴; bring good luck to Al-Ashir, to the master of Al-Thani and to Al-Thamin. It also brings good luck to the ☽ and to the master of the house of the ☽. Bury it in the middle of the city and you will see miracles, Allah willing.

A talisman for the destruction of a city or a location.

It is made in the hour of ♀ when it is a planet of misfortune and through that you may bring misfortune to the city ascendant, to the ascendant's master, and to the house of the ascendant. You may let Al-Su'ud¹⁵ be absent from the ascendant. Additionally, you may drop Al-Su'ud and the poles from the triangle of the ascendant. Bury it in the middle of the city.

¹⁴ A good-luck star.

¹⁵ Stars of good-luck.

A talisman for expanding wealth and trade.

Make a picture, after you bring good luck to the ascendant, to Al-Ashir and to their master, to the master of their house, to the ☽ and its master, as well as to the master of the ascendant. You are also to give good luck to Al-Thani and its master and let the sign of Al-Thani mutually accept connection to the sign of the ascendant either in a triangular or hexagonal form. Furthermore, you may bring good luck to Al-Thani and let a share of fortune be in the ascendant or in Al-Ashir and have them join the share-holder while he is looking at his share. You may also give good luck to Al-Hadi-Ashar and to its master. The holder of this picture will be the wealthiest person on Earth. All his trade transactions will progress smoothly, and he will make good profits from every move he makes.

A talisman for assuming a distinguished position.

Make a talisman after bringing good luck to ascendant and to Al-Ashir and its master. Keep misfortunes away from the ascendant and its master. Make the master of Al-Hadi-Ashar a planet of good luck looking over the ascendant and its master. Let the master of Al-Ashir be affectionately connected to the master of the ascendant. When the person, who has this in mind and insists on meeting whom he seeks to assume leadership from, holds this picture, no one will be able to overrule him or challenge his opinion.

A talisman to have a ruler favor a certain person and improve his status.

Make a picture in his name and bring good luck to the ascendant by a strong Sa'ad. Let not the Sa'ad be retreating, declining, or burning, and let the master of the ascendant be strong, sound and righteous in his fortunes. Let the master of Al-Ashir be connected to the master of the ascendant in a triangular or hexagonal form and the former will give good luck to the latter. The master of Al-Ashir will be willingly connected to the master of the ascendant which is in the commanding constellations, while the master of Al-Ashir is in the obedient constellations. Never will the holder of this picture meet a ruler without getting his favor and having his status improved.

A talisman for a slave to gain the sympathy of his master.

Make two talismans: one in the hour of a high planet whereas the ascendant is high and the ☽ is increasingly bright and let the ascendant of Al-Ras be with the ascendant or in one of the poles; the other in the hour of a lower planet and the ascendant and Al-Ashir of the first ascendant and the tail are either in the above-ascendant or in one of the poles. Combine them and bury them in the location of the person for whom you wish to create sympathy and his master will have total sympathy for him and give him whatever he wants, Allah willing.

A talisman for a person who wants to get married but was not able to.

Make two statues: one in the hour of ♈ when the ascendant is ♈, and when the ☽ is increasingly bright in one of the poles; the second in the hour of ♎ when it is looking over ♈, ♎, and ♂. Remove the bad luck from the ascendant and let Al-Sabi's ascendant be a part of the first statue and let its sign be connected to the sign of the first ascendant from the home of its triangle. Let them hug each other and bury them in the location of the person who wants to get married.

A talisman for preventing a man from marrying a certain woman.

Make a talisman in the hour of the ascendant of ♎ and in the hour of ♈. Make another one in the hour of ♎ and in the hour of the ☽ when the ☽ is increasingly bright, moving fast, and connected (to the ascendant). Then combine them and bury them in the hour of the ♎ and he will never marry her.

A talisman for releasing a captive.

Make it in the hour of the ☽ while it is increasingly bright, clear of any misfortune and moving quickly. Bury it in Al-Ashir's ascendant of the town and direct the picture towards the house of the Imam.

A talisman to liquidate your enemy.

Make two pictures: one in the hour of ♎ and in the hour of ♈ while the ☽ is declining; make the other in the ascendant of ♎ and in the hour of ♂ which will also be declining like the ☽. Make the first picture retaliate from the second in any way you want and bury them in the hour of ♂ when ♈ is at any phase of its ascendant. Then you can request that your enemy be destroyed and he will be destroyed immediately.

A talisman for the people to support a governor of a town whose population turned against him.

Make two talismans: the first in the hour of 4 while the ☽ is connected to the ☉ in a blessed and sound form and clear from any misfortune and let the head of the Dragon be either in the ascendant or looking over it; make the second in the ascendant of Al-Khamis from the first and in the hour of 9. Let the hour of 9 be with the Dragon or looking over it, and let the ☽ be clear of any misfortune. Then bury both talismans in the hour of 5 when the ascendant is fixed and the entire populace will return to him and give him their full support.

A talisman for keeping a person in his hometown.

Make a talisman in the hour of the ascendant of the person when 5 and Al-Ras are in one of the poles of the ascendant. Bury the talisman up-side-down in the middle of the town when the ascendant is fixed and he will never leave the town as long as the talisman is buried.

A talisman for expelling a person from his hometown on the same day.

Make a picture of an up-side-down ascendant while its sign is moving away from the poles and when the ☽ is moving away from the poles. Bury it in the burning part of the way and face the statue towards the location to which you want him to be expelled, and the objective will be achieved.

Two talismans for bringing two persons together and promoting friendship between them

Two talismans are made: make the first one in the hour of the ascendant of the sought objective, bring good luck to the ascendant and to Al-Ashir and move bad luck away from them, and let the ascendant of Al-Hadi-Ashir be a lucky planet connected harmoniously to the master of the ascendant in a triangular or hexagonal form. I would like to remind you here of what you should know; that is the hexagonal and triangular forms are indications of friendship, agreement and resemblance characters because the triangular form is from a fire constellation to a fire constellation, from an earth constellation to an earth constellation, from an air constellation to an air constellation and from a water constellation to a water constellation. Consequently, it becomes a friendship character. However, the hexagonal form is from a fire constellation to an air constellation, from an earth constellation to a water constellation. Thus when the two acting ascendants concur without being acted upon, this becomes a character of friendship without love. The quadrilateral¹⁶ form is from a water constellation to a fire constellation, and from an air constellation to an earth constellation, and when they disagree by nature, the quadrilateral form becomes a character of alienation and hatred.

We go back to our above presentation and say that when the second talisman is made for a certain friend, let it be in the ascendant of Al-Hadi-Ashar. If it is for a spouse, let it be in the ascendant of Al-Sabi and make the ascendant of the person whose sympathy you seek be connected harmoniously to the master of the first person. Bury them together in the location of the sympathy seeker and they will become companions forever.

¹⁶The astrological aspect known as the Square.

A talisman for separation and enmity.

Make a talisman in the ascendant of ♋ and bring a great misfortune to the ascendant and also bring a strong misfortune to Al-Ashir. Moreover, bring great misfortunes to the master of the ascendant and to the master of Al-Ashir while they are situated in either a bilateral¹⁷ or quadrilateral form and there will be no harmony between them. Strip off all good luck from him, from the ascendant, as well as from Al-Ashir and bury them in the residence of one of them and, as a result, they will separate irrevocably because of the intense hatred which has been created between them.

A talisman to empower a sultan to liquidate his servant.

Make the talisman in the same arrangement as mentioned above and let the master of the ascendant turn away from the master of Al-Ashir while he is also affected by his misfortune. At the same time, let the master of the ascendant be connected to the master of the house of destiny and the first will be affected by the last's misfortune as well by either facing each other or collectively. Bury them with a fixed ascendant misfortune, and consequently he will be able to kill his servant in any way and for any reason.

Two talismans for affection and subordination.

Two talismans are made in the first phase of ♊, and while the ♀ is in the first phase of ♋. Let ♀ be in the ascendant and the ♀ in Al-Hadi-Ashar. Make them embrace each other and bury them in one of their locations. This is an ever-lasting love and a very strong affection. This relationship is known as a reciprocal relationship. It was discussed by Ptolemy in his book, The Fruit, on page 33. You may review it. I will, nonetheless, explain it for you in Book IV.

A talisman for permanent love.

Make two talismans in an ascendant of good luck when the ♀ and ♀ are in ♋. In the first picture draw 220 numbers of thousands or zeros and draw in the second picture 284 numbers also of thousands and zeros. Then make them embrace one another and bury them in the location of one of them and permanent love and strong affection will ensue. This talisman is known as the talisman of the loving numbers.

A talisman for catching fish.

Draw a picture of any type of fish living in that river in the hour of ♀ and in the ascendant of ♋ when ♋ is in it. The first part to draw is its head, then its body and then its tail respectively, and finally put them together at one time. Make a thin pole of silver and hold the fish from its end. Make a bowl of lead and erect the pole in it perpendicularly with the fish at its tip. Put the talisman in the bowl, fill it with water and close the bowl with the talisman in it tightly so that no water leaks out. Throw the ball in the bottom of the river and the fish will come to the talisman from all directions.

A talisman to repel scorpions.

Make a picture of a Scorpion with gold when the ♀ is in the ascendant or in one of the poles such as ♋, ♏, or ♐. The best of these is ♂ because of its opposing character to ♀'s character. Also let the ☉ be in ♂ while ♄ is retreating. Draw the tail first, then the legs, then the arms and finally the head. Be sure to follow this reversed order in making a repelling talisman. When you are through, attach the left arm in place of the right leg and the right arm in place of the left leg. Attach the head in its place and the tail in its place. Make a thorn; place the Scorpion on its back; and then stick the thorn in its back whereby it will be biting itself in the head. Bury it in a hole inside a metal piece; then bury the metal piece in the most respectful place in town and then the Scorpions will flee from that talisman for a distance of one mile for forty-five days.

A talisman for the treatment of a scorpion bite.

Carve a picture of a Scorpion on a stone of Bezoar¹⁸ in the hour of the ☽ and while the ☉ is in the first degree of it and the ascendant is ♂ or ♋. Mount the stone on a golden ring and stamp it with resin of Kundur¹⁹ in the designated hour and with the ☽ in ♋. Give the bitten person a dose of it and he will be cured from his ailment.

A talisman for affection between men and women.

A talisman is made to portray the picture of a maid on cold solid metal when the ascendant is ♀ within which ♄ is ascending to its apex having control over its affairs. Start it in the hour of ♄ until it disappears. Make another one in the image of a man, and when ♄ is in in ♀ and the ascendant is ♋. Beware of the difference in the ascendant lest ♄ should be in ♀ and the ascendant is ♋ or in ♋ and the ascendant is ♀. Let the two pictures hug each other and put the hand of each picture on the back of its companion. All of this should take place in the hour of ♄. Beware of the two ascendants, ♋ and ♀, as well as others of the same type. Bury them in the busiest road in town and then men and women will like one another and have affectionate relationships. Do the same thing for a relationship of affection between two persons. Bury it in a place commonly visited by both.

¹⁸A counter poison or antidote. The original sort was the Lapis Bezoar Orientale, obtained from the wild goat of Persia and various antelopes, etc.; the Lapis Bezoar Occidentale, obtained from the llamas of Peru, was less valued.-OED ¹⁹incense resin.

A talisman to catch more fish.

It is presented by Mohammed Ben Bayt Al-Khawarizmi in his thesis in which he claims that he tested it. Make a picture of a fish in the hour of the ☽ and in the ascendant of the first phase of ♄, within which are the ☽ and ♄. The fish will be caught at the time of fishing because this timing will help a great deal.

A talisman for bringing the physician to the location of treatment.

This talisman ought to be made by physicians. Carve on a tin plate a picture of a human being sitting down with physician's equipment in front of him; people are standing around him with water jugs in their hands asking him for advice. The carving should cover the entire plate while the ascendant is on one of the two homes of ♄ within which is ♂. The Dragon should be at the top (at the north pole of the celestial sphere) of the sky. The plate is nailed and placed in the required location and you will see miracles.

A talisman for successful planting and cultivation.

On a silver plate, make a picture of a man sitting down in the middle of plants and trees while the ascendant is γ and when the $\mathcal{D}$ is in the ascendant connected to $\mathfrak{z}$ and turning away from the $\odot$ bury it in the location where you want all plants and trees to grow and quickly bear fruit and be protected from animals, cold, birds and other harmful things.

A talisman for a successful business.

Make a picture of a man with a scale in his hand on a yellow plate when the ascendant is one of the two homes of σ and while the $\mathcal{D}$ is in it. A person holding the plate will see great success in his business, Allah willing.

A talisman for the relief of the pain of kidney stones.

On a golden plate, carve a picture of a lion with stones between his hands as if he was playing with them in the hour of the $\odot$ while the ascendant is the first phase of δ , and the $\odot$ is in that degree. Then the person suffering from the attack of kidney stones will be relieved from pain. This has been tested.

A talisman to treat a certain person from depression until he recovers completely and to protect him from harmful actions.

It is made in the hour of the $\mathfrak{z}$ when the $\mathcal{D}$ is in one of the poles connected to $\mathfrak{z}$, and when the master of Al-Sadis is in a triangular or hexagonal form of a Sa'ad or facing a Sa'ad. The master of Al-Thamin is in the quadrilateral form of $\mathfrak{z}$ and $\mathfrak{z}$ is not retreating, burning or looking at a misfortune. The talisman is made in the last hour of Sunday while the master of the hour is the ascendant of Al-Ashir. Let it be made of pure silver and it will protect the person from what we have mentioned above.

Talismans are that which should be made from the celestial bodies - planets and stars - in which case no one can invalidate their effects. One of its principles is that no talismans for love and affection should be made unless the $\mathcal{D}$ is with Al-Su'ud and happy days. Likewise, they should not be made if the $\mathcal{D}$ is with Al-Nuhus²⁰, make them only when it is clear. For example, if you want to make a talisman for harmony among people, you should make it on the day of the $\mathfrak{z}$ and in the hour of $\mathfrak{z}$. If you want a talisman for affection between spouses, you should make it on the day of the $\odot$ in the hour of the $\mathcal{D}$. Also, talismans for sympathy, love and meeting kings are made on the day of the $\mathcal{D}$ when it is full and in γ , γ , $\mathfrak{z}$ or in χ . If the Dragon is with the $\mathcal{D}$, that will strengthen their effects.

Always watch the $\mathcal{D}$ when it is in the lucky house and avoid it when it is in the unlucky house. Make a talisman for love when the $\mathcal{D}$ is with $\mathfrak{z}$ and in the hour of $\mathfrak{z}$ when it is with the $\mathcal{D}$ and either in χ , γ , or in $\mathfrak{z}$. For malevolence, it is made when the $\mathcal{D}$ is with the tail and in one of the bad-luck houses joining misfortune planets or forming with them a quadrilateral figure or facing them. Talismans made at night are better than the ones made in daytime and with that you will hit the target.

Another condition without which nothing can be achieved is that the talisman maker should be completely absorbed in his endeavor. Also he should clear his intention in order for his mental faculties to join the spiritual powers of the planets. Plato puts it very well when he says in his Book of Al-Fusul, "If words reflect the intention of the speaker, he will be able to move the intention of the listener and vice versa." According to the first principle, this is what the combination of supplication and piety are based on when pious people pray to have their requests fulfilled.

Another condition is to isolate yourself from human beings, to shelter yourself from the sunrise and the sunlight and not to be visited by anybody except those who have good intentions, trustworthy, not belittling or scorning the ugly, astounding and forceful effects of the astrological spiritual powers. Be aware of that. You may review what Tabit Ibn Qurra²¹ wrote in his Treatise on Talismans, "The noblest science of stars is the science of talismans". He claims that there is no life in the body that does not have a spirit. He means that talismans made in the wrong manner and for the wrong purpose will not be compatible with the radiating spirit of the planets. Accordingly, they are similar to dead bodies that have no spirits in them. However, if the spirit of the celestial bodies agree, by virtue of their configuration and make-up, with such arrangements that lead to the sought objective, then they will be similar to living bodies that can do strange things.

In this regard, Aristotle says in his Treatise that the most important thing to bear in mind, when making a talisman, is the effect of the seven moving planets. The highest and the longest lasting among these are the ones that coincide with a Sa'ad. This will help in bringing the spirits down from the celestial sphere to the Earth. He adds, "There may be some of God's names, if invoked to bring a spirit down, that will fall down at a tremendous speed to the lowest level, and it may kill the person who is bringing it down if he is not knowledgeable of the spiritual nature of the celestial body he wants to bring down".

Concerning this matter, some of the leading Sufis talk about the Name of the Great Allah who transforms things into other things completely different from the original. They prefer to talk about sublime matters in this world. However, they, I mean the majority of them, believe otherwise. We wrote a piece on this subject in which we cited all of their contentions.

Referring to Aristotle, he adds, "As for the magical transcendence, it does not go beyond the circle of the Earth when a talisman is made to bring down a spirit. However, this transcendence will not be effective unless it is associated with the Greatest God who commands it to revert in its entirety to the halo and directs it to the aphelion of the Earth". This is the text of his statement. I will cover it completely in the fourth book.

The people who specialize in this field agree on the necessity of associating the words used in making talismans for special purposes appealing to have those effects accepted. In this regard, the philosopher in Timaeus, indicates that talking to talismans represents the relationship of the soul to the body; it moves the spiritual powers, especially when the speaker talks with a sound intention. This is the noble element with which all talismans can be made. This means that what you say must agree with the meaning of the spoken words inasmuch as the talisman maker gathers of his conscious and mental strength.

An example of what can be said for love and affection is:

I hereby unite so-and-so with so-and-so in harmony and love in the same manner fire and air, and water and earth are united. I also move so-and-so's spirit the same way the ☉ moves the light and power of the world, conjure up so-and-so in the eyes of so-and-so the same way the sky is decorated with high and dominating stars and the way plants are decorated with their flowers. I also make so-and-so's spirit rise and impress so-and-so's spirituality the same way fire rises to air and water to earth. Moreover, so-and-so may not drink or enjoy except in the presence of so-and-so.

If you make a talisman for enmity and separation, you say:

I hereby sever the relationships between them and separate so-and-so from so-and-so with the power of these spiritual souls the same way light is separated from darkness. I also make enmity between them similar to the enmity between water and fire.

²¹See Thorndike I, 661, this person was identified by Ritter in the German ed.

If you make a talisman for rendering a male impotent, you say:

I hereby tie up the spirit of the sexual desire of so-and-so towards so-and-so as well as towards all other women and deprive him from it with the power of these spiritual souls the same way mountains and their rocks are tied up.

To untie the sexual desire of a male, you say:

I hereby release and untie the sexual desire of so-and-so towards so-and-so as well as towards all other women with the help of the powers of all of these spiritual souls the same way fire melts wax, the same way sunlight releases darkness and the spirits of the world as well as its own spirit and the same way snow is melted by the O.

To silence people who talk negatively about you as well as about others, you say:

I hereby shield so-and-so to silence backbiters with the shield of light and veil their eyes with a spiritual veil to repel their ugly looks and to silence them and vanquish their harmful designs. You may add similar specific statements with true intentions and strong motivation.

To expose the secrets of a person, you say:

I hereby unveil the secrets of so-and-so with the power of these spiritual souls the same way sunbeams tear up thick clouds, disgrace him and make him a target for the spirit of backbiters the same way arrows tear up bodies by frequent arrow hunters.

When you are in the process of doing your work, do not say anything unrelated to your intended objective. Everything you say must support and enforce your intended objective.

These examples are presented to you to let you understand the intended objective so that you may apply it.

We have presented to you this knowledge although those who seek knowledge nowadays are few. So be one of those few, and you will, Allah willing, acquire wisdom. We have included miraculous matters in this chapter about the relationships of planets and stars. Think seriously about them, and you may refer to them for analogy when making any talisman that has already been or is being made in this world.

The essence of talismans, which we have mentioned above, is similar to the intended performed action whether good or evil. After this, I will explain to you what share of the three originating sources, metals, animals and plants, as well as their incense and sacrifices. All of these will help you in the same way food and medicine, if accepted by the patient, will help the physician succeed and accomplish what he hopes to achieve. The focal point is the observation of stars. The Greek philosophers used to watch a certain planet when it is with its Dragon and when it approaches within a degree from the middle of the sky, they perfume with its incense and appeal to it to achieve their objectives. They offer sacrifices to it on behalf of their sought objective. Consequently, they get what they hoped to achieve. They also claim that one should do the same thing if the planet is in the Tail of its Dragon, and subsequently, it will not be obstructed especially if the planet makes a good recommendation concerning the birth of the person in question. This will have a stronger effect and better acceptance.

Obtaining this knowledge, my brother, is a great honor although those who are seeking it in our time are only few, and those few have missed the approach for seeking it and learning it. We have mentioned, may Allah bless you, in our book which we entitled The Rank of the Wise that having good knowledge of the produced result of a well-made (talisman) is greater and more honorable than it's result. I would like you to know that what we have pointed out is the behavioral art and learning it according to the inherent characteristics of the art of nature without delaying what should be advanced or advancing what should have been delayed. To explain the reality of this subject and its philosophy, we bring two persons: one is knowledgeable of this result and acts upon it, while the second is knowledgeable of the other result and acts upon that. On the other hand, they may be ignorant of these arts, try to obtain them at least on the traditional level. The person who is completely knowledgeable of the magical result is more capable and more miraculously effective in this world than a person who is fully knowledgeable of the first result. This is an axiom for those who think about them and accept them as such. We would like you to know that our reference to this subject in our book, The Rank of the Wise, is very essential for applying these arts according to their principles and using them for what they are capable of achieving.

❧{Chapter Six}❧

YOU MAY KNOW, Allah bless you, that wisdom is very noble and acquiring it is a great honor and carries with it high prestige. Wisdom has different levels. One level leads to another. A fully knowledgeable person is the one who is well informed of the fruits of wisdom. He obtains them because he loves to obtain them. Philosophers have justly identified this level as the preference of wisdom. He who remains below this level is not considered a human being, although he may be a human being only by planning, because he does not reflect on the essence of his being, which is a microcosm of the larger world. The truth of his being is that he is a complete entity characterized by three elements: speech, animals and plants. This entity is characterized differently from animals by speech. By speech, we mean that it is distinguished because of its capability to make (talismans), recalling the absent through reflection and forming an image and perceiving what cannot be physically seen. Also, this entity can bring other beings and countries into his mind, combine all other beings and powers within itself through which he can see at night what happens to him during the daytime. Accordingly, he is a microcosm confined within the larger world which he represents in form and content. He has all the characteristics of animals, but he is differentiated by knowledge and power.

A human has six movements which run along his back bone through his thighs in a straight line. He is brought to life accidentally and this accidental being will die as a principle of nature. His fingers and palm are distributed and his head is round. He has nails and a particular style of walking; he is capable of learning and writing; he is the inventor of fine arts; he imitates animals but not imitated by them; he laughs and weeps with sadness and he possesses a divine power and the ability of civil management. He is an idol externally and a light internally; his body is the idol and its content is his entity. He is well planned; he knows what is harmful to him and what is useful. He acts with an intention if he plans and he proceeds or abstains spontaneously as well as with a purpose. He invents fine arts as well as miraculous talismans. He comprehends the various aspects of knowledge and excludes whatever is tangible.

Allah made him a treasurer for His wisdom and an expression of Himself as well as all of His creatures. He made him accept His revelation and made him aware of His branches of knowledge as well as what was revealed from Him. He is the guidance for the larger world and its destiny. He is all-knowing of every detail about His creation and its composition. He can gather all scattered creatures, whereas they cannot do the same to Him. He can make them subservient, but they cannot do the same to Him. He is capable of uttering their words, drawing their pictures with His hands, describing them with His tongue, and He is also capable of foretelling their characteristics.

No animal can change itself or move away from its created image, and it cannot imitate the voice of other animals. A rooster cannot change its crowing, a dog its barking or a lion its roaring. However, a man can change his voice and his manners and he can act in any way he wants and he can administer himself as well as others. He is characterized by a dense body and an amiable spirit; one part is amiable and the other is dense;

one part is alive and the other is dead; one half is moving and the other half is idle; one half is formed and the other is formless; one half is night-time and the other is daytime; one half is darkness and the other is light; one half is concealed, and the other is exposed; one half is tangible and the other is reasonable; one half is the sustainer and the other is the sustained. He shies away from shameful deeds and tolerates and does whatever he likes and regrets. His essence is composed of gentle as well as harsh characteristics; he possesses some of the harsh characteristics of earth, the gentle touch of air, the friendliness of fire and the coolness of water. Accordingly, he is moderate in his motion, which is the soul of life. By his motion he recognizes the heat of fire through its fiery power and the coolness of water through the inherent coolness of water and so on with the rest of the Elements.

Nonetheless, his head resembles the celestial sphere by its shape and roundness as well as by the good inlaid lights such as seeing, smelling, tasting and speaking. His eyes are similar to the ☉ and the ☿, his nostrils to the two winds, his ears to the East and West, his front to the day and his back to the night, his walking to the motion of stars and his sitting to their being fixed, his retreat to their decline and his death to their burning.

His abdominal organs are seven equal to the number of the moving planets. He has seven bones in his head equal to the number of days in the week, 24 vertebrae in his back equal to the number of hours of the day and night, and 28 joints equal to the number of the houses of the ♃ and the number of the alphabets. The number of his intestines are equal to the lunar phases, and the number of arteries are 365 with an equal number of veins, and that is equal to the number of days and nights of the year, as well as to the number of the celestial degrees. The number of his different characteristics are equal to the number of changes in the time of the year.

His eyes are his spies with speaking power resembling a king. His ears are his informants; his tongue is his translator; his heart is his divan of knowledge; his stomach is his treasury; his gall bladder is the source of his patience so that his flesh will not rupture. It is the bond and treatment of the body. His lungs are his fan; the hands are his guards and his legs are his vehicle.

His flesh is equivalent to earth; his bones are like mountains; his hair is like plants; his arteries are like medicine, and his abdominal organs are like metals.

His body consists of nine jewels built on nine circles inside one another. The outer circle encompasses the flesh, the bones, the muscles, the nerves, the brain, the skin and the nails. The brain fills the cavity of the bones. Its function is to maintain energy and flexibility of bones. The function of bones is to hold and stabilize the flesh around them. The function of the muscles is to tie up joints and move organs. The function of the flesh is to seal the defects in the body and protect the bones from fracturing and dislocation. The function of arteries is to deliver blood to various parts of the body. The function of the blood is to regulate the temperature of the body, maintain life, adjust temperament and generate motion. The function of the skin is to guide the extremities, hold them and bundle them to protect them from splitting and scattering.

The body has twelve holes equivalent to the number of constellations. Since there are six northern constellations and six southern constellations, there are six holes in the body on the left side and six on the right side similar to the arrangement of the constellations qualitatively and quantitatively. Also, the seven moving planets which control the laws of the celestial bodies affecting and regulating all beings, are similar to the human body which has seven influential forces stemming from the human mind to promote the well-being of the body. Additionally, these planets, which have spirits, bodies and souls acting upon and influencing metals, animals and plants, are similar to the human body which possesses physical forces to help maintain and promote the well-being of the body through seven other spiritual forces. These seven spiritual forces are: the holder, the puller, the digester, the pusher, the nourisher, the grower and the portrayer. There are seven other spiritual forces similar to the seven planetary spirits. These are the sensory forces by which a human being becomes complete and his actions become adequate, similar to the seven planets which decorate and establish the foundation of the celestial sphere by which they maintain the world and uphold its laws. These are the forces of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling, speaking and reasoning. These five forces are like those of the five planets, two of which are similar to the ☉ and the ☿. The ☿ derives its light from the ☉ in its 28 houses. Similarly, the speaking force derives the meaning of beings from the reasoning force and communicates it by the 28 alphabets of the lexicon. Since there are two nodes in the celestial sphere, the head and the tail, both of which have their true entities and their visible actions and effects, likewise there are two elements in the human being that are similar, the good and the bad temper. Moreover, when the human spirit, is inclined towards its world, it will perform well; it will get rid of the annoyance of nature and it will be guided. However, if it is inclined towards nature, it will be disturbed in its action, move beyond its cause and it will be eclipsed in the same manner the ☉ and the ☿ are eclipsed by the node of the tail. Similar to this is the case of the bad temper, which is comparable to tough actions which cause destruction to the human body. Good temper, on the other hand, leads to good speech and when the make-up of the body is sound and functions naturally, the spirit will be clear and it will be enlightened by the mind.

Whereas the ☉ and the ☿ are the lamps of the celestial sphere, the eyes are the lamps of the body by which the speaking spirit can recognize the pictures of beings and their colors and it can see things by the reflection of the sunlight and moonlight on them, as do the rest of the animals. Additionally, similar to the celestial sphere and its constellations which have parameters, phases and angles, so do the joints of the body, its organs and its various arteries. Also, like the total force of the seven planets and the twelve constellations from which forces are constantly spreading throughout the world every moment, minute, hour and with every movement of time, so does the spirit of man as it induces his body and joints to perform certain actions with every move he makes, with every moment and with every breath of his lifetime. Yet, he exists as a whole, a body and a spirit, until his spirit leaves him. Similarly, the total spirit is connected to partial spirits for an ordained duration and with a wise management.

One of the miracles of man is that he is civilized by nature so that he can administer himself, his household, his servants, his family, as well as his kingdom. A word may please him to the extent of making him step down and a word may enrage him to the extent of fighting and taking risks. He wears expensive garments, gets treatment and takes medications to adjust his temper and improve himself. He shows friendship, conceals enmity and fraternizes with his enemy. He is sinking in air and permanently landing on earth.

This is the characteristic of the partial but tangible human who is perishable in part, but not as a whole because he only became a partial human by external accidental effects, changes and colors which he was exposed to, and as such, he is perishable. However, the human of reason, as a whole, is locked into permanent existence both partially and totally. This is analogous to the Elements which are perishable in part but not as a whole. For instance, if water changes, it becomes fire, then air, and then it spoils and reverts to its natural state. It spoils from external effects, but it survives by nature, and so does the partial human; he is spoiled by dissolution, but he reverts to his totality. Accordingly, the whole human exists by reason and not by sensory perception. Thus, the essence of the reasonable part does not change or transform to another form. In fact, transformation is adjoining it in order to achieve perfect sensory perception.

I am giving you examples to make this subject easy to understand because it may seem peculiar to the mind. The singular part of the Elements gains its partial Elemental status only by virtue of the arrangement of each in its position and by whatever internal accidental effects, which it may be subjected to, that pertains to its particular characteristics in this state. Water, for example, gains its wet and cool nature by its position and whatever adjoins it in the world order. However, its existence prior to its Element status survives as a whole. These totalities exist by nature whether perceived mentally and discovered by man or not. Existence to it is subjective and so is the whole human; his existence is also subjective. The evidence on the truth of what I have said is that there is fire in water and water in fire and that the Elements are intertwined and transform from one to another. Without this transformation, none of their characteristics could have existed.

Similar to that is the attachment of the human being's willingness and volition to the first willingness and volition which are influenced and affected by other beings, although that may not be recognized by the partial human being. That is because this human whose will and volition may not be enforced in every situation and behavior, will find that they may be enforced in some, although he will not realize their influence on the whole. Only those who attain and experience theoretical arts can realize this.

I would like you to know that if a human is able to find fire stripped of the accidentally acquired characteristics, the variable situations and whatever affects it when it joins its sisters, he would find it incapable of burning. That is because its share of the partial function is acquired from its accidental characteristics, variable situations and position. Don't you see that if fire is accidentally displaced and departs from the body and wood, it will return to its nature and to its place above air. As for its simple total function, it is too great to be described or realized by words because it is an exceptionally great force which is above simplicity and above qualification and so are the rest of the Elements.

The human being follows the same path. This is the human being who is eternally committed and around whom the complex human being is evolving. His intermingling and mixing with other things which accidentally adjoin him in different situations and positions, and from which he cannot detach himself, changes his image, transforms him and grants him common characteristics with animals, plants and other Elements. Consequently, he becomes similar to them in all aspects and when he recognizes this and follows the path that leads him to the enlightenment of the first principle. This is a system particular to his essence as well as to his own principle, he will be more of a human being than others inasmuch as he becomes detached. He can do that by applying virtues as much as possible and when he accomplishes that, he becomes the partial, sensitively perceptive, physical and robust human being, who is composed of two sub-parts, the mind and the spirit, in addition to the body. This joint perishable image in this lower world is a shell for the whole, mental, spiritual, honorable, kind, simple and primordial human being. It is the pure image which is not engulfed by a body; it is ever-lasting in the higher world.

The image of the whole human is within his partial image and a simple and primordial form of it. The image of the partial human is inside the body and a simple form of it. The image of the body is a complex idol and a complex shell for the partial human. The image of the partial human being is a complex idol and a complex shell for the whole human. The image of the whole human is an idol and a shell for the whole spirit and the whole spirit is an idol and a shell for the mind. The whole mind is an idol and a shell for the light from which the mind evolved. The light is the primordial source of the whole mind. Similarly, what is below that, which is higher, is simple and primordial to that which is below it and in addition to it and what is below that is always a complex image for what is above it and in addition to it. In fact, the human being is the complex image which uses the other bodies of nature.

He, who wants to gain the truth of this knowledge, ought to be virtuous, pure in his mind and body from all sins and then he will see it and observe it in its reality.

We did not, by presenting this subject, may Allah help you, deviate from our objective. In fact, this is the objective of this book because it is the principle for the science of talismans. If you have any experience in this field, you will realize this and acknowledge that it is obviously magic. Plato, the virtuous and an authority in this science, deals with this subject in his book, Timaeus, and elaborates a great deal on images and he explains this sought objective. However, he makes the conclusion vague like other philosophers who act in the same manner to protect their wisdom from uninformed people as did Proclus.

To them vagueness is the ambiguity of meaning so that whoever wants to clear up this ambiguity must do that with reflection, deliberation and thorough examination in order to distinguish it from whatever it has been mixed with from the obvious matters. Of these arts there are two kinds: the obvious and the concealed. The concealed art is that which needs analogy and introductions so that it becomes clear to you or that can be achieved by observation, reasoning, reflection and deliberation.

Reasoning can be attained in many ways, some of which are relating the present to the past or the part to the source by a common meaning. It can also be attained by analyzing it in view of what was explained by one or more with credentials whereby they can deduce a meaning similar to the sought one. In general, whoever likes to follow this method must direct his full attention and observations towards this method, and with this, he can find the meaning of beings and discover their ranks.

❧{Chapter Seven}❧

YOU MAY KNOW, ALLAH BLESS YOU, that beings have ranks. The High Being of creation is the noblest, most distinguished and the most perfect rank. Next to that in rank is the mind, the spirit and then the primordial all of which is not moving and cannot be described by a distance motion. Next to the primordial in rank is the orbit of nature which is initially a motion as well as a stillness from which being and corruption in this world evolved. Next to that is the orbit of the ۛ. After this rank, there is a common matter which possesses sensory perception. This means that things exist in it by force and not by nature. Next to that are the Elements which interact in that common matter, since the Elements only interact in matter. Then next to the Elements are metals, then plants, then animals and then the speaking ones among them. This rank is different from the first rank because the first rank, the mind, is a noble rank that descends until it reaches the lowest rank, the rank of the orbit of the ۛ. After it reaches the lowest level, it begins to ascend to the highest rank, the rank of speaking animals, because they possess wisdom and they act willfully, not by force. Be aware of that, O seeker of wisdom, and you will gain a great fortune and the ultimate happiness. Do not be one of those addressed by Al-Mutanabbi²² who says, "I have not seen a worse shortcoming like the shortcoming of those who are capable of achieving excellence but fail to do so".

The ranks of being have a certain order which I will explain to you to exercise your mind and enlighten your vision. So be with me, listen, and learn: the principle is first, then the element, then the Elemental, then the primordial, then the image, then the nature, then the body, then al-Nami (the growing), then the animal, then the human being, then the man, then the obscure, and then the known. The principle is more general than the element and its category because it does not conform to the essence or to the accidental characteristics; the element does not conform to the essence; the element is more general than the Elemental because the element is an essence without qualification, but if it accepts qualification, it becomes an Elemental. The Elemental is more general than the primordial because it is a particular essence which accepts qualification.

The primordial is the collection of the Elementals because it accepts to have an image. The primordial is more general than the image because, before the primordial accepts to have an image, it is primitive, but if it accepts to have an image, then this image becomes similar to the image of the primordial copper as related to the image of a kettle, and as the primordial of wood as related to the image of a chair, and if it accepts motion, stillness, and accepts force to be mixed with it, it will be considered a nature. If the characteristics are combined and it accepts color, growth, or spirit, then it becomes a body. A body is either growing or not growing, and the growing is either an animal or not an animal. The animal is either a human being or not a human being, and the human being either a man or not a man.

man. The man is either Zayd²³ or not Zayd, and Zayd is either obscure or not obscure. What is not obscure is known.

The primordial, may Allah enlighten your vision, is the joint agreement of the Elements to accept an image. There are two types of primordial: a personal primordial which does not receive, except one image composed of the complex Elements, earth, water, fire, and air and does not transform from one state to another. The other is a whole primordial that accepts all images which are composed of the simple Elements: heat, coolness, dryness and wetness, and it does not transform from one state to another. Aristotle presents it well as he defines the primordial, with respect to its general aspects, as a force acceptable to various images. With respect to its characteristics, he defines it as a body that influences all entities.

We presented these meanings to enrich the mind and sharpen the intellect. These meanings and the like are the spiritual talismans and the words of inspiration that Adam learned from his Lord.²⁴ Only knowledgeable people and those who triumph in getting in touch with the total reality can comprehend them. For the purpose of comprehending their meanings, we have presented this treatise. At this point, I would like to conclude this treatise and move along to what we have promised you in the introduction of this book. I beseech Allah's help in achieving what we hope and intend to accomplish.

²³ Abd-ar Rahman Abu Zayd ibn Muhammad ibn Khaldun who penned the Muqaddimah in 1381, used his own name of Zayd objectively to illustrate a point in the text. Perhaps Zayd is a common name used for such examples, or the author of Picatrix may possess it as his own.

Book II

THIS BOOK DEALS WITH THE CELESTIAL IMAGES, THE EXPOSURE OF ITS SECRETS WHICH HAVE BEEN CONCEALED BY PHILOSOPHERS, AND SAMPLES OF HOW TO BORROW MAGIC IN THIS SO-CALLED WORLD OF BEING AND CORRUPTION FROM THE MAGICIAN OF THE ETHER WHO SPREADS SPIRITUAL FORCES.

❖{Chapter One}❖

THE INTELLECTUALS, MAY ALLAH BLESS YOU, are still aspiring to know the secrets of the philosophers and what they mean by using symbols and enigmas in their books through which they achieved their objectives and goals. Is it possible for those with inferior intelligence to achieve their goal, may Allah enlighten our minds?

What motivated me to look for the secrets of talismans when I was in the prime of youth is what I read in a book entitled The Fruit by the honorable Ptolemy, in which he says that the images in the world of creation are obedient to the celestial images. There is consensus among philosophers that planets possess forces by virtue of their natural disposition which they accepted willfully. Accordingly, the talisman-makers drew their images at the time when certain planets reach their house. This situation helps them achieve the planned effects of their works. They did very well in designing their secrets to fulfill their wishes. I decided to include in this chapter an excerpt which was written by Ahmad Ben Yusuf al-Katib and published in Egypt in The Biography of Ahmad Ben Tolone and His Son Khamarawayh by a Roman philosopher who lived there at that time. I would like to cite an excerpt of the text from what he wrote because I do not wish to burden the intellectual with the full text. This is what he wrote:

"As I was at his place one day, we heard screaming at the side of the house, and when he was asked about it, he said, 'A boy was bitten by a Scorpion.' So, he brought a piece of cloth with tablets of some substance in it that smelled like kundur²⁵. He took one of those tablets, had it crushed, and made the boy drink it all. Subsequently, the boy stopped screaming and he was quickly cured from his ailment as soon as he drank the powder. I looked at the tablets and saw a picture of a Scorpion. So I asked him who stamped these tablets. He showed me a golden ring with the stone Bezoar in it. Then I asked him about the secret of the ring and how it is made. He indicated that when the ☽ enters ♍, while ♍ is one of the poles of the ascendant, a small amount of kundur is stamped when the ☽ is in its first phase. I made the ring in this manner and I stamp bitten persons with it to cure them. However, I change the substance I use for stamping patients so that kundur does not become the only substance used for this purpose. I saw the miraculous results of what he did. At this point his account ended."

Since I was good at carving in my youth, I entrusted some of the applied philosophers as well as other philosophers to participate with me in observing this arrangement. Accordingly, I carved the picture in the specified time and examined this talisman. I discovered through several trials its miraculous effects. All those who tried it were very amazed.

This was my motive in pursuing the research in this sensory science; I felt it because sensing is the feeling of the mind, and the limits of this feeling cannot be determined unless sensing is understood, which can be achieved by understanding the change of how the senses react when the sensed objects encounter them directly. Sensing is the feeling of those sensitive forces towards the changes in how the senses react. For instance, the medium of the force of seeing is the eye. This force is derived from the fluid medium of the pupil of the eyes and so are the rest of the senses. Sensing is the feeling of these forces and achieving knowledge through them.

Proof is the philosophic criterion which leads to perfection for whoever seeks a real objective. A branch of knowledge can exist by examining the particular characteristics of that objective as well as through examining its subjective fixed introductions. There are two branches of knowledge: knowledge by belief and knowledge by perception. Knowledge can be also be achieved by accepted and convincing statements and in this case, proof is termed as persuasive.

I first read about this proof in the works of Ptolemy and then I discovered by practice the effect of this talisman which I have already described in the First Book. Whenever I researched a certain topic in books written by the wise, I always found what I wanted and I was happy to discover the truth.

Going back to our objective, I would like to say that no one can find out how the higher world affects the lower world without having full knowledge of the different branches of philosophy, I mean the mathematical, physical and metaphysical arts. He who falls short in acquiring these sciences will not be able to fulfill his real goal because the primary prerequisites of knowledge are taken from these three branches of philosophy. As for the mathematical art, without numbers, the movements of the higher bodies and the methods by which geometry is obtained cannot be learned. Furthermore, mathematical survey is a prerequisite for learning the geometry of the celestial bodies; without it, star observation or their measurements, which are primarily derived from the proofs of mathematical survey, will be impossible to learn. Moreover, the art of matching, by which similarity and difference can be recognized, is necessary for learning the similarities between celestial and earthly bodies and which of the high bodies' behavior is similar to which of those on earth. How can anyone match between things that are similar if he does not command that knowledge? Additionally, he who is literate in the knowledge of nature, will be able to recognize the near causes for the world and corruption. He who does not know that, will not know that the high bodies affect the low bodies. Besides, he who has no knowledge of the art of metaphysics will not know which of the low beings are the resulting effect of the high beings and which of these beings are affected and which are not. It is essential for anyone who wants to learn this art well to know its primary prerequisites; however, these prerequisites are not, in fact, available except for philosophers. Deservedly, no one knows them except philosophers.

❧{Chapter Two}❧

TALKING ABOUT IMAGES, may Allah bless you, is very difficult because the specialized people in this field exerted their utmost efforts to conceal it. However, I am revealing what they have concealed. He who wants to delve in this subject can refer to The Book of the Great Images, by Zosimos which deals with the art of astrology as illustrated by the Arabs in the Middle Ages. This book goes into detail in explaining this subject. The images, my brother, that appear in the constellations have two phases: the first are the 48 images that appear in the constellations; they are in the celestial sphere, and these are the imaginary images that are drawn by using the fixed stars as a reference. They find similarity between the convergence and diversion of planets on one hand and the images of the constellations and other images such as Canis, Ursa, Lyra, Cygnus and others, on the other hand.

These images disappear and move from one constellation to another. This quality is not natural in astronomy, especially in the constellations' band, because it takes these images thousands of years to do so when they approach the aphelion; however, the images that are getting close or are already close to the aphelion do not appear to be moving in hundreds of thousands of years because the band gets very narrow. This is the first phase. As for the second phase, it is that of the imaginary images that was illustrated by the Indians who said, "A big, intrepid, proud man with red eyes wearing a loose white garment belted with a rope, looking grim and standing on guard on one leg appears in the first phase of Υ . A woman with one leg wearing a red dress and rope, who has the body of a horse ready to take off, asking for clothes, jewelry, and children appears in the second phase. A black man with red hair and a grim look, wearing a wooden bracelet and holding a hanger with red garments hanging on it, wants to do good but unable to do that, appears in the third phase."

Similar information can be said about the rest of the constellations.

I would like you to know that these are delusive imaginings about the characteristics of stars, planets and constellations. However, the Indians associated the man in the first phase with red eyes and intrepidity with the house of σ' and its face which delineates redness, rescue and intrepidity. As for the white loose garment, it is associated with the honor of the $\odot$ and its light. Concerning his grimness, it is associated with the anger of σ' in this house. Regarding his standing on one leg and standing on guard, it is associated with dominant tyrants. They substituted a woman for a man in the second phase in association with φ because φ has been associated with the feminine gender most of its life and it is within 2° from the domain of φ . The red garments are a semblance of the characteristics of σ' . The fact that a part of the image is of a horse is a representation of the cavalier characteristics of σ' , which is a feature of the strength of riding animals by virtue of its proximity to Al-Sadis and to battle-riding animals. Asking for jewelry is an association with the $\odot$, the red dresses with the white sunlight, which is used as a veil for the $\odot$, children with the middle of the sky because it is the house of illumination and an indication on the beginning of the development of the fetus.

They referred to the third phase by a man with a reddish color in association with σ' and $\mathfrak{z}$, both of which have masculine gender and a reddish color, which is a mixture of two colors, the redness of σ' and the lead color of $\mathfrak{z}$. Red hair is associated with σ' , grimness with a characteristic of σ' which has as one of its features is holding a sword in his hand because the sword is a characteristic of σ' , wood with $\mathfrak{z}$, and so is iron, doing good and bad deeds with φ , preventing them by σ' at the house and by $\mathfrak{z}$ with the edge. With these examples, you can understand every thing they symbolized, and what they wanted to lead to in this second phase. I have provided you, O seeker of wisdom, the criteria that you can use as a reference and you may act accordingly.

Abu Bakr Ibn Wahsija deals with this subject in his book which he translated from the Nabateans. He entitled his book Tiqana, in which he talks about the triangles and the north and south images in the water triangle. Then he adds, "Whenever you see a male water, a male river, a male well, a male rivulet, or a water spring that can be either a male or a female, you will know that they are affecting water and water substances, as are the rest of the examples concerning the male of fire, earth and air". Be aware of that. This celestial band is the path of 'Tumtum' as well as the path of male images of other star angles.

The ancient philosophers perceived the names of constellations, their shapes and positions, as symbols of their action. For instance, when they talk about a detached head that talks and a paralyzed or amputated hand and other such images, smiling and weeping, and signals from some stars to others, there are speaking of symbols for identifying their actions and the miraculous actions and effects. They built the art of talismans on this basis.

transcendental things that existed in the past and are being brought out. Nonetheless, if these are some of the signs that describe the deceased, which means they are telling what is going to take place forever. Some of these examples are presented by the Sufi, Jabir Ibn Hayyam, in his book entitled Explaining the Images of Constellations and Their Actions. In his book, he listed all stars in the straight band and the action of every one of them. By this, he compensated for what Aristotle wrote in his book entitled Astrologia. This book as well as his book The Plants, were burned and no traces were found.

Hermes states in his book entitled The Composition of Moving Images in Space that the useful actions of stars are too many to be specified. He states that every star has a certain action in each degree of its path if it reaches a tangential point of that degree or if it was within it. The total of these actions are 360×7 which is equal to 2,520. These images produce artistic actions and effects, and if you multiply 360×6 the product will resemble the number of times in which every two planets converge in one degree. The reason for multiplying by 6 is because this is the possible number of convergence of each two planets; ♄ and ♀ may meet in one degree, and that is one, ♄ with ♂, and that is two, ♄ and the ☉, and that is three, ♄ and ♁, and that is four, ♄ and ♃, and that is five, ♄ and the ♋, and that is six. When you multiply 6×360 , the total number of degrees of that circle, the product will be 2,160 images. These images produce miraculous actions and effects. Then you multiply 360×5 the product of which will be 1,800 and that indicates the number of times each three planets converge in one degree. These images produce miraculous actions and effects. Afterwards, you multiply 360×4 , which is the number of the times every four planets meet in one degree, the product will be 1,440. These images also have actions and effects. Then multiply 360×3 , which denotes the number of times each five planets meet on one degree and the product will be 1,080. These images produce actions and effects as well. Then you multiply 360×2 , which is the number of times each six planets meet in one degree, and the product will be 720. These images also produce actions and effects. Then you multiply 360×1 , which is the number of times each seven planets meet in one degree. The First Wise explains that the total number of images which depict the controlling principle of degrees is 10,006 images, all of which produce miraculous actions and effects.

Additionally, The First Wise states, "You need to do that when you have one planet in one degree and the rest of the other planets in the next degree, and then you divide that among the seven planets and let all planets be positioned within the 2° . You keep doing that in the 360° of the celestial sphere. This is longer than the first and more artistic.

So, what is your opinion, O you who desire to have a thorough knowledge of the essence of the actions of these images and their effects on this world! When you get through all of that, you may go back to the above seven moving planets as they converge in their degrees separately with the fixed planets or in combination with them; by combination I mean the joining of the moving planets to the fixed. I would like you to know that and beware of it; withhold this knowledge and do not reveal its secrets to anyone who is not up to its standards because by doing that you will do injustice to yourself as well as to him.

❖{Chapter Three}❖

A GROUP OF PEOPLE BELIEVED that the action of planets is nothing but an increase or decrease in temperature because they were not informed about these excellent effects and concealed arts. They thought that all actions are produced by the ☉ and the ☿, and the function of the other planets is only to strengthen their actions. They also believed that the movement of the rest of the planets within the entire degrees are determined and controlled by the movement of the ☉ and the situations of the ☉ decide the situations of all born children. Moreover, they agreed that the situations of the ☿ determine the condition of its effects. The first situation is when it moves away and separates from the ☉ and reaches the lunar quarter. At this position, the ☿ will be more effective in moving more moisture and humid hot weather and less hot weather and consequently, it will have an effect on producing better and healthier plants as well as everything else that grows on the ground. In the second situation, when the ☿ is receiving the ☉ and consequently becomes a full ☿ with complete illumination, it moves heat and temperature equally. Therefore, its effect on producing better and healthier plants will be greater. Additionally, moving heat and humidity will have a more remarkable effect on the bodies of animals, various parts of plants, as well as metals. As it moves from full ☽ to half ☽, it moves a little less humidity and a little more heat. Consequently, it makes the bodies of animals, plants and metals increase in quantity, improve in quality, and it also affects them to become more open, widespread and expanded; however, expansion by heat will be greater than by humidity. From the phase of half ☽, until its completely exposed by the sunlight, its effect on moving heat will be extremely small, smaller than its effect in any of its above three phases. It was stated in this regard that it dries a little and cools a lot because its moves less moisture. That is why we say that it is more likely that it brings a very cold temperature in this quarter and causes little dryness.

When it meets with the ☾ in one degree, which is its fifth phase, the Chaldeans consider it to be its best and most effective situation, whereas the Indians believe that it is its worst and weakest in its effect. As for the Chinese, they believe that in this phase, the ☽'s strength will depend on the constellation in which it meets with the ☾. The Greeks and the Egyptians think that the meeting of the ☽ with the ☾ gives it more strength as we said before, but they disagree with us on considering this phase its best. They believe that its best situation is when it is fully illuminated, and thus when it converges with the ☾, it only becomes stronger; nonetheless, it is its best and most effective situation.

There is a consensus among our ancient generations that the best situation of the ☽, regarding its phases and its distance from the ☾, is that when it meets with the ☾ in one minute. This is the fifth situation which has different characteristics than the previous five. This is the loftiest situation and the most effective in its actions because it rejoices when it meets the ☾ the same way a traveler rejoices when he goes back to his home. At this phase, it produces actions although it might have produced parts of them in the previous situations, but in this situation, it completes what it was missing and adds to it. They also believe that it is capable of producing actions similar to those produced by the ☾ and that is a great achievement and an honorable status. Furthermore, they believe that the ☽ can, at this situation, produce particular effects in complex bodies. It should not be understood here that this is our version of producing particular effects or otherwise because these actions are produced only by the ☾, and what the ☽ does is expose their effects, bringing them out of their hiding and illuminating them after they had been extinguished. We say with certainty that it does not produce actions; it only brings them out of their concealment. The ☾ is responsible for bringing all things from non-existence to being.

The five above-described situations of the ☽ as determined by its relationship to the ☾ may be similar to the situation of animals, plants and metals. Accordingly, the ☽'s situation as determined by its relationship to the ☾ may be similar to situation of animals in all ages, in their youth as well as in their old age. Similarly, the ☽'s situation may also be similar to the four seasons of the year, to the four directions called the angles of the world: the East, the West, the right and the left. Four winds may blow from these four directions. Moreover, the various four in the human body may be similar to the above groups of four.

Although the origin of these meanings and phases is from the planets including the ☾ and the ☽, they accept from the power of the planet movements, by virtue of their own movements and being at this image, things that emanate to them after acquiring their images, whereby they will have situations which require images different from their initial images. Since this is the case, all complex bodies, which are similar to planets, may be constantly changing in response to the powers of the planetary movements. These partial changes are called the continuous partial changes which we mentioned previously. They are the pillars of things and their origins. They are called the constant total changes which do not vanish or transform because if they do transform, the images of these things will all be impaired since they are the constant total.

As a result of what we have explained, all situations of things from their beginning to their end are similar to the situations of the ☽ as they are determined by its relationship to the ☉. This accidental cause, which not only belongs to forms but to all planets as well as to all complex bodies, is from the stars and in particular from the ☽ as well as from the planets in general. Those ensuing tragedies are the result of the eclipse of the ☽ and planets.

These things accept from the ☉, the ☽ and planets constant change. Thus, they accept rightness for themselves from right situations and wrongs from wrong situations. The eclipse of the ☉ and the ☽ is an accidental event which is similar to abnormal complex bodies. No one believes that the ☉ and the ☽ have any mischief in themselves, neither accidental nor intrinsic. What we mean by calling these tragedies celestial is that the reason for their occurrence and the occurrence of all other tragedies that affect animals, plants, other complex bodies and other four elements is the eclipse of the ☽ and planets.

Going back to our subject, we say that it is a necessity to look into the position of the ☽ for every action. It is the most useful thing in knowing the outlook and the true information and the best indicator of what is happening in the world of being and corruption. It is the most specialized, among all other things, in its management. Its safety from an-nuhus (the start of misfortune) and its distant position from the burning way should be considered when starting an action desiring a good outcome and complete usefulness. The duration and soundness of this action will depend on the speed of the movement and what its indications are. However, if it was in contact with an-nuhus and declining to the south, or if it is in at the end of the constellations or in their first degree but did not complete it, then this is bad. Nonetheless, it should not be looked at if it is declining or vacant of the master of its house, or dropping from the pole, or with the Tail of the Dragon because starting an action in this case will not be warranted unless the planet from which the ☽ moves away and the planet with which the ☽ converges are in one pole, or what comes next to the pole, or dropping. Because if the ☽ is dropping, there will be no good in it except when it is in the third position of the ascendant and the master of its house is dropping. If you find the master of the house of the ☽ in the ascending pole or in the middle of the sky, Al-Hadi Ashar, or in Al-Khamis, and if it was moving eastward in a straight line, then this situation will be favorable to the endeavor you undertake. This is similar to the favorable relationship of ♀ to women and happiness, ♀ to sects, religions, and males, ♀ to writing and correspondence, the ☉ to authority and leadership and the ☽ to education and messengers.

Whenever you plan to undertake an action, you ought to look at the ☉ and the ☽ and their honorable companions and at their domain and then look at the middle of the sky. If you find them both clear of al-nuhus in these positions and you find their companions, I mean the companions of honor or the master of the ascendant in a favorable position, then starting action in this case will be recommended, complete and better. This is especially true when al-su'ud²⁶ are in azimuth with the illuminating planets and the ascendant is easterly, because eastward movement of planets indicates overcoming, victory, completion and expedient achievement of wishes, while westerly planets, although they may be in a pole, indicate slowness, languor and prolonging.

If you find the ☽ in a favorable position while its master is dropping, then the commencement of an action will be good although the outcome will be bad, and if you find both the ☽

and its master dropping, then you know that the action beginning and end will be bad. If the ☿ and its master are in favorable positions, then the action will be as good and complete as planned by its doer especially if the master of the ascendant is a sa'ad and it is in the pole. However, if it is a nahs and its position is favorable, then the best thing to do in this situation is to have ♀ and ♀ in the ascendant or looking at the ascendant. This will produce a complete, favorable, expeditious, and blessed result, especially if this is done when the ☿ is converging with the sa'ad and that sa'ad is full and not retreating. This will be suitable for every action except releasing a slave from his master and taking what does not belong to him.

The ☿ is the foremost planet in managing whatever is below it from the world of being and corruption. Therefore, you should look first at its sa'ad or nahs, and then identify the increase in its beginning, since it gets more powerful as it moves away from the ☉, and then it changes as it reaches its sixth, fourth and third phases as well as when it is facing the ☉. Its influence will be equivalent to the influence of the planets which it converges with at that time, while, at the same time, it is in good standing at its fourth, third and sixth phases, as well as when it is facing the ☉. If you detect that the ☿ is getting increasingly bright and more powerful, this will be an indication that this is the best occasion for achieving an increase in whatever you would like to achieve. However, if its brightness is decreasing, then this is the best time to achieve a decrease in whatever you want to accomplish. If the ☿ separates from the ☉ until it reaches the left fourth phase, this is favorable for claiming a right. It will be a favorable position for undertaking selling, purchasing, quarrels, debate and counter argument when the ☿ moves away from the ☉'s left fourth phase and becomes in full view of the ☉. But between facing the ☉ and its right fourth phase will be favorable for the unjustly treated in a conflict as well as for debt and when it converges with the ☉, it becomes favorable for applying education and claiming a right.

You should know that the best planet's su'ud is when there is a sa'ad in the constellation in which the planet is a part of and, at the same time, there is a sa'ad in the next constellation. You should also know, Allah bless you, that the turned up-side-down constellations are favorable for triumph and coercion. ♃ and ♄ and constellations of dual bodies are especially favorable for making talismans and tricks. As for the fixed constellations, they are favorable for influential people and making talismans for constant actions. Thus, if you intend to produce silver or gold chemically or do anything which connects the spirituality of the ☿ and the ascendant with a fixed constellation and with a dual-body planet, and if you want to start an action that you like to repeat on a daily basis, you need to let the ascendant be a dual-body constellation and to let the ☿ in an up-side-down constellation looking at the ascendant. When you want to have an action with a lasting potential and constancy, let that ascendant be a fixed constellation or with a dual-body constellation, and, at the same time, let the ☿ be in a fixed constellation connected to the master of its house either in the third or sixth phase provided that the master of its house is clear of nuhus, burning and retreat. If this is impossible, let the ☿ be connected to the su'ud while that particular sa'ad is looking at the master of the ascendant in a third or sixth phase. Avoid their facing each other and the fourth phase since the strongest effect takes place when the su'ud are looking from the third or the sixth phase, and the weakest when they are looking from the fourth phase or when they are facing each other. The weakest will be when the nuhus are looking from the third or sixth phase and the strongest when they are looking from the fourth phase or when they are meeting each other. If the ☿ is accidentally connected to the master of its house which was a nahs, then this situation will be favorable in fulfilling needs and all sought effects; however, if it is a sa'ad and looking at the ascendant, that will be better and more efficient. Avoid all actions when the ☿ is with the Tail and looking at the nuhs from the fourth phase, as well as when they are facing each other, or separating from each another. Additionally, you should avoid all actions when the ☿'s qualities are decreased because this indicates difficult, tiresome and prolonged action. Hardship is proportionate to the decrease in one or more of the attributes of the ☿, especially if this decrease is in one of the three qualities: light, motion and calculation. Its best situation is when its light is brighter and out of sight of ☿ because if ☿ is looking at the ☿ when its light is brighter, this will add a great deal of nahts to the ☿ and the same thing happens when ☿ is looking at the ☿ when its light is less bright. The ☿ is strongest at night when it is above the Earth, while the ascendant is strongest on daytime when the ☿ is below the Earth. You should also know that the best choice is when the ☿ and the ascendant are in a straight-ascendant constellation. This situation indicates expeditious fulfillment of a need and success, especially if they are in fixed or in dual-body constellations.

You may know that ♀ is the fastest constellation in turning up-side down, and ♄ is the most unsteady; ♀ is the fastest in motion, and ♄ is the strongest and the most balanced. You may also know that the poles are faster in completing actions than others and what comes after the poles are slower and then the dropping poles are slow and signals of failure. The fastest completion of an action is accomplished when there is a sa'ad in the ascendant, or when the ☿ is moving in a straight path. Be aware that the outcome of an action can be detected from the master of the third phase of the ☿, from the master of the ascendant, in accordance with their positions and situations, as well as when the planets are looking at them. You may follow these examples in order to predetermine what the outcome will be.

Dorotheus, the pioneer of establishing the rules for starting actions, advises to have the ascendant and its master and the ☿ and the master of its house in good standing and to avoid, as much as you can, having the ☿ in one of the ten bad phases at the start of an action and not to let it disappear from the ascendant, especially when the master of the ascendant or the master of the ☿ are two nahts opposing and competing with the ☿ from a pole. Let the ☿ be in the ascendant pole. Do not drop the arrow of happiness at the beginning of actions or matters related to opposing the ☿ or competing with it. Also, do not pay any attention to the master of the arrow or whether the arrow is dropping into the ascendant if the arrow is looking at the ascendant and the ☿. Be careful to let the master of the ascendant be with the arrow. This is safer and better. Do not at all let the ☿ be in the third, sixth, eighth or twelfth phase of the arrow. This is abhorred. Let the beginning of the master of the ascendant and the ☿ be always in the straight ascending constellations. You may also know that the ascendant and the fourth and its master denote the beginnings in general. However, if you see the ☿ in a bad situation or something comes up that has to be done and you cannot delay, drop the ☿ from the ascendant and do not let the ascendant have any part of the ☿; make the ascendant a sa'ad and strengthen the ascendant and its master. Thus is Dorotheus' statement.

Going back to our subject, we would like to add that improving the ascendant and its master should be in quality form and happiness. By form, we mean that the ascendant should have similar meaning and quality to the meaning and quality of the need. By quality, we relate such matters as things to be completed quickly, fast motion, authority and strength to the fiery constellations. By meaning, we relate such matters as wars to ☿'s constellations and we have the need, the master of the need and the master's master of the need in suitable positions. The position of the need indicates the beginning of what is in this need; the master of the need refers to the middle of the need, and the master's master of the need points out to the outcome of the need. Moreover, the ascendant indicates the beginning of the situation of the person asking for the need; the master of the ascendant indicates the middle and the master's master of the ascendant indicates the end. You can refer the arrow of the need to the status of the need, to its master and to its master's master. Improve all these with what I have described above: bring to them the su'ud which have been produced for them, looking and by friendly connections; drop the nuhus from these positions and beware of the return of the master of the ascendant or the master of the need, because this indicates the worst, prevention and prolonging. If all positions and situations point to the being, this will be preceded by despair and prevention by preventive measures and actions. The result will be achieved but with difficulty. Avoid having the Tail face or converge with either the ☽ or the ☿ or in any other arrangement; that is they should not be in a converging or facing situation, but in the ascendant, in the position of the need or in the arrow of the need. This will spoil the outcome with disgrace and difficulty. Be sure that the su'ud are placed in the ascendant and the positions of the need or in the poles. As for the major sa'ad, it is powerful in every matter in which you seek Allah's protection. Regarding the minor sa'ad, it is powerful in entertainment, sensual pleasure, women, make-up and so forth. Avoid having the ☽ in the ascendant in any matter because it is opposing it and hostile to it. However, the ☿ does not oppose the ascendant, but it uncovers matters, propagates them and divides the society.

Be certain that there are no nuhus in the ascendant and the poles especially if they were the masters of the bad positions. If the nuhs is the master of al-Thamin, it indicates death, opposition and imprisonment. If it is the master of al-Sadis, it indicates enemies, slaves, illnesses, theft, small prisons and four-legged animals. If it is the master of al-Thani-ashar, it denotes a disaster caused by money, assistants, food and water. The benefit of what I am telling you is very important in the science of talismans. Beware and take extreme caution not to let the ascendant be a daytime ascendant in a daytime constellation or a night-time ascendant in a night-time constellation. Additionally, it should be ascending in a straight line. The same applies to the ☿ and the ☽ if you can arrange that. The masters should be strong to obtain a combined force. Know the planets and what they indicate and this will help you achieve the purpose in this regard. Whenever you like to acquire friendship, companionship, or association, let the ☽ be accepted by ☿ in the third phase, or better yet in the house of honor.

You should know that the third phase is a figure of three equal sides. Each side consists of 120 parts circumscribed by the celestial body bands. The hexagonal form is composed of six equal sides. Each side is made of 60 parts surrounded by the celestial body orbits. The quadrangular form is a four-sided figure and each side comprises 90 parts bordered by the celestial body bands. Facing is equivalent to the second quadrangular phase.²⁷

Going back to our topic, we would like to say that if ☿ is not accepting, let it be in the third phase of the ☽ while the ☽ is being accepted by ☿ or by the master of its house regardless of whether it is in the third or sixth phase or converging with them. If that was not possible, let the ☽ have some of ☿'s good luck, the su'ud of ☿ and clear of nuhus, and if that is only for friendship and companionship, let the ascendant be in the good fortune of ☿. However, if friendship is for an interest in real estate, the ascendant should be in al-Rabi. If you desire to benefit from credit, let it be in Al-Tasi. If you hope to fulfill a wish, let it be in al-Hadi-Ashar and simultaneously make the arrow of happiness and its master derive their good fortune willingly from a strong position. If friendship and companionship are desired for war-related matters, let σ' accept and assist the master of the ascendant or the $\mathfrak{D}$ as a gesture of friendship. If you want to obtain a loan, let the acceptance be from $\mathfrak{H}$ instead of σ' . If it is for writers, accountants or scholars, let acceptance be from $\mathfrak{V}$. If it is for the great king, let acceptance be from the $\mathfrak{O}$. If for judges and religious and noble people, let acceptance be from Δ .

Likewise, if it is from a seeker of a meaning of something, let acceptance be from its master - I mean the acceptance of the $\mathfrak{D}$ of the ascendant, the arrow of happiness and from the arrow of wealth. Additionally, let the master of the $\mathfrak{D}$ be restored, as we mentioned above, and let the master of the ascendant and the master of al-Rabi' be clear from nuhus. Power is an indicator of the outcome.

If you want to fulfill a need, let the master of the ascendant and the $\mathfrak{D}$ be accepted by the master of the need or the one which is controlling it. Also let the $\mathfrak{D}$ or the master of the ascendant be in the position of the need. If the need is from a sheikh or a landlord, let the master of the need be $\mathfrak{H}$. If it is from a judge, a religious and generous person or honorable person or from a minister, let the master of the need be Δ . If it is from an army or from a person who deals with fire and iron, let the master of the need be σ' . If it is from a king or a sultan, let its master be the $\mathfrak{O}$. If from a woman, an entertainment operator, a make-up professional or from the makers of perfume, make-up products, tattoos and silk brocades, let the master of the need be $\mathfrak{V}$. If the need is from an accountant, a writer, a person of wisdom and tricks, a merchant or from a vocational person with good public relations, let the master of the need be $\mathfrak{V}$. If the need is from a courier, a messenger, the king's servants, a sly person or a spy, let the master of the need be the $\mathfrak{D}$. Bring sa'ad the master of the ascendant and the $\mathfrak{D}$ with every need and let them be in an upside down position. If the need is for money, improve the arrow of happiness by meeting with its master and the master of the need. Also, let it be in sight of the $\mathfrak{D}$. Moreover, ameliorate the master of al-Rabi' with su'ud and acceptance. Be very cautious of the existence of a strong nahs separating the master of the ascendant and the $\mathfrak{D}$ on the one hand, and the master of the need, on the other. Furthermore, beware of the attachment of a nahs to the master of the need, to the $\mathfrak{D}$ or to the master of the ascendant as it does not have anything to do with the need. Let the acceptance from the third or sixth phases, which I have described, whether in su'ud or nuhus, be collectively in su'ud. Additionally, avoid dropping the master of the need, the $\mathfrak{O}$ and the $\mathfrak{D}$, and the master of the poles. If this difficult situation takes place, let the coercer of the five eclipses join the coercer of the meanings of the need. Let both be in su'ud and in an upside down position. Moreover, watch out for a nahs being attached to the master of the $\mathfrak{D}$, the master of al-Rabi and the ascendant, because this will spoil it and bring nahs to the outcome of the need.

Whenever you want to plan or deal with an action to produce a certain result or a result which is perpetual, let that and the $\mathfrak{D}$ be in a dual-body constellation and clear of nuhus. Also, let the ascendant be in a sound condition. If the plan is for gold, strengthen the $\mathfrak{O}$ and let it be in a good situation when you start you endeavor. Maintain this situation for the $\mathfrak{D}$ every time you start an action.

We have advised you, may Allah bless you, of good things which will be with you in many of your actions. Be scrupulous and use analogy with their partial matters. These are some of the pillars of making talismans and the key to them. Allah prohibits dealing with the art of stars because it leads to the art of talismans. My purpose for revealing this science is to promote reflection by those concerned. This is what Aristotle means when he says to Alexander,

"If you can make a move similar to and in agreement with a celestial movement and with a choice of stars, you will achieve your desire and fulfill your wish."

How true is Aristotle's advice! This is the difference between the philosophers endeavors and attempts of the uninformed.

Allah says,

"They know but the outer in the life of this world, but of the end of things they are heedless."

This is an indication to the profound nature and secrets of science.

❧{Chapter Four}❧

YOU MAY KNOW, THAT THE ANCIENT talisman-makers believed that in each quarter of the celestial sphere, eight parts move inwardly and eight move outwardly. Many of those who dealt with ephemeris had overlooked this fact in their calculations although it is very useful in the profession of talisman-making. In order to study this, you need to review the history of King Augustus. Go back 128 years from the date of King Augustus; that marks the end of the incoming eight parts in that era. After that, the beginning of the incoming parts will start. Then you add to these years 313 years from the beginning of Augustus' rule to the beginning of Diocletianus' rule and add to that the number of years he served as king. Take 1/80 of that; in each 80 years of these, one part will start moving. The even number of eighties is eight. The remainder is added to the calculations of the ☉ and the five planets rotating around their axis. By this, you can determine what you want from this art. Thus, do not neglect the incoming-and-outgoing movement of planets because this is the backbone in making talismans for the purpose of producing images. You may know that this is their greatest concealed secret. These eight parts complete their incoming-and-outgoing movements once in every 360 years.

I explained to you that when they complete their outgoing movement, you can determine their incoming and outgoing. This knowledge is essential for producing the desired effects. The incoming-and-outgoing is a consequence of the constellations' movement from East to West or from West to East. No other phase is useful. When the incoming phase starts, this will be an indication of what events take place in the world. Similarly, if the ongoing phase starts, it will be an indication of other events caused by the incoming and outgoing phases. You may bear in mind that the incoming-and-outgoing phases are characteristics of the constellations' band, not of the straight path.

King Augustus became a king 200 years after King Alexander which means that the former rule ended 260 years after King Alexander's rule. As for his reference to the 310 year period between Augustus rule and Diocletianus, this was when King Augustus removed another King from power; that is 12 years before Christ. Accordingly, this adds up to 4,988 years of the history of the world. In order for the total number of years to agree with the total number of Alexander's years, you subtract these 12 years. Accordingly, the increase in Diocletianus' years will be 301 years in addition to the above-mentioned 128 years. Consequently, the increase in Diocletianus' years will be 429 years.

❧Chapter Five❧

I READ IN HERMES' WORKS something concerning this art of miracles, which I would like to cite. He divided this art into three types: the art of talismans, which has been mostly treated and dealt with by the Sabians and the Nabatean's slaves. Part of this field is the art of planets and offering them sacrifices, incense and drawings. The second type was the specialty of the Greeks who were the pioneers in the art of stars. This is an advanced and excellent art. The third type is the art of the qalafirijat (potentials?), promoting inspirations, seriousness, and knowing spirits among which similar words are distributed. This art was the specialty of the Indians, the Sakasiks of Yemen, and the Copts of Egypt. Each of these sciences has its own philosophic origin, as well as introductions.

It is known about the Indians that they are advanced in the science of poisons which cannot be treated by medicine. By using certain words or making certain movements, they can kill or have the hearer change his mind. They developed a musical instrument called al-kankala with one string on one body. They can produce any tune and notes with this instrument. Additionally, they have strange secrets such as impregnating a woman without sexual relationships by directing certain movements at her. They also have a drink which prevents old age, gray hair, curved back and natural body degeneration. This drink is especially made and used by them only. They have the most capable people in making magic and illusions; they perceive that there is a building behind the equator in the South and they are the ones referred to as djinn and demons. They are in the kind of world which cannot be seen by the naked eye; they intermarry and die by natural law and believe that their guides in the celestial sphere are ♄ and the Tail. According to their history, one of their leaders called Adam was the beginning of their march due to his uniqueness. Their leader in this art claims that every image in the world of being and corruption is developed by the fixed planets thereby creating several types of configurations in the sky. He also claims that there are images in the sky that are not available on earth. These images are used by magicians in ceremonies or talismans to draw certain arrangements which they term as rings such as this figure:

The lines between these rings are the beams of these planets to earth as well as between the fixed planets. This arrangement as shown in the following figure:

-denotes their own image and is known to people devoted to observation and ceremonies. This is what is being reported and arranged by practitioners of legerdemain and incantation and not what the fixed planets develop in the sky.

Hermes also claims that some of the images of planets are illusionary, not real and, as a group, they only indicate that degree. This marvelous insight could not have been attained by this man without reviewing the books of the Indians who deal with this science. Nonetheless, they use these images in accordance with the established planets' arrangements at certain times and known ascendant. They also use optimism, castigating, forewarning, and expressions to strengthen their confidence in questions, perceptions and retrieving buried valuables.

Additionally, they make use of halos, the halos of the ☉ and the ♃, rainbows, shooting stars, comets and blackness in the ☉ to identify the high effects. All of these support and strengthen the sought outcome. Moreover, they believe that there are beautiful and ugly images created by the fixed planets in the celestial sphere. Thus, if someone is born while the ascendant is a beautiful image and the ☉ and the ♃ are in beautiful images, this will be an indication that the born will be happy; however, if born while the ascendant is an ugly image, and the ☉ and the ♃ are in an ugly image, he will be unfortunate. Artful actions, questions and talismans have similar effects. Furthermore, they believe that the shares of stars are like the night mixed dreams that do not indicate anything because they are mixed, and therefore, they should be avoided, and others should be looked at. These are frequently considered in birth, requests and artful acts. Besides, they think that dreams are the result of mental strength and its connection with the celestial world. Accordingly, what you see there, are images of things on earth. This true vision and its science is close to the science of stars. Therefore, by relying on this closeness, they use the strength of ♃ as an indication of the status of the born if ♃ is strong. Nonetheless, dreams may be the result of a personal conjecture or confusion.

You may know that the truth of dreams is an objective representation of personal matters, neutralizing the five senses and employing reflection. The force of imagination composes what it perceives from tangible images and separates them from one another. It also has a third function and that is likeness; if the speaking mind, as perfect as it may be, helps the dreamer see something which will be seen as it is. But if the force of imagination is more perfect, the perception will be in meaning. For instance, if the perfect mind sees a dog or a lion about to attack him, it will come out as perceived. However, if the force of imagination was more perfect, it will be perceived as a lawman or a thief, and perception is by meaning. If the natural desire is strong, and the mind is preoccupied with it as well as with clothes and other daily activities, these concentrations and activities will be envisioned as involvement in sensual pleasures, swimming and similar actual daily activities. For example, if one is preoccupied with having sexual relations because of abundant stored energy, he will experience puberty acts. If full of fluid, he will see in his dream rivers; if he has a cold and apathetic temper, he will see nightmares; if he has a hot temper, he will see fires and furnaces, and so forth. Likewise, the essence of prediction is the intuitive knowledge of human nature by reflecting on what is being looked at for making a prediction, whether it is a statute that can be seen, or something that can be heard in the case of reflection. The force of imagination is sent to look into the sought knowledge. If his force of imagination is strong enough, he can visualize the knowledge like looking at a mirror, and then he can use what he saw and heard to reach some sort of knowledge. This is similar to the function of the force of imagination force when the senses are dormant. It acts upon the tangibles, which he can see when he is awake, and then adds them to what is being mentally perceived to develop a dream. If the tangibles and the perceived images are proportionate and the body and its conditions are in harmony, the dreams will be true; otherwise, they will be confused dreams.

Be aware that fortune telling is derived from the fifth essence called revelation. It is one of the imagining forces of the mind which goes through the particulars until it becomes fully aware of them, and then it can advise him of these particulars either when he is asleep or awake. If the imagining force is ideal, the particulars will be available to him similar to the mirror, as we mentioned before, which reflects and reports these particulars as they are. However, this information pertains only to the particulars; it does not deal with mental perception. If he only becomes ideally aware of these perceptions, he becomes wise. But if he becomes ideally aware of both, he becomes a prophet, and this is limited to the persons who receive perfect revelation from the First Creator. In this case, what the Creator transmits through his revelation to the active mind, will be transmitted from the active mind to his acted upon mind. However, when this revelation is transmitted from the active mind to his imagining force, his acted-upon mind becomes wise, but if it is transmitted to his imagining faculty, he becomes a prophet. This person will be in the highest rank of mankind and the happiest. This is the source, as well as the end of every good. We seek virtues to be happy, and we get there by improving our manners, taking care of our households, and reforming and uniting the Ummah²⁸ by which it can attain happiness. The knowledge of beings, how, why and what these beings are, is the theoretical part of it. Beginning with tangibles we ascend from this point to theological levels according to the individual potential. This is the real happy and ideal person. Happiness is the righteousness which is sought for the sake of righteousness; it is not sought at any time for achieving other things because there is nothing beyond happiness that is more ideal. Abu Nasr al-Farabi²⁹ refers to this subject in his introduction on the results of actions by saying: "Trivial matters may lead to great accomplishments, and these are the actions by which happiness can be attained, such as benign actions and intentions which lead to good deeds. He who achieves that will enjoy an everlasting life, a pleasure unblemished by any sorrow, a knowledge clear of any misinformation and a wealth pure of any poverty. The Prophet, may Allah grant him salvation, says in this regard, "O Allah, there is no life as good as life in the hereafter. May Allah admit us in it and help us to follow the path which leads to it".

Going back to our topic, I would like to add that the Indians claim that a spirit may appear to the magician as a person which communicates with him and teaches him whatever it likes. It may endear him to kings and sultans or solve or complicate things for him. Spirits were portrayed by the ancient generations as pictures of different things on their temples, which they believed would fulfill any request or wish. They also claim that talismans are more influential than choices because they are made by the nature of the whole. It is analogous to a miracle because it uses natural characteristics, since natural characteristics can produce individual strange results. Some of the examples of these wonderful actions are protecting a person who wears a red ruby necklace from plagues and other diseases. By combining the particular and the whole, a talisman may act to repel mosquitoes, lice and flies. It does this by incorporating in it a celestial arrangement and physical materials which are made from it, for them in accordance with the principle that the being of a thing is its matter, which is a natural characteristic. Nonetheless, the purpose of mentioning the characteristic here is to let you know the true essence of talismans, and that whatever is made in this world to achieve a certain result is accomplished through a special purpose talisman. You will realize that afterwards.

❖{Chapter Six}❖

THE OBJECTIVE, MAY ALLAH BLESS YOU, of mentioning the characteristics is to let you know that anything that acts naturally, may increase or decrease its action. However, if this action was specialized for a certain function, it will be more complete and stronger, and its manifestation will be clearer and more obvious. This is similar to the case of scammonia³⁰ attraction to jaundice. The cause for that is that scammonia is hot and dry, which are similar to the characteristics of jaundice. You may also know that if the naturally acting medicine is specialized for a certain disease, its effect will be stronger. A talisman is more fascinating; that can be manifested by the various types of contribution of planets, on one hand, and accepting these contributions, on the other. Contributing is more complete, may Allah bless you. When you make a talisman, you should deliberately start with a symbol and an image of acceptance, so that contribution from planets can be given with full consent. By doing this, a talisman will produce the sought objective with a lasting effect and an expanding spirit. The purpose of this example is to clarify the contribution of planets in achieving the sought objective and the picture of acceptance of this contribution. Many people, who make talismans all the time, do not know that.

Accordingly, if you want to make something out of animals, compose a product out of plants or fabricate something out of rocks. Collect parts of these things first, and then pound them, crush them, mix them or use any other method until you finish. Nature and planets will continue to manage and complete this process until the above things produce the final planned results, such as making dyes, reproduction of animals, as well as bees', snakes', and scorpions' functions, etc. The same thing can be said about natures and characters as well as about producing medicine. This is also similar to developing sperm in the womb until they reach the stage where nature and planets start performing their function gradually to produce the planned outcome. Another example is the production of rocks from water and metal. Initially they are in a liquid form like semen and then winds beat it until it becomes foam. Subsequently, metal and other surrounding substances keep whipping it until it reaches its final solid form. The same is true for plants and their production. Parallel to that is the first stage of mold formation; it initially goes back to a similar moist substance, which is the essence of being, and to other similar accepted models and images, and when it gets to that state, it begins forming the model. This is achieved by the resumed acceptance, not by the initial acceptance. This acceptance is accomplished by dew and moisture which it acquires at this stage. All other things that are produced by profession must coincide with these models of formation and being. Without a being, the sought image will never be accepted because, in order to make a thing by means of generating and composing, first you must prepare the components which make up that thing so they are ready to accept a different form. For example starch is made from food, while the ingredients that make up vermicelli³¹ and sweets are made from starch. By the same token, sauce, cheese and butter are made from milk, and yarn from cotton and so forth. The reason for this is whenever a substance with a certain image accepts another image, the first substance will vanish and the new image acquires a new acceptance by which it accepts a second image. Accordingly, if the new image is accepted, it becomes ordinary for the remainder of other images. This is also true for the fluid substance in this world. As for the higher world, it is either an actual substance and an eternal image or a unique image that does not have substance.

Whereas our objective from the above examples has been clarified, I would like you to know that talismans are similar. The objective of a talisman-maker is to let one matter be willing to accept an image, such as the apparent effect of bay seeds against snakes' venom, saffron against anoles³², sour and bitter substances against hornets, and hornets' attraction to roses and licorice roots. Another example is the increase of semen with an increase in the acidity of the flowing fluid. The body of a talisman is composed of more than one ingredient and when these ingredients are combined, they accept the sought result of the new compound.

This is similar to medicines which physicians prescribe in the treatment of illness and pain. If these medicines can be taken or used individually, then you should do that. That is what experienced physicians do. Jahja Ibn Masawaih advises, in this regard, that as long as you can treat a patient with a single-ingredient medicine, do not use a compound medicine. However, if you need to use a compound medicine, which has different ingredients, let the sought effect of this compound be similar to the total effects of each ingredient. The same thing can be said about baked goods, *theriaca*³³, meals of individual pieces such as fruits and compounds such as sweets.

You may also know that an individual planet may have different functions like fire. Fire can be used to heat honey. If it is used adequately, it gives honey a delicious taste; however, if the heat increases, honey will boil over and burn, and it becomes distasteful and bitter. Similar to this is the function of planets depending on whether they are in a bright or in a dark degree.

Planets have two types of functions: subjective motion and accidental heat which follows their motion. Heat is the essence of motion and motion is the essence of the function of planets. This statement particularly applies to the sensory faculties. What applies to the mental faculty is that motion is the ethereal essence of fixed planets. This essence comes to fixed planets through longing for virtue and the general good. Thus, by necessity, heat follows motion and motion follows the first perfection which cannot be surpassed by any other perfection at all. Analogous to the above are the collective orbits of the celestial bodies, their individual orbits and the total heat emanating from them. The effects of the celestial body orbits influence the effects of planets, not the other way around. The function of planets is stagnant and motionless; however, planets produce magnificent effects and wonderful contributions which do not exist in celestial orbits at all. Ether is the first true acting nature, and the contribution of planets is but its dye and garment like dyes and garments we use although the former are prettier and better. The celestial orbital degrees are not real at all; this term is being used for convenience and calculation purposes, because there are no parts of the celestial orbits which are active and others which are acted upon. In motion and nature, all are one; there is no difference at all between the part and the whole.

Angles are not void of fixed planets or their fixed arrangements because the fixed planet orbits are full of fixed planets. What is meant by an angle being void of fixed planets is that besides the fixed planets that we are able to observe, there are other distant planets whose detection is absolutely beyond our resources. Accordingly, it has been envisaged that a planet in a fixed position does not do anything since it is not in its angle, elevation, apogee, nadir, return or straight motion. However, it will be on its way to every one of these situations, but it will not have an arrangement similar to those of either different or similar planets. Despite the fact that these positions are active, they appear to be inactive since they are acquired by fixed planets which do not settle in the sky, and accordingly, they appear to be inactive. This position is abstract and ambiguous. Think about it. Although planets are active by nature, they have two functions, general and specific. The general function is the action which has no direction and the specific function is the action which has a direction. For example, food in the stomach is absorbed by the liver and transformed into a substance similar to blood which flows in the veins. But when the liver transfers blood to various organs, it transforms into blood what seems to be blood and into bones and limbs what seems to be bones and limbs.

This situation is analogous to the composed arrangements of the planets' orbits. There are reasons for the virtuous action of planets; if a planet is in its summit or in what is called its apogee, it joins and becomes associated with the planet above it and performs its action, and consequently, it does elegant things. However, if it is in its lowest point (nadir), it does the function of the planet underneath it. In the same manner, the orbits of fixed planets accomplish the same function of the ethereal orbit. The ♄'s orbit does the function of at least two of the four fundamental elements of nature, especially fire and air due to their kindness. Likewise, ♄ always does the function of fixed planets when it is with them and at its farthest point, but it does the function of ♀ if it is at its nearest, lowest point. This is similar to the relationship between every individual planet and what is above or under it. This is an important element in the science of talismans which has been concealed by the philosophers of this profession. Had we kept it hidden from the seekers of this approach, we would have acted niggardly and aviciously.

You ought to know that the slower the planets are, the stronger their effect and the more elegant they will be. The faster they are, the weaker their effects will be. Moreover, the effect of planets at medium speed are medium. This is not an absolute relationship; it is relative because this situation may be reversed; the slower may become less effective and the slower may become faster and consequently become more effective. These relationships exist between the ethereal orbit and the movement of beings on earth. As for the relationship of the ethereal orbit to beings on earth, the heavier the being is the stronger the effect will be and the lighter, the weaker. The relationship of beings on earth to orbits of fixed planets is similar; the lighter, the more effective and the heavier, the less effective.

However, there was a substantial disagreement on this subject. Some of the ancient philosophers believed that the relationships were the opposite; they thought that the ethereal orbit and the orbit of planets are directly related. The orbit of a slow-moving planet is necessarily very similar to the ethereal orbit in stillness and heaviness. Simple beings are similar in these basic qualities; the slow is similar to the slow and the fast is similar to the fast. Many difficult symbols and Treatises were written on this subject.

Let me mention to you one of the secrets of the ancient professionals about making talismans. You should know that when the ☿ is with ♄, the effect of ♄ will prevail because ♄'s influence is much greater than the ☿'s. This situation applies to every other planet when it is with ♄ since ♄'s effect is greater than all the effects of other fixed planets. This is either because of its height, its closeness to the ethereal orbit and to the orbit of fixed planets or because of its lethargic motion and its striking similarity to the ethereal orbit. Nonetheless, if the ☿, ♀ or ♁ are associated with the actions of ♄, they affect in a remarkable manner these actions and improve them slightly. The same situation emerges if fixed planets are added to ♄. These arrangements and relationships apply to the ☿ without any deviation whatsoever; its effects influence fire and air, and with this influence, fire and air affect water and earth, and, subsequently, the effect of the above four have bearing on the second generated being.

It is possible that whenever two planets join, they develop three different situations: a plus, a minus and a median. The ☿'s effect will be governed by ♄'s power when the ☿ joins ♄ and as long as the latter is in its zenith, noble or apogee. The same situation prevails only if the ☿ and ♄ join in one path at these positions. This condition will also take place when ♄ and other planets join in these positions. However, the effect of the ☿ may be a lot stronger than ♄'s if the ☿ was in the above graceful positions and ♄ was in the opposite positions. If the ☿ and ♄ are together in positions opposite to the above graceful positions, the ☿'s effect will be subordinate to ♄'s as in the first situation. If ♄ is in its graceful positions and the ☿ in its own normal positions, the effect of the ☿ will be very weak. When ♄ is in a straight and return path as well as in other perfectly straight paths, both effects will be even, especially if it happens that the ☿ is in its summit. This is because this high and straight position of the ☿ is not equal to the descending position of ♄. However, the situation with ♃ and ♄ is different from that with ♃ and the ☿ although they may be similar to a great extent. Thus, if ♃ is high and so is ♄, ♄'s effect will be stronger. Nonetheless, if ♄ is high and ♃ is in its first path and in a graceful and straight position, then the dominance of ♄ is not certain. However, if the arrangement is different, ♃ will dominate and ♄'s effect will completely diminish. The same situation applies to ♃ and ☿. When they are together, ☿'s effect will be stronger except if any of the above conditions take place. As for ♀ and ♁, each one has its own arrangement and similarity to other planets. However, the ☽ is different because it does not have either the arrangement or the similarity to the high planets. This is the basis to be relied on in dealing with these accidental occasions and the need for it is very essential in the science of talismans.

You should also know that the action of planets is a function of their being and since their being is simple, it is immune to corruption. Corruption only occurs in compounds made of different components. The action of the orbits of the whole eastern sphere is the absolute general action because it moves all orbits and planets. The reason for this is that the sphere orbits are the cause of the planet orbits and motion. In fact, it is absolutely still because it is the moving force of all orbits and planets. It has been said that it moves the whole, but it, itself, is not moving because that is impossible. Although the fixed-planet orbits are common, they are relative to the movement of the orbit of the whole and this is the case with the rest of the orbits. It should be understood that the motion of each sphere is common to all orbits and planets in it as well as to their own motion. Another cause for the action of the planets is their orbits, since planets by themselves do not move; they only move by accident. Accordingly, planet orbits have two actions: by being and by accidental heat, because, as we said before, heat follows the movement of planets only if it develops immediately after the movement. As we mentioned above, the entire effect and contribution sought from talismans is moving whatever is movable and transforming it from force into action. This is because an image reflects a similar resemblance of anything and matter is susceptible to accept everything. Every matter has an image of a particular compound and for every compound there is an image of the matter composed of that particular compound. For example, a small fire grows bigger because it brings out the primordial substance of fire by force until it develops it via its own being, and thus, it grows bigger by (natural) action.

Additionally, you ought to know that the opposite does not ruin what is being developed by action; however, it can do that to what is being developed by force. What is being developed according to natural laws will be sound and what is being developed by an unnatural action will not be sound. Accordingly, what is heated by action can move what is heated by force because heating takes place by principle and the cause for this heat makes it hotter. As a being heated by action can move the heated being by force, the heated being by force moves, by nature, the heated being by action. The principle of acting by being is the same as being acted upon by its own being.

❖{Chapter Seven}❖

WHAT WE HAVE EXPLAINED applies to the image of the contribution and acceptance of the effect of talismans and their actions as well as to the images of similar and different beings. Similitude and difference are of important significance in making talismans. There is a similar functional relationship between the action of planets relative to the action of stone from which the effect of a talisman is derived, on the one hand, and the time and place of making the talisman, on the other. Therefore, relativity is one of the important fundamentals in making talismans.

Quantity is also similar because quantity, as stated in related instructions, is divided into two basic divisions: the connected and the separate. The connected is divided into five subdivisions: the line, the plane, the body, the time, and the place. The separate part is divided into two subdivisions: the statement and the number. The knowledge of these parts are essential in making talismans. As for the line, it is the azimuth that exists between the planets and the talisman and the azimuth between the talisman and the planned expected effect from the talisman. Both are similar and congruent. These two azimuth subdivisions of the line are what have been stated in the instructions about the straight line. They define the straight line as the line that faces all of the points placed on one another.

This is the most qualified statement about the talisman, the straight line is the object upon which the carried thing makes one pass beginning from the initial point until it reaches the end point, which is tangential to what the thing ends up to. In this regard, we say so-and-so is facing so-and-so and in his view. Similar descriptions can be made as long as there is no obstruction of what takes place on the straight line. Another example of this is the beams of planets shining on a body placed at the point on which the beams are shining. Be aware and cognizant of this. Another reason for considering this as the most qualified statement in making a talisman is that for the contribution of planets to produce the required action of a talisman, the same action of that stone or thing must be at a spotlight suitable for producing a similar effect. It is a must that the line between the planet and the talisman must be straight in order for the contribution to be complete. If it is not, the contribution will not be complete.

The plane is essentially the form of contribution since it is the diffusion of the effect of a talisman in that place. If the effect spreads, then it is by necessity a plane. For the same reason, air is transformed by this action as it is transformed by heat and so are cold temperature, smell, light, colors and so forth. Similarly, the thing upon which the line passes from the planets to the talisman and from the talisman to the place passes is a plane. These secrets and the causes for these phenomena were not disclosed.

Time is associated with the motion of a body which explains the essence of the talisman itself. Regarding the function of talismans, time is divided into several parts. One of these is the time of observing planets as to when their contribution is complete and when it is not. This is a function of the inclination of planets. Another part is the duration of time needed to observe the degree which, in reality, is more effective than planets. One of these is the time of observing planets when there is a need to locate a planet which is linked to another planet either in one degree, facing each other, in a triangular or in a quadruple³⁴ configuration. Other similar times are needed to identify the location of planets at which they render their actions, whether complete or not, such as integrity, decline and honor or give contributions such as su'ud and nuhus in dark or bright degrees, in producing effects, such as breaking off, and the like of what has been written in this regard. This is the great secret of the essence of talismans. Similar to this relationship is the relationship between the brought in and the brought out as well between similitude and contrariety. Other examples are observing the time of the end of the contribution and the time for making a talisman, as well as other time-related situations.

This art treats place as an aspect of quantity. It is the place of observing and facilitating it so that it can be observed at the required time. Some of these is the place of the talisman, the location of setting it up relative to air and earth, exposing it, hiding it and so forth.

One of these is the place in which a talisman is made. Another is the place in which the substance of a talisman is derived. This is needed for the action of talismans whose effect and contribution are disbelieved when heard because they are miraculous. Some of these are the action of talismans and their effect in things that are not animal, such as the effect of removing sand, moving rocks, preventing plagues, rain and clouds, changing the direction of wind and so on. There is no need at this juncture to give more examples of these actions since this part of the art must not be used at all.

Statements and numbers, as an aspect of the separate quantity, are needed in literature, signs, prediction and in pursuing tracks and so forth. Numbers are especially needed in these actions because they pertain to time, and because time specifies the number of the rotation of the planet in its orbit. When we say from this time to that, we only indicate a number, and when it gets to that (number), the rotation ends. Thus, if we say that an event takes place from a certain hour through a period of forty-two days, we are only giving a number.

You may also know that a signpost is a part of this type of art because it determines the shape of the talisman. It is also a part of this art, which is believed to affect most of the functions of talismans as well as their images in the place where they are placed. Moreover, this situation is an integral part of the signpost. How similar this relationship is to these phenomena!

Quality is the real cause of talismans because the location of the talisman action, which is similar to the location of the quality action, may possess a complete force, and by this force, it is capable of diffusing its action. This is, in fact, connecting higher bodies with lower bodies. In other words, this location must be similar to the location of contributing planets and must accept their effects in order for the sought results to be produced.

As we have mentioned repeatedly, certain planets are characterized by certain functions. Some planets are specialized in cities, animals, plants, rocks and so on. Thus, if a rock in a certain location accepts the action of a planet, or if it is similar to other things that accept the action of that planet, then its nature, that is its quality, will be similar to the accepted action of the planet in question. The same situation applies to the rock because the nature of the rock from which a talisman is made needs to be strengthened. When the body of the rock develops the predominant characteristic, its effect will spread and prevail. Those who deal with this branch of knowledge cannot find any other approach than adding acquired qualities to the rock, which are similar to it, until they become the prevailing quality of the rock. The same thing is done with pastes such as theriaca whose dominant strength is acquired through the individual strengths of many of the component medicines. These medicines interact with one another to produce wonderful effects in several important fields such as medicine, art and other natural disciplines and talismans, as well as in curing infectious disease and in the interacting of rocks with one another. My advice regarding the second issue is: in every action seek similitude and avoid contrariness. I have summarized what I have mentioned above in this sentence hoping that you will understand it.

❧Chapter Eight❧

THE IDEA OF COMBINING different ranks of natural bodies was developed by ancient philosophers through this approach. They learned the strength of ranks of medicine, food and others, and then combined them together until they discovered the benefits of medicines and their various effects. It is necessary to mention here an important fact; the ancient philosophers disagreed about what the simple bodies are and how many they are. Some researchers say that the basic and primordial natural elements are heat, coldness, moisture and dryness. They agreed, however, that they are qualities and basic simple elements. Then they called them compounds as we say hot, cold, moist and dry. When we say hot, we mean that a matter has acquired heat and the same can be said about the other elements. This is different from saying heat, coldness, etc. After this combination, there is another combination as in saying hot and dry, hot and moist, cold and dry, and cold and moist. This combination is secondary because it is not one; heat is neither dryness nor moisture and the same applies to coldness with relation to other elements. There is a third combination as in saying fire, air, water and earth. This combination is in addition to the first basic elements and the second and third combinations. Following that is a fourth combination which pertains to persons. This is also divided into various divisions. As for climate, the seasons are four: spring, autumn, winter and summer. As for people and animals, there are the gall, the blood, the bile and the phlegm. Be aware that the basic elements of mankind are much more kinder than the basic elements of animals because the latter are much more dense. The basic elements of plants are fats, dyes, seeds and roots. Similar to that are the elements of rocks. The relationship between the characteristics of the elements of mankind and animals are similar to the relationship between plants and rocks. The kindness of mankind elements is similar to those of plants, and the characteristics of the elements of rocks are comparable to those of animals. Following these combinations are the pre-composed things, which are called the combination of the seven-degree compounds. This is the final stage of combining, such as medicines, buildings and other similar things - the simple elements of which have been attributed to them. The combined elements are seven parts and the sub-parts of these are 28. The following table depicts the summary of what we have explained in detail:

|-----------------------|-----------|--------------|-------------|------------|
| 1st compound elements | hot | cold | moist | dry |
| 2nd compound elements | hot & dry | cold & moist | hot & humid | cold & dry |
| 3rd compound elements | fire | water | air | earth |
| 4th compound elements | summer | winter | spring | autumn |
| 5th compound elements | gall | phlegm | blood | bile |
| 6th compound elements | dyes | seeds | fats | roots |

Heat, coldness, humidity and dryness come, by sensory detection and analogy, before fire, air, water and earth in many aspects; fire is described as hot and dry because of its association with heat. Fire is neither described as heat nor as a compound because a compound is either composed of its fundamental elements by which it is described or a constant compound. Accordingly, heat is before fire, humidity before air, coldness before water and dryness before earth. This is only an analytic approach. The same situation applies to the liver, the spleen, the gall bladder, the heart, the lungs, the head, the legs, the hands, as well as the rest of the organs of the human body. As mentioned above, heat is the product of the constant motion of the celestial bodies in their orbits. However, coldness is the product of the center, the Earth, which is called the center of all orbits. Thus, it possesses the good for the entire world. Coldness is contrary to heat in all aspects, including characteristics, motion and stillness. Heat is the qualitative combining of similar things and dispersing opposite things. On the contrary, coldness combines opposite things and disperses similar things. This is how difference and contradiction become the equal inherent qualities of opposite things. Otherwise, the part will be disrupted.

Thus, in order for you to reach your goal, you need to research these arts and study them. I did not intend to confuse you; on the contrary, I am giving you interesting excerpts from various arts to let you have a clear mind and obtain what the ancient wise obtained and reach their level of prestige.

❧{Chapter Nine}❧

THERE IS A CONSENSUS REGARDING THE IMAGES of the fixed planet groupings and their substantiated effects. Some of these are:

A talisman for repelling a mouse.

Draw this symbol on a plate of red tin plate at the rise of the first phase of $\delta\lambda$. This symbol comprises the planets in the $\delta\lambda$ constellation. Place the plate in the location of the mouse, and consequently, it will run away from its location. This symbol is:

A talisman for repelling mosquitoes.

Draw this symbol on a Sulphur stone at the rise of the second phase of γ . Mosquitoes will not get near where you place the stone. This is the symbol of the group of planets in the ∞ constellation that are capable of repelling mosquitoes. This symbol is:

A talisman for repelling flies.

Draw this symbol on a tin plate at the rise of the third phase of ♀. Place it in the location to be off limits for flies. This symbol is:

A peculiar talisman.

If you want to have a person whom you love to come to you in a hurry, draw the following symbol on a new piece of cloth on the day of ♀ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is the second phase of ∞ with ♀ in it. Burn the piece of cloth from one end and mention the name of the person in question. As a result, he will come quickly to the place of the talisman. This symbol emerges when ♀ is at its peak strength and in this phase. This symbol is:

A talisman for enmity.

If you plan to promote enmity and separation between two persons, you draw this picture on a black tin plate with a black tusk of a dog on the day of ♀ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is in the third phase of ∞ and with ♀ in it. Place this plate in the location of one of them or in their meeting location, and, as a result, they will separate on the worst possible terms. This symbol appears when ♀ is at its peak strength in this phase. This symbol is:

A talisman for vacating a location and preventing its development.

Draw the following symbol with a tusk of a pig on a tin plate on the day of ♀ and in its hour, and while the ascendant is the second phase of ∞ with ♀ in it. Place this plate in the desired location, and, as a result, this location will be afflicted with ♀'s catastrophic influence and will never be developed as long as this symbol is in it. This symbol is:

I have not seen any more symbols in the Persian works regarding this art. In the following chapter, I will explain the solid elements of which planets are composed, as well as their symbols and wonderful effects.

❧{Chapter Ten}❧

ROCKS AND STONES OF PLANETS: ♃: consists of the following rocks: iron, diamond, antimony, pure-black onyx, jet, turquoise, magnet, magnesium, gold, ruby, golden marqashitha and shadhanj.

♄: lead, diamond, sapphire, ruby, gold, crystal and various polished shiny stones.

♆: gold, arsenic, sand-color rocks, diamond, Pharaoh's glass, nacre, polished shiny rocks, shadhanj, emery and ruby.

♇: red brass, lapis azure, pearl, nacre, dahnaj, corals, sand-colored rocks, glass, and pearl.

♈: idramus, emery, emerald, mercury, chrysolite, tin, glass and marble.

♉: silver, silver-colored marqashina, small pearls, marble, lapis azure, onyx and sand-colored rocks.

The symbols of planets as designated by ancient philosophers are as follows:

SATURN

MARS

VENUS

MOON

I took the above symbols of planets from The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, which is also known as al-Katib, from a book written by Apollonius and from The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, translated by Picatrix.

THE SUN

In the book written by Apollonius, the ☉ is symbolized by a woman standing in a carriage pulled by four horses. She holds a mirror in her right hand and a club in her left hand held close to her chest. Her head is shining. In The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, the ☉ is symbolized by a standing man stretching his hand as if he wants to shake the hand of a person next to him. He holds a shield in his left hand. Also there is a picture of a dragon under his feet. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, by Quraytun, translated by Picatrix, the ☉ is symbolized by a king sitting on a chair with a crown on his head, a picture of a crow between his hands and a dragon under his feet. Others portray the ☉ in the celestial orbits as a crowned man standing on a carriage pulled by four horses. He holds a mirror in his right hand and a shield in his left hand. His clothes are all yellow.

Every one of these pictures has certain effects and actions in talismans. Afterwards, we will explain them adequately for you.

VENUS

Apollonius symbolizes ♀ by a woman standing with an apple in her right hand and holding a comb that looks like a board with various pictures on it, in her left hand. In The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury, ♀ is symbolized by a human body with the head of a bird and legs of an eagle. It was portrayed by others³⁵ as a naked woman followed by a child with a necklace around his neck. ♂ is in front of her. Others delineate it as a woman with long hair riding on a stag, holding an apple in her right hand and a bouquet in her left hand. Her dress is pure white.

MERCURY, ALSO KNOWN AS AL-KATIB

³⁵The German edition of Picatrix cites these 'others' as Ptolemy.

the crown of a rooster. Also, two of these pictures are on the top of his feet. Others portray it in its orbit as a crowned man riding on a peacock, holds a rod in his right hand and a plate in his left hand. His clothes are colorful.

THE MOON

The ☾ is symbolized in The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury as a beautiful woman with a dragon belt around her waist, two snakes on her head, has two horns in the form of snakes, has snake bracelets around her wrists and two dragons each with seven heads, on her head. Apollonius, the philosopher, portrays the ☾ as a woman standing on two oxen, the head of one of them is facing the tail of the other. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, the ☾ is depicted as a man with a head of a bird leaning on a cane and holding a tree between his hands. Others symbolize the ☾ as a crowned man standing on a carriage pulled by four oxen, holding a scepter in his right hand and a mirror in his left hand. His clothes are white and green.

SATURN

The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans explains that ♄ has the image of a man whose face is a face of a crow and his legs are similar to the legs of a camel. He is sitting on a chair holding a cane in his right hand and a lance in his left hand. Apollonius says in his book that ♄ is a man standing on a mimbar. The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury states that it has the image of a standing man, holding a whale in his hands over his head and standing on a statue of a lizard. Others mention that ♄ is depicted in its orbit as a man standing on a snake, holding a sickle in his right hand and a cane in his left hand. The color of his attire is gray and black.

JUPITER

Apollonius states that ♃ has the image of a man wearing a rope wrapped around him. He is sitting on an eagle, putting his legs on its shoulders and holding the rest of the rope in his right hand. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, ♃ is portrayed as a man with the face of a lion, the legs of a bird and a dragon with faces under his feet. He is holding an arrow in his right hand stabbing the head of the dragon. In The Benefits of Rocks, it is delineated as a man wearing a garment, riding on a dragon and holding either a rod or a spear in his hand. Others symbolize ♃, in its orbit, as a man riding on an eagle. He holds a scroll in his right hand and a nut in his left hand. His apparel is pure yellow.

MARS

Apollonius states that it has an image of a man wearing a helmet and a shield, and fastening a sword to his belt. In The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, it is symbolized as a crowned man holding a sword with carved figures on it. The Benefits of the Rocks of Mercury states that it has the image of a standing naked man and a statue of a virgin woman representing ♀ standing at his right-hand side with her hair braided behind her. ♂ is putting his right hand around her neck and his left hand on her chest and at the same time looking at her face. He claims in his book that this image has many effects. Others state that ♂ has the image of a man riding on a lion with a sword in his right hand and a human head in his left hand. His attire is made of iron and ifrind.

These are the images that have been presented by the ancient philosophers. For every one of these images, there are special actions and effects. I will cite in the following treatises some of the texts of what they wrote in this field.

Images on Stones

The images of the ☉ carved on a pure red segment of onyx portray the ☉ as a king sitting on a chair with a crown on his head, holding the figure of a crow in his hands and under his feet are the following letters:

The holder of this segment will triumph over all kings. This was presented in The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans by Picatrix. He claims that the ☉ will be at its highest rank.

Some of these figures are presented in Aristotle's advice to Alexander. He says that whoever carves an image of a lion, with this figure:

on a segment of onyx, while the ascendant is δ and the Θ , cleared of all nuhus, is in it, will never be defeated. Moreover, he will fulfill all his wishes and will never have frightening dreams. Additionally, if you carve a picture of a woman sitting on a carriage pulled by four horses with a mirror in her right hand, a whip in her left hand, seven candles on her head and a pool inside the onyx stone, if you carve these images when the Θ is at its highest rank, you will gain the respect and fear of everyone you come across or meet.

Moreover, when you carve on a shathina stone this figure of the Q:

உயிர் உயிர்

at the first phase of $\delta 1$ and hold onto it, you will be cured from epilepsy when the $\mathfrak{D}$ is at crescent.

Hermes mentions in his book, Al-Haditus, that whoever carves on a stone called samalinun - a yellow stone with black spots, green marks, light and shiny - a figure of a fly in the hour of the ☉ and its ascendant and holds onto it, he will not be burned by fire even if he gets into it. He claims that this stone is available in Persia.

To repel snakes, carve on a stone an image of a snake in the hour of 4 when it is 7° from ☌, when 3 is 7° from ☌, the 2 is 7° from ☍, when 4 is 2° from ♄, and when the Tail is 10° from ♄. On the back of the snake are the following symbols:

On both sides of the snake are the following symbols:

Mount this stone on a golden ring and wear it and no beetles or snakes will ever get near you.

For repelling beetles, carve in a stone of myelocyte a picture of a beetle in the hour of the Θ when it is at the peak of its prestige, and while $\eth$ is 17° from $\mathfrak{W}$, $\mathfrak{V}$ is 28° from 69 , and σ is in the last degree from Ω . Draw on it the following letters:

كلا كلالا لي لاك وهد

Mount the stone on a golden ring and no beetles will ever appear in the location of the ring and will never be seen by the person wearing it.

VENUS

On a stone of onyx, carve an image of a woman holding in her right hand an apple and a comb that looks like a board in her left hand. Draw the following numbers:

٨٥١٥٨٥

The image consists of a human body, the face of a bird and the legs of an eagle. The holder of this stone will make all people love him. Carve this image in the hour of ♀ and at its peak prestige. Additionally, carve on a stone of malachite a picture of a woman holding an apple in her right hand and a comb in her left hand. This is to be done in the second phase of ♀. The holder of this stone will be happy and in good mood as long as he holds onto it.

Another action of ♀ in its hour is to carve a picture of naked maid in a stone of lapis azure near the picture of a man wearing a chain necklace around his neck. A young child is behind her holding a sword. The holder of this stone will be attracted and loved by women.

Moreover, if you carve on a stone of lapis azure, in the hour and at the peak prestige of ♀, a picture of a standing woman holding an apple in her hand and inside the stone a female sheep, you will have a successful and growing herd.

In Quraytun's book on talismans, he states that when you carve on a stone of quartz a picture of a snake with a scorpion on its back in the early morning of Monday and in the hour and honor of ♀, you will not be bitten by a snake and you will be cured from its bite if it is placed in moisture and swallowed.

Furthermore, when the following symbols:

are carved on a stone of quartz in the hour of ♀, the holder of this stone will be loved by children, close to their hearts and cannot tolerate staying away from him once they become associated with him.

He who carves on a stone of quartz an image of a standing woman with her hair braided in two braids behind her back and with two children with wings in her lab in the hour and honor of ♀, his trips, whether distant or close, will be facilitated and will proceed without any trouble as long as he holds onto it.

On a stone of crystal, carve a picture of three persons holding a meeting. The holder of this stone will experience more success in his trade than what he expects.

A picture of a mouse between two cats is carved in the hour of ♀ and, in its ascendant, is carved on a piece of coral. In this picture ♀ functions to repel mice from the place of the coral. Also, when a picture of an upside down fly is carved on a granite stone in the hour of ♀'s ascendant, the holder of the stone will be off limits to flies.

Carve the picture of a leech on a stone of dahnaj and a picture of two leeches with the head of one facing the tail of the other. This picture will remove leeches from the place of the stone. This picture is to be drawn and carved when ♀ is in its hour and ascendant. Be aware of that.

Additionally, a love talisman is made by carving a picture of a well-preserved woman with a standing semi-idol in front of her on a white stone. This is to be done in the hour when ♀ is ascendant.

Moreover, carve a picture of a woman with a wrapped rope in her hand. Her body is striped with fuzz-like stripes. She holds in the other hand a fruit that looks like an apple with which she stamps wax to cure children from their disease and all other ailments. This is to be done in the hour when ♀ is ascendant.

Furthermore, carve a picture of the head of a zebra with the head of a fly on it on a granite stone. The head should be a little oversized. This ought to be done in the hour and ♀ is ascendant. The stone is used to stamp wax for increased production. This has been successfully experimented in labyrinths.

MERCURY

The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans states that for releasing prisoners and the like, carve on a stone of crystallite the picture of a man sitting on a chair with a rooster on his head. His legs are those of an eagle, a torch in his hand and the following symbols are under his feet:

This is to be done in the hour and honor of ♀.

Also, carve on a stone of emerald the following symbols:

-in its hour and ascendant. The holder of this stone will have full command of authors, accountants and laborers.

On a stone known as mantis, carve the image of a man sitting on a distaffed chair with a lead in his right hand writing on a scroll in his left hand. This is to be done in the hour of ♀ and in its honor. If the holder of this stone is a writer and hopes to achieve a favor from a ruler, he will be employed by that ruler, entrusted with his affairs and favored in every aspect.

It is stated in the book The Interpretation Spiritual of Talismans, that if you carve a picture of a frog on an emerald stone in the hour when ♀ is ascendant and hold onto it, no one can harm you or talk badly about you. On the contrary, your actions will always be commended.

Additionally, when the picture of a mouse or a jerboa is carved on an emerald stone of emerald in the hour when ♀ is ascendant, no one will steal anything from the person who will make profits in his trade.

It is stated in the same book that the person who carves on an emerald stone a picture of a lion and the head of a lion and writes underneath it a thousand and above it the letter "d" in the hour when ♀ is ascendant, will be loved by all people and saved from the atrocities of kings.

Other sources state that when a picture of a scorpion is carved on a crystallite stone in the when it is ascendant and is worn by a pregnant woman, her child will be saved from all diseases.

Also, if the figure of a hand holding a scale is carved on a glass stone in the hour when it is ascendant, this stone will cure all types of fever. It has been tested and proven to be effective.

THE SUN

An image of a scorpion is carved on a stone of bezoar when the ☽ is in ♈ and in its hour, and while ♈ is in one of the poles of the ascendant. Mount the stone on a golden ring and stamp it on a chewed glue of kundur while the ☽ is in ♈. If a person is bitten by a scorpion, he will be immediately cured when he drinks a dose of kundur. This has been tested as we mentioned before.

Besides, if the following symbols:

☿ 0 3 2 7 4 1 2

-are carved on a stone of lapis azure in the hour when the ☽ is ascendant and the stone is subsequently submerged in a type of beverage which is consumed by two persons, they will become friends although they may have been adversary.

Picatrix states in his book, The Interpretation of Spiritual Talismans, that if you carve the picture of the head of a bird leaning on a cane with a picture of a daisy tree between its hands on a maha (pearl?) stone in the hour when the ☽ is ascendant and in its honor, you will not get weary during your trip no matter how long the distance may be as long as you wear it.

Carve on a crystal stone the picture of a woman with an upright strand in her hair, two oxen under her, one of her legs on the head of one ox and the second leg on the head of the other. Also carve inside the stone the picture of a standing woman with a crown on her head, a club in her right hand as well as the following symbols:

☿ I ☽

Stamp this stone in wax and place it in a place familiar to pigeons and as a result they will multiply in great numbers. Carving is done when it is ascendant and the hour as mentioned above.

Moreover, carve on a stone of malachite the picture of a fly in the hour of the ☽ when it is 21° from ♈, 2° from ♎ and when ☽ is in the first ° from ♎. Also carve the following symbols on the body of the fly:

☿ 5 4 3

-and around it:

☿ 9 1 1 X 1 5

Mount the stone on a ring in the hour when the ☽ is ascendant. Place under the stone a piece of the skin of a snake. No flies whatsoever will enter the location or house where this stone is placed.

Additionally, when the picture of a lion with a human face and this symbol:

on its head is carved on a stone of lapis azure in its hour while ascendant, the stone will prove to be helpful for children in whatever circumstance they may be.

Furthermore, if you carve this symbol:

on a stone of bezoar in its hour and in the first phase of 69, it will be particularly useful in repelling scorpions.

Additionally, if the picture of a flea surrounded by these letters:

-is drawn on a stone that has the color of an ambergris, being an extremely strong repellent of fleas, in the hour and ascendant of the 2, no flies will appear at all in the location of the stone. This effect will also be achieved in the hour of drawing and its ascendant.

Also, to repel snakes, carve the picture of a snake with this symbol:

-on its head on a stone of lapis azure or green dahnaj in its hour and ascendant. This drawing is specialized to drive away snakes and strengthen the picture and the relationship.

Besides, carve this figure:

-on an emerald stone and stamp it in kundur in its hour and ascendant. Swallow whatever is chewed from it and this will promote memorization and intelligence and diminish forgetfulness.

SATURN

Carve on a stone of bezoar in its hour and ascendant, and when it is 21° from 2, the picture of a man with a wide forehead, long face, frowning, riding on a plow, two oxen in front, wearing a necklace around his neck with the head of a man and the head of a fox. The man is yearning for mercy. This picture is very effective in maintaining and promoting farms, cows, green crops and nursery plants. It is also effective in wells, rivers, stabilizing buildings, resisting aggressors, forgoing rancor, driving worries away and saves whoever wears it from fearing other people.

To plant animosity and discord between lovers, carve this drawing:

-on a stone of diamond and stamp it in sediment in the hour and ascendant of ♄. It is to be placed in a location frequented by them and it should be secured and not be touched or approached by its maker except at the time of stamping.

Also, if you carve the picture of a standing man on a chair that looks like a mimbar with a semi-twisted turban on his head and a sickle in his hand and if you carve this picture on a stone of turquoise in its hour and ascendant, the holder of the stone will live long and have a healthy life, Allah willing.

Carve a picture of a wolf in an amber stone in its hour and when ♄ is the ascendant at 23° from ♏. ♄ is to be at 2° from ♏ and ♄ at 29° from ♏. Draw these symbols:

-around it and mount it on a silver ring. Flies will fly away from the location of the person wearing it and they will not approach him or the people around him. They will never appear in his location or enter his area at all.

To drive away locusts, carve on a jet stone the picture of a locust in its hour and ascendant while it is at 2° from ♄, ♄ is 5° from ♏, and the ♄ is 3° from ♄. The talisman is effective at these degrees. Draw these symbols:

-around the locust. Place the skin of a rabbit under the talisman and no locust will enter where the talisman or its holder is located.

You may also carve in any of its stones the picture of a rabbit in the ascendant of ♏ and while ♄ is 13° from ♏ and the ♄ 5° from ♄. Draw around it these symbols:

-then mount the stone on a ring and wear it. The woman with whom you have a sexual relationship will not get pregnant from you.

JUPITER

Carve the picture of a man sitting on a chair with four legs and was a crown on his head. Each one of the chair's legs is lying on the neck of a standing man. All of these men have wings. The man on the chair is raising his hand praying to Allah. Carve this picture on a white onyx stone in its hour, when it is ascendant and in its honor. The person who wears this ring will become increasingly rich and prestigious. He will accumulate wealth, bring family members together, have many children and take good care of them, make the best possible decisions and every legal task he initiates will be well done and will have a good conclusions. It also wards off the plots of others, brings success in communication and saves the person wearing it from assassination.

On a stone of hyacinth draw the picture of a man with the face of a lion and the legs of a bird. A dragon with a head is under his feet. He holds in his right hand a spear stabbing the head of the dragon. This is to be done in its hour and in the first phase of the house of its honor. All the enemies of the person wearing this stone will be removed and fear and awe will be implanted in their hearts.

Also, carve the picture of a handsome man with a ringlet riding on an eagle on a stone of crystal. This is to be done in the hour of ♀ and in its honor. This stone makes you favored by judges and people specialized in religious laws.

Additionally, carve the picture of an eagle on the stone known to make giving birth easy in its hour and when the ascendant is the first phase of Sagittarius. If the person wearing this picture goes to where the birds are located for the purpose of catching them, they will fly down and surround him and will not leave him. He will also be accepted and loved by people. This stone is somewhat red, and there is a stone inside it which is loose and moves when it is moved. It secretes white liquid if it is rubbed. The characteristic of this stone is that if a woman wears it, she will never get pregnant.

Hermes mentions that this stone is one of the blessed stones. If you draw the picture of a fox on the day of ♀ and in its hour while the ♀ is looking at it and ♀ is in ♀, mankind and jinn will be afraid of you, as long as you hold onto it.

Moreover, if the picture of a nightingale is carved on this stone in its hour and at the home of its honor, and if this stone is washed and you drink from this water, you will be able to see the spirits and use them in any way you like. This information was also presented by Hermes.

MARS

On a magnet carve the picture of a man riding on a lion and raising a sword in his right hand and the head of a man in his left hand. This is to be done in its hour and in the ascendant of its home and while it is in the second phase of ♀. Its benevolent effects are miraculous, but its cruel effects are moreso.

Carve the picture of a lion with a man standing between his hands on one of the stones of ♂. The man is wearing a shield and girded with a sword, holding a sword in his right hand and the head of a man in his left hand. This is to be done in its hour and house. Whoever wears this picture will dominate and be feared by anyone who sees him or become associated with him. I saw this picture carved on a garnet stone by one of those who deals in this art.

Additionally, if a picture of a lion with this symbol:

-between his hands is carved on a stone of garnet its ascendant and hour, it will stop the bleeding from any organ of the person holding this stone. Be aware of that.

Other planet talismans with miraculous effects of varying limitations can be made. One of these is when a talisman is made in the hour of the ♂ and in the first phase of ♂. This talisman removes the evil inclinations, and calms down the pain of liver, stomach and other diseases that are difficult to treat.

Also, when a talisman is made in the hour of the ♀ and in the first phase of ♀, it will promote the growth of seed plants and various types of trees.

Furthermore, if a talisman is made in the hour of ♀ and in the third phase of ♀, it will help a person to recover from incontinence of urine and stop women's bleeding.

As for ♂, when a talisman is made in its hour and in the third phase of ♀, it will instill courage in a coward, breaks off the anger of a ruler, alleviates the damage caused by thieves, predatory animals, wolves and every other harmful creature.

Moreover, a talisman made in the hour of ♀ and when it is in the first phase of ♀ helps women recover from uterus ailments, soothes the evil spirit suffering from melancholy, brings joy to the heart and promotes sexuality. A talisman made in the first phase of ♀ brings love and promotes distinguished deeds.

Make a talisman in the hour of ♀ when it is in the first phase of ♀ to elevate intelligence, improve thinking, motivate seeking knowledge, promote prestige among people and so forth.

❧{Chapter Eleven}❧

HAD WE INCLUDED ALL OF WHAT THE ANCIENT philosophers, who specialized in this art, wrote on this subject, the book would have been very long. The purpose is to limit the text to what is essential for the seeker of knowledge and researcher in this field. This is to let you think for yourself and when the vision of this art becomes clear to you, do not disclose it to others. You should also know that only he who does not make a living out of this art, enjoys dealing with this art. Accordingly, such a person only deals with and reflects on this art to become distinguished. Many people do not appreciate the time it takes the astrologer to study and research this science. Since we know that this time is beyond the limits of the celestial sphere itself, how can we expect it to be within the capabilities of the astrologer? If he reaches the right conclusion, he will not be commended, but, if he fails, he will be insulted. Therefore, you should not reveal this secret to the public. The wise achieved these spiritual arts only through hard work, long tiring effort and sharp intellect. It is through sharp intellect that the wise may come across the right conclusion among the various and contradicting views and through the strong potential to correct it. This is an efficient process of analysis of which the right view is a type of reflection. In conclusion, this is the speaking of the clear mind which gives the imagination skill, clarity of approach and swift acceptance of what it conceives and promotes quick interaction with the sought result. Thus, the principle is that the strong acting intellect will have a weak acted upon result. For example, the strong interacts with difficulty and the weak interacts easily.

By the same token, intelligence is the result of the efficiency of the intellect's expeditious perception of things without time or in a non-waiting time; it is the ability of the mind to make swift and thorough examination as well as its efficient perceptibility to accept the sought object without time. This is derived from the intelligence of fire which acts quickly and the intelligence of the ☉ which penetrates air swiftly and spreads through it due to its clarity and fineness. This is similar to the intelligent who becomes intelligent due to the clarity and fineness of his mind. Consequently, he can imagine the sought objective and sense it and realize it quickly by comprehending, through revelation, the sought objective that the wise can sense and realize. Be aware of that.

Going back to our subject, I would like to add that each constellation has three phases. Each phase has images, statues, and similarities. Additionally, they are divided among planets according to their height in their orbits. Thus, if the location happens to be at the lowest planet, it reverts to the higher and more distinguished planet. Moreover, they have characteristics and configurations comparable to the characteristics and configurations of their masters. As a result, constellations concur with their masters on the same actions as exhibited by their essence whether this concurrence is on agreement or disagreement.

☿ According to the leader of this science, the image of a large and distinguished black mad man with red eyes and an ax in his hand, a white rope wrapped around his waist, emerges in the first phase of ☿. This is the phase of ☿; it is a phase of cruelty, aggression, haughtiness and insolence. This phase is complete in its essence, character and instinct. The image of a woman wearing a red rope and a dress with one leg, probing diligently for dresses, jewelry and children appears in the third phase of ☿. It is the phase of ♀ which denotes femininity, delicateness, cleanliness, kindness, entertainment and beauty. Furthermore, the image of an angry reddish man with red hair, unyielding look, holding a sword and a wooden bracelet in his hand, wearing red clothes, skillful in iron fabrication and wants to do good but cannot, is the phase for ♀.

♂ The image of a woman with curly hair and wearing fiery clothes with a son whose clothes look like smothering embers appears in the first phase of ♂. This is the phase of ♂. It is complete by nature and it is a phase of planting and cultivation, building and development, ethics and wisdom, as well as dividing land and engineering.

In the second phase of ♂, we find the image of a man whose body and face look like those of a camel, his nails similar to the hoof of a cow, wearing an old garment, interested in developing land and buildings, and using cows for planting and cultivation. This is the phase of the ♂; it is a phase of ability, honor, vice-regency, destruction and oppression of constituency.

The image of a red man with extremely white teeth appearing between his lips, with the body of an elephant and with long legs emerges in the third phase of ♂. Also, the image of a horse, a dog and a resting calf appears in the same phase. This is the phase of ♀ and a phase of humiliation, servitude, torture, cruelty and disgrace.

II The image of a beautiful woman, experienced in dressmaking, with two calf and two horses emerges in the first phase of II. This phase is also for 4 and it is complete in nature. It indicates recording and accountability, giving and taking, knowledge itself and seeking knowledge.

Then there is the image of a man with the face of a griffin tied with a turban, wearing a shield made of lead and armed with a helmet of iron on his head. On the top of the helmet is a crown made of brocade. He is holding a bow and an arrow in his hand. This image appears in the second phase of Π . This is the phase of σ and it indicates trudging, motivation, speed, violence and unprofitable haste.

The image of a man wearing a shield and carrying a bow and an arrow in its case emerges in its third phase. This is the phase of the Θ , and it indicates overlooking and missing what should be noticed, fun and entertainment and unemployment.

69 Consider the image of a man with curved face and fingers that looks like a horse. He has white feet and tree leaves are attached to his body. This image appears in the first phase of ζ . It is the phase of η , and it indicates wittiness, mindfulness, friendliness, delicacy and cleanliness.

There is also the image of a beautiful woman longing for pleasure and singing, wearing a wreath made of green basil on her head and holding a rod of nenuphar³⁶ in her hand is longing for pleasure and singing. This image appears in its second phase. This is the phase of ψ , and it denotes entertainment and enjoyment of music as well as grace, honor and wealth.

The image of a man holding a snake in his hand, having a foot similar to the foot of a turtle, and possessing golden jewelry appears in the third phase of ζ . This phase is for the $\mathfrak{D}$; it is a phase of tricks and driving away by force, achieving objectives by fighting, struggle and repulsion.

³⁶A water-lily.-OED

8 The image of a man wearing dirty clothes along with the image of a cavalryman who looks like a wolf and a dog is looking to the north, appear in the first phase of δ . This image is for $\mathfrak{F}$, and it is complete in form and nature. This is a phase of strength, rescue, stamina, action, attack and triumph.

The image of a man wearing a wreath made of white basil on his head and holding an arrow in his hand appears in its second phase. This is the phase of λ , and it indicates heresy, ignorance, perplexity, idleness of idiots, pulling out swords and fighting.

The image of an ugly man who looks like a Negro with a fruit and a piece of meat in his mouth and a kettle in his hand appears in its third phase. This is the phase of σ , and it indicates friendliness, rewards, affection, participation and harmony.

mp The image of a virgin maid wearing an old dress and holding a pomegranate in her hand appears in the first phase of Π . This is the phase of the Θ , and it denotes plowing and planting, grass and plants, buildings and wealth, and righteousness.

The image of a man with a nice color wearing clothes made of animal skins and another made of iron appears in its second phase. This phase is also for η . It is a phase depicting working, making a living, saving, stinginess, niggardliness and depriving others of their rights.

The image of a large white man wrapped in a rope and a woman holding in her hand a black fawn, which is offered by the Magus for sacrifice, appears in its third phase. This is also the phase of ψ ; it is a phase of old age, weakness, immobility, chronic illness, uprooting trees and destruction of buildings.

Ω The image of a man holding an arrow in his right hand and the picture of an upside down bird in the left hand appears in the first phase of Ω . This is the phase of the $\mathfrak{D}$; it is a phase of legitimacy, justice, fairness, protection of the weak and the needy from tyrants and people in powerful positions. This phase is complete in form and nature.

The image of a black man leading a wedding emerges in its second phase. This is the phase of ♄. It is a phase of relaxation, wealth, good living, security, peacefulness and easy living.

The image of a man riding on a donkey and a predatory animal in front of him appears in its third phase. This is the phase of ♃ and it indicates sinfulness, impudence, sodomy, singing, entertainment and enjoyment.

ℳ The image of a man with an arrow in his right hand and an arrow in his left hand appears in the first phase of ℳ. This is also the phase of ♂ which is complete in form and nature. It indicates honor and glory, cunning and triumph.

The image of a man riding on a camel and holding a Scorpion in his hand appears in its second phase. This is the phase of the ☿, and it indicates disgrace, scandal, tragedy and anger.

The image of a horse and a snake appears in its third phase, and this is the phase of ♀. It indicates sinfulness, impudence and disdainful forced marital sex achieved by subduing and anger.

↗ Consider the picture of three bodies; the first is red, the second is white, and the third is red. This image appears in the first phase of Sagittarius. It is also the phase of ♃, and it indicates valor, activity, pleasure, patience and chivalry.

The image of a man driving cows, a monkey and a wolf in front of him appears in its second phase. This is the phase of the ☿, and it indicates fright, loss, weeping, fear, sadness and violence.

The image of a man wearing a cap of gold on his head killing another man appears in its third phase. This phase is for ♄, and it indicates taking risks, unwarranted involvement, exerting efforts in disgraceful, shameful and harmful actions.

The image of a man holding a cane in his right hand and a hoop in his left hand appears in the first phase of ♄. This is also the phase of ♄, and it indicates pleasure, activity, going back and forth, incapability, weakness and humility.

The image of a man with a monkey in front of him appears in its second phase and this is the phase of ♂. This phase delineates seeking what is known but unobtainable.

The image of a man opening and closing a Qur'an, with the tail of a fish before him, appears in its third phase. This is also the phase of ♄ and it indicates intensity, desire, monopoly, accumulation and greed.

W The image of a beheaded man holding a peacock appears in the first phase of W, and this is the phase of ♀. It is the phase of hard and tiring work, poverty, need, few means of subsistence or lack of it.

The image of a tenacious man who looks like a powerful king emerges in its second phase, and this is the phase of ♃. It portrays beauty, nobility, goodness, complete form, complete religion and manhood.

The figure of a beheaded man with an old woman in front of him appears in its third phase, which is the phase of the ☿. This phase denotes ugliness, bad reputation and a scandal.

X The picture of a man with two bodies pointing with his fingers appears in the first phase of X, and this is the phase of ♄. It demonstrates little attacking with violence, weakness, extensive traveling, suffering, tiring, looking for wealth and earning a living.

The image of an upside down man holding food in his hand appears in its second phase, and this is also the phase of ♄. It indicates dignity, inspiration and the capability of dealing with matters of great importance.

The image of an evil man with a woman in front of him who has a donkey above her and a bird in her hand appears in the its third phase. This phase is for σ . It indicates marital sexual relations, hugging, lust, intimacy, sensuous desire and a tendency to have leisure and relaxation time.

As a researcher, you ought to know that these images are not known except to an experienced artist who has the vision of extracting vague matters. In other words, a planet breaks a planet, a boundary breaks a phase and characteristics intermingle such as water putting out fire, fire removing the coldness from water, water moisturizing dry earth and earth drying the moisture of water. When many characteristics exist and interact, the stronger will prevail over the bigger and when they are in equilibrium and balanced, their actions are equal and even. You may also know that the $\odot$ becomes stronger by the characteristics of σ , and σ gets stronger by the characteristics of the $\odot$. Be aware that excessive characteristics are damaging and harmful to their effects and actions. Sickness occur after perfect health and reaping occurs after crops become ripe. A large essence opposes the weak by its weight and strength and the small affects the large by its delicacy and kindness. For instance, a snake kills large animals and in the same manner small and tiny ants in large numbers can kill strong snakes. You ought to reflect on these signs.

Regarding these phases, you need to know what actions resemble a planet and what actions resemble the phase of a constellation. Accordingly, draw the above-mentioned images of bodies that resemble the particular planet when it is in that phase and it will subsequently produce the aforementioned effects and actions and expose them to the world of being and corruption. If it is possible to have the $\odot$ rise in the hour of that planet or intermingle with it, its effect will be greater. As we mentioned above, avoid having the $\odot$ in the hour of or intermingle with a coercive planet in order to maintain that effect.

❖Chapter Twelve❖

THE BASIC WORKS OF TALISMANS by Indian philosophers relied on durayjanat.³⁷ Every ascendant is divided into three equal parts, and each part is equal to 10° and every one of those is called a durayjan. A durayjan is related to one of the seven planets. Accordingly, we say that a particular planet is the master of the durayjan, which means to relate the first section of the ascendant constellation to the master of the ascendant and the second part to the master of al-Khamis, the third section to the master of al-Tasi, the ascendant, al-Khamis and al-Tasi. These three sections are always in groups of threes.

War talismans are made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♂. The possessor of this talisman will be triumphant, sheep milk will be clotted and its butter will be spoiled.

Talismans for rulers and sultans are made in the second durayjan of ♀ for the ♂. These talismans protect against their harm.

Talismans for dealing with judges and jurisprudence, reconciling differences between them, and uniting them are made in the third durayjan of ♀ for ♀.

Talismans for reconciling differences between men and women

³⁷Plural form of durayjan; diminutive expression of degrees.

- are made in the first durayjan of ♀.
- Talismans for animosity, impotence and for inflicting conflict, especially between women are made in the second durayjan for ♀.
- Talismans to induce women lose their sexual interest in men and the same for men in women, or to make them ill and to separate them, are made in the third durayjan.
- Talismans tailored to promote someone losing his mind and becoming deranged are made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♀.
- In the second durayjan, a talisman can be made for ♀ to return the absentee and runaway.
- A talisman can be made in the third durayjan for ♀ to spread negative commendations and disclose private secrets of others.
- A talisman can be made in the first durayjan of ♀ for the ♀ to bring rain, and to bring travelers by sea and land home safely.
- In its second durayjan, a talisman is made for ♀ to prevent rain, snow and clouds that come from the sea and to protect against all harmful sea animals.
- In its third durayjan, a talisman is made for ♀ to ensure the safety of travelers by sea.
- In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for the ♀ to have a ruler to raise one's rank, as well as to bring predatory animals to any intended location.
- A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to keep wild and predatory animals away from cattle and herds.
- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to make wild and predatory animals attack any intended town.
- In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for ♀ for the welfare of writers and to promote what they have on hand.
- In the second durayjan, a talisman is made for ♀ to harm writers.

- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to reconcile differences between spouses and promote love between them.
- In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for ♀ to promote excitement, love and attraction.
- A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to create attraction as well.
- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to return a runaway from wherever he may be.
- In the first durayjan of ♀, a talisman is made for ♀ to cause scorpions, insects, birds and the like to attack.
- A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to prevent rain, scorpions and other insects, birds and the like.
- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for the ♀ to prevent rain and the harmful effects of the sea.
- A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♀ to bring about love and harmony.
- A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ create excitement and bring shame and disgrace.
- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for the ♀ to gain the sympathy of kings against judges, jurisprudence and prominent people.
- A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ♀ for ♀ for hunting and for providing a superior quality of goat milk.
- A talisman is made in its second durayjan for ♀ to obtain a good quality of all milk, and for accumulating and multiplying bees and birds.
- A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to destroy what has been mended by the durayjan planet.
- A talisman in the first durayjan of ♀ is made for ♀ to gain the love of sheikhs, slaves and agents. Also, a talisman can be made in the same durayjan to bring out and manage treasures.
- A talisman is made in the second durayjan for ♀ to promote love between children and youngsters.

A talisman is made in the third durayjan for ♀ to promote love and attraction to women especially to each other.

A talisman is made in the first durayjan of ♂ for ♀ to ensure safety in traveling by sea as well as for fishing in the sea.

A talisman is made in the second durayjan for the ♀ to produce healthy crops, induce rain and attract whales.

A talisman is made in third durayjan for ♂ to promote favorable conditions for traveling by land. Other talismans are made to attract hunting animals.

These are the durayjanat which are the backbone of their works. They claim that these actions will not be complete except by truthful thinking and sound intention. Moreover, their leader suggests that attracting the force of planets can only be achieved by truthful thinking, since the high forces are but images of the low forces. The relationship of the low forces to them are like a substance, which is connected to them and thus they attract each other because their body essence is the same and their spiritual essence is also the same. Some of their Brahmins believe that forces are a kind creation of Allah. They are created to become a lesson and a source of mercy for them.

In this regard, they developed a highly sophisticated encyclopedia which represented the peak of their thinking and the ultimate truth it reflected. In order to live up to the status of great law makers, become leaders and saints, and achieve honor, they refined and cleansed themselves from all sins. They started this purification in the first hour of Sunday which is the hour of the ☉ and its day, and then they fast for forty days during which they abstained from eating meat because they do not see any wrong-doing committed by animals. They only ate what grows on land such as plants, vegetation and grains. Additionally, they washed themselves everyday in the hours of the ☉ and the ☾. Some of them washed seven times a day in the hour of planets. They observed the hours and washed at the beginning of each hour when the planets are in su'ud state. Moreover, their cleansing in the hours of the ☉ and the ☾ will add to their purification in the hours of the planets and that will, in turn, enhance their sanctification. At the same time, they start to reduce the amount of food they eat until the last day, it becomes one fourth of one tenth of the amount they ate on the first day. In the meantime and during their leisure times, they take the medicines they made for themselves as a substitute for food and water. As they do that, they develop talents, good memory and comprehension, astuteness and sharp intellect. Moreover, they will be attached less to earthly matters and become more inclined to transcend to the world of enlightenment thereby shying away from lust and sinful pleasures. At this point, they will be able to attract heavenly powers, make miracles and achieve their wishes. Additionally, they will recognize the predestined roles and the reality of their being in these roles, what has been pre-ordained for them and what is left for them to affect. This is their origin of enlightenment, and their guidance to this enlightenment is derived from their first holy text, Buddha's Book, which is considered the essence of their secrets and which no one is allowed to review. At the beginning of Buddha's Book, you see the images of the orbits of the celestial sphere, which consist of the enlightened souls. These souls are constantly engaged in worshipping the Ultimate Light. They are represented by drawings from the four individual elements which will be complete as long as the orbits of the celestial sphere are connected to knowledge. For this reason, Buddha's Book is viewed as the messenger that provides the light beams which connect the low forces to the Ultimate Light. At this juncture, they become cognizant of the nature of the mind, select the image that they like best, make all the laws and subsequently, the spirits of planets will obey them. With some of their secrets in this book, they define the realities of things. Furthermore, they identify the Creator as the cause of all beings and they believe that the things they do will provide them with a means to reach Him and unite with His Light. We have mentioned this as a reference to their basic beliefs and actions and what their law-makers adhere to. This is the text of what this man says:

"If we cover all the strange things they have, this book will be too long. One of these is 'the head' which a generation of their clergy believe in. They set it next to the dragon's head. Then they pick a hairy, bluish, black-eyed man with connected eyebrows. They lure him with things he likes until they get him into the house of temples, and then he is undressed and placed in a basin full of sesame oil that covers him up to his neck. They close the basin leaving his head sticking out of the lid of the basin. They nail the cover and seal it with lead leaving the head out while the rest of the body is submerged in the sesame oil. They feed him with a certain amount of dry figs soaked in sesame oil and burn incense next to his nose and face. They do this for forty days without giving him any water. This process will render his bones flexible, his joints loose and his veins will flow abundantly; he becomes as flexible as a candle. At the conclusion of the forty days, they get together and discuss things among themselves. Then they burn incense, grab his head and pull it from the first vertebra. Pulling the head out of the body, his veins will be stretched until they all separate from the first vertebra, thereby leaving the body in the oil. Subsequently, they place it on an arch on a layer of screened ashes of olive and surround him with fluffy cotton. They perfume it with a special incense of theirs, and consequently, it tells them about fluctuation of prices, the overthrow of governments and what takes place in the world. His eyes will remain open and it will remind them if they miss any of their worshipping sacraments to the planets, prevents them from doing certain things and tells them what will happen to everyone personally. If they ask it about knowledge and art, it will be able to answer their questions. Afterwards, they bring out the rest of the body from the basin, extract the liver and slice it, and they will see the signs which they are looking for. The bones of his shoulders and his joints will tell them about what they want, as well. Also, they do not cut their hair, eat or drink except in his name. They became public at the time of al-Muqtadir who ordered their temple to be opened and evacuated. The head was found and buried."

One of their factions assigned colors to orbits of planets by using the colors of substances that accept actions. They say that the color of the orbit of ♄ is dusty red similar to the color of ruby; the color of the orbit of ♃ is dusty white; the color of the orbit of ♀ is yellowish green similar to the color of red gold; the color of the orbit of the ☿ is dusty gold; the color of the orbit of ♁ is reddish yellow; the color of the orbit of ♀ is a mixture of all colors; and the color of the orbit of the ♄ is spotted white.

Furthermore, they assigned phases to planets which indicate the sought actions. They also assigned talismans to these phases by which they can influence actions. Subsequently, they apportioned for every planet three phases with two talismans assigned for every phase. Additionally, they allocated certain colors for the phases. They believe that the red phase is good for serious and incontestable matters and every talisman made in this phase is good for helping someone asking for help. The black phase is for diseases, torture, killing and similar tragedies. The white phase indicate brightness, happiness and light, and talismans made in this phase are good for friendliness, love and so forth. The yellow phase is for controlling speechless animals, as well as for evil actions.

They claim that the first phase of ♄ is black, the second is white and the third phase has the color of smoke and lead. The first phase of ♃ is yellow, the second is white, and the third has the color of smoke and lead. The first phase of ♀ is red, the second is yellow and the third is rosy. The first phase of the ☉ is yellow, the second is pink and the third is golden. The first phase of ♀ is red, the second is gray and the third is rosy. The first phase of the ☽ is white, the second is red and the third is dusty.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ to black out the sight of the intended person so that he will not see anything.

The second talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ to black out the sight of the people so that they will not see you when you walk among them; the only thing they will be able to see is pitch darkness. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♀ to reconcile the differences between two persons and bring harmony and friendship back to them, and it is also made in this phase to introduce a person to a future friend whom he has not yet met. The second talisman is made in the second phase of ♀ to bring back the intended person from a distant location. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♀ to drive away harmful animals. The second talisman is made in the third phase of ♀ to repel flies and fleas from any house or town, so that none of these insects will ever appear in any of these locations.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ to gather bees from any place you want. The second is made in this phase by drawing a picture of a mosquito on lead to repel bees in particular. The first talisman in the second phase of ♀ is made for fishing in seas and rivers, and the second talisman is made in this phase to make fishing impossible in seas and rivers. The first talisman in the third phase of ♀ is made to expel a person from his home and drive him away from his children, and the second talisman in this phase is made to repel mice from where the person may be staying.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♂ to triumph in wars and fencing, and the second talisman in this phase is made to kill any enemy of yours as quickly as possible. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♂ to bring sickness to any of your enemies, and the second is made to bring fever and derangement to whomever you like. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♂ to render men impotent whereby they will not be able to have any intimate relations with women as well as to inhibit the relationship of women with men. The second talisman is made in this phase to create a schism between two lovers so that they will separate forever.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of the ☉ to gain the favorable treatment and sympathy of emirs and rulers, and to have close relations with them. The second talisman in this phase is made to repel the assault of kings, despots and rulers, and to tie their tongues up. The first talisman is made in the second phase of the ☉ to ward off severe and harmful cold from any designated location. The second talisman is made to drive away birds from any location you like. The first talisman of the third phase of the ☉ is made to bleed a woman and a man until the one you choose is doomed in a short period of time. The second talisman in this phase is made to make a quern³⁸ fail to grind.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ for bringing any desired woman to you, and the second is made for marrying any desired daughter of prominent people. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♀ to gain the favorable treatment of despots and rulers and acquire their sympathy so that they will not tolerate estrangement from you. The second talisman is made in this phase to tie up the tongues of whomsoever you choose from kings and rulers so that they will not be able to talk badly about any person who they intend to harm as long as the talisman is secured. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♀ in order for a woman to become subordinate to a man, and the second talisman is made in this phase in order to become subordinate to a woman.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of ♀ for learning wisdom and philosophy and every fine art such as poetry and singing. The second talisman is made in this phase to learn the science of stars in particular. The first talisman is made in the second phase of ♀ to bring children to any selected location. The second talisman of the second phase is made for a man to regain the affection and friendliness of children who dislike him. The first talisman is made in the third phase of ♀ so that the targeted male will never be able to grow a beard, and the second talisman of this phase is made to divert rivers to any place you like.

The first talisman is made in the first phase of the ☽ for bringing over any desired emirs and kings. The second talisman is made in this phase to make a king love whomever you want so much that he can not tolerate being away from him. The first talisman is made in the second phase of the ☽ to render the man you designate impotent so that he will not be able to have an intimate relationship with a woman. The second talisman is made in this phase to unlock the impotence of a man towards women. The first talisman is made in the third phase of the ☽ to disperse and expel people from their homeland. The second talisman is made in the third phase of the ☽ so that no harmful lion will stay in any place you do not want the lion to be in. These are the planets' talismans as they made them.

I have come across a treatise, which deals with making talismans, written by Abu Bakr Ibn Muhammad Ibn Zakariyya Al-Razi, a well-known and distinguished Arab philosopher. I included this valuable treatise in my book which I entitled The History of Arab Philosophers. I referred to some of his miraculous themes he presented in this treatise. He included in this treatise some relationships which he claims he tested. Some of what he says in this regard is that talismans for sympathy, love and harmony can be made either when the ☽ is in ♊ and connected to ♀ in the ♋ constellation, or when the ☽ is in the ♋ constellation connected to ♀ in the ♊ constellation, or, finally when the ☽ is in ♎ and connected to ♀ in the ♊ constellation. These talismans will achieve wonderful results. However, talismans for the worst possible malevolence can be made when the ☽ is either in ♋ or ♎ and connected to or in conjunction with ♂ in a rising or setting constellation. Talismans for bloodshed can be made when the ☽ is in the aerial constellation. Talismans made in this situation produce stronger effects. Moreover, talismans for animosity can be made when the ☽ is either in the ♎ or ♋ constellation, and also when it is in ♊'s quarter phase or in conjunction with it. For rendering a person speechless, talismans can be made when the ☽ is under the beams of the ☉. These talismans ought to be made at night. Moreover, talismans for prominent personalities, kings and heads of state can be made when the ☽ is connected to the ☉ while it is elevated in the ☉'s domain. They can also be made when the ☽ is in the middle of the sky connected to ♂. You will be able to achieve your wishes by relying on these relationships when making the above talismans. As for talismans tailored for judges and jurisprudence, they can be made when the ☽ is connected to ♋ in the ♋ or ♂ constellations while ♋ is in the middle of the sky. Additionally, talismans for the favors of writers, ministers and laborers are made when the ☽ is full and connected to ♀ while the latter is either in the ♋ or ♎ constellations.

You may know that the lunar quarter can lead to more exclusive results for every planet in producing su'ud effects provided that the planet is in one of the poles, the strongest of which is Al-Ashir. It is not recommended for nuhus effects. If you intend to ruin something by bringing nuhus to it, ♀ and ♂ will certainly do that. By virtue of their relationship, they are the most effective instruments for this sort of action.

You may also know that the ♃'s connection to planets, when it is in view of the ☉, is similar to its connection to them when it is behind the ☉. The ♃'s connection to the ☉ in its third or sixth phase is used for achieving distinguished aims, such as becoming a king or a head of state or achieving prevalence and prominence. It will be better and more effective when it is in Al-Ashir than when it is in Al-Rabi or Al-Sabi. No good can be attained when it is waning or burning. Its connection to ♀ in its Al-Thalith, Al-Sadis or Al-Rabi phase, as well as when it is facing ♀, is good, but not so good as its connection to ♀, since ♀ is more effective in this respect. These relationships are naturally more instrumental in fostering the love of women, achieving sympathy and promoting permanent affection. This is especially true if the ♃ in its Al-Thalith phase is in an earth or water constellation, in which case you may do whatever you want in an earth or water ascendant. But if Al-Thalith phase was in a fire or air constellation, you may do whatever you want in a fire or air ascendant.

Al-Razi is a good reference for knowledge and philosophy due to his elaborate research in ancient arts. However, the absolute authority in this art is the late Abu Musa Ibn Hayyan Al-Sufi, may Allah bless him and benefit us from his knowledge. He is the author of The Book of Research on Making Talismans and The Major Book of Talismans, which consists of fifty treatises. He also wrote The Key Book on the Images of Degrees and Their Effects on Principles and The Comprehensive Book on the Astrolabe in Theory and Practice. Al-Sufi's book on the astrolabe covers more than a thousand chapters. Al-Sufi is a pioneer in his miraculous works which he presents in this book. His Major Book on Talismans in which he covers a great deal of knowledge, has been used and referred to by people looking for information about talismans, images, characteristics, the effects of planets and their natural functions and influences. Furthermore, Al-Sufi revived the art of equilibrium after it had fallen into oblivion.

Inasmuch as I became a student of this scholar and inasmuch as I learned from him, I pray to Allah to bestow rest and mercy on his soul.

I have read two books written by Al-Muqaddim, Plato. The first is titled The Book of Major Laws, and the second is The Book of Minor Laws. He presents in the first book some of the ugly functions of images such as walking on water, the appearance of snakes in invented images that do not exist in the real world, causing rain to fall in a non-rainy season and preventing it from falling in a rainy season, emergence of flames and luminous meteors, thunder and lightning in the sky, occurrence of out-of-season thunderbolts, setting ablaze the ships of the enemy and burning whomever you wish from a far distance, walking in air, planets rising in the wrong time and observing them when they are falling from their position in the sky down to the center of Earth, talking to the deceased, breaking up of the ☉ and the ♃ into several pieces, transforming sticks and ropes into snakes that devour anyone thrown to them and covering long distances in no time. All of the above actions are the functions of images and utilizing their spiritual forces and transfusing them in their static primordial matters. Subsequently, these primordial matters become live and effective spirits that produce unprecedented miraculous effects and results. His philosophy books are replete with images which he urges everyone to know and pursue. He cites Pythagoras in proving that these images are similar to these, there are eternal spiritual essences which do exist, but they are beyond the mind's perception. Plato's book on minor laws does not match his book on major laws except one chapter in which he talks about the function of rational as well as irrational beings. He does deal with this topic in his major book on laws. Gabir wrote a book called The Compilation, in which he discusses the function of the rational being. However, he discusses these functions on the natural level whereby he seeks to compare them with the functions of nature.

As for Plato, he refers to these functions by the planet functions, images and spirits whose essences are natural matters. Whoever likes to reflect on what I have mentioned, he may do so. We will include in this book if we get to the appropriate point, what we can on this topic. We hereby conclude this treatise.

PREFACE TO THE SERIES

TEXTS AND TRANSLATIONS is a project of the Committee on Research and Publications of the Society of Biblical Literature and is under the general direction of Kent H. Richards (Iliff School of Theology), Executive Secretary, and Leander Keck (Yale Divinity School), Chairman of the Committee. The purpose of the project is to make available in convenient and inexpensive format ancient texts which are not easily accessible but are of importance to scholars and students of "biblical literature" as broadly defined by the Society. Reliable modern English translations will accompany the texts. The following subseries have been established thus far:

PSEUDEPIGRAPHA, edited by

Harold W. Attridge (Southern Methodist University)

GRECO-ROMAN RELIGION, edited by

Hans Dieter Betz (University of Chicago)

Edward N. O'Neil (University of Southern California)

EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE, edited by

Robert L. Wilken (University of Notre Dame)

William R. Schoedel (University of Illinois)

For the PSEUDEPIGRAPHA SERIES the choice of texts is governed in part by the research interests of the SBL Pseudepigrapha Group, of which John J. Collins (De Paul University) is currently Chairman, and James H. Charlesworth (Duke University) is Secretary. This series will focus on Jewish materials from the Hellenistic and Greco-Roman periods and will regularly include the fragmentary evidence of works attributed to biblical personalities, culled from a wide range of Jewish and Christian sources. The volumes are selected, prepared, and edited in consultation with the following editorial committee of the Pseudepigrapha Group: Sebastian P. Brock (Cambridge University, England), Robert A. Kraft (University of Pennsylvania), George W. MacRae (Harvard Divinity School), George W. E. Nickelsburg, Jr. (University of Iowa), Michael E. Stone (Hebrew University, Israel), and John Strugnell (Harvard Divinity School).

In the current volume the series presents only an English translation of an ancient text. This divergence from the usual practice is due to the fact that the Hebrew text of the Sepher Ha-Razim is readily available in a recent edition, while no English translation exists. It is hoped that the current volume will make more widely known this important work of Jewish magical literature.

FOREWORD

I wish to express my appreciation to the University of Alberta for the research grant which made the work on this text possible and to Joan Paton, Rhoda Zuk, and Gerane West who assisted in the preparation of the manuscript. Helpful suggestions concerning translation and understanding were received from Harold W. Attridge, Theodore H. Gaster and Roy David Kotansky. Their ideas and suggestions have been incorporated into the text. Most of all I would like to thank Morton Smith, who undertook a detailed review of the translation and whose knowledge and insight made it possible.

INTRODUCTION

In 1963, while studying Kabbalistic texts at Oxford, Mordecai Margalioth happened upon a Genizah fragment which gave a magical praxis to assist one in winning at the racetrack. Recalling similar formulas from the Genizah collection and elsewhere, he began a detailed study of the preserved fragments of magical literature. He postulated that these fragments may have all come from a common source which could be reconstructed. His research led to the publication of Sepher Ha-Razim in 1966.

The published text is eclectic. No single document available to Margalioth contained all of the material which was to appear in the final text. Enough was available, however, that he felt confident that he had successfully reconstructed a magical handbook from the early Talmudic period. Since its publication, SHR has proven a valuable source of information for studies pertaining to magic in antiquity and for studies relating to Jewish life in the first centuries CE.

Margalioth was an excellent textual scholar. Even though additional texts have come to light since the publication of SHR, his original work is an exceptional piece of scholarship which demands wider circulation and use among scholars interested in the Judaisms of the Hellenistic age. No doubt a re-editing of SHR is needed in the future. For the present, I hope the scholarly community will find this annotated translation of the Margalioth text a valuable tool for further study.

A. THE MANUSCRIPTS

Codices

There were seven major codices available to Margalioth for the preparation of his text. Each of them contained significant portions of what was to become SHR.

1. פ - The Kaufman manuscript in the Oriental Library of the Hungarian Academy in Budapest. No. 224, pp. 41-63.
2. מ - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. 163, p. 15A to p. 48B.
3. נ - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. N.014, p. 8B to p. 28B.
4. ד - The Florence Manuscript in the Library Medicea Laurenziana, no. Plut. 44.13, p. 107B to p. 118A.
5. A manuscript in the National Library, Jerusalem, Heb. 8° 476, p. 69B to p. 81B.
6. Schocken Manuscript, Schocken Library, Jerusalem, Kabbalah Manuscript 3. This is a copy of the Florence manuscript.
7. ב - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. N.012, pp. 1-24.

Of these seven manuscripts Margalioth used only the five marked with Hebrew letter designations. All of the first six are arranged similarly and are bound together with Maseket Hekhaloth, Maaseh Bereshit, and Shiur Komah. They all contain similar omissions, both accidental and deliberate, by the scribes. Ms. 1 (פ) seems to be the superior version, often completing words and sentences which are omitted in the other versions. It is the most precise and appears to contain the fewest distortions. Mss. 5 and 6 contained no material of special significance and were not used. Ms. 7 (ב) is an expanded and elaborated version. Its editor states that it was produced from two documents, a shorter Hebrew text and an expanded Latin translation. The lists of angelic names in this version are more extensive than in the others. The text alternates languages and gives both versions in places. In addition, Margalioth (Sepher, 50-51) lists four manuscripts which were not available to him.

Hebrew Genizah Fragments

The following fragments are designated 1.

1. Oxford MS. Heb. C. 18/30:

One parchment page containing nineteen lines on each side. The beginning letters of each line on side one and the concluding letters of each line on side two--from the middle of the page to the bottom--are mutilated.

Content: The beginning of SHR to 1:6.

4. Cambridge T-S K 1/97:

One small paper page containing twenty lines on both sides. Content: 1:13-54.

10. Cambridge T-S K 1/145:

Two large paper pages which are mutilated on all four sides, partially illegible, and torn. The remainder has thirty-six/thirty-seven lines per side.

Content: 2:100-4:47.

14. Cambridge T-S K 21/95, fragment 2:

One page. Content: 1:1-100.

4. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/260.

5. Cambridge T-S N.S. 298/72:
Two pages torn at the top and missing some sections in the middle. Begins with 2:204.
6. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/84:
Two pages. Page one begins with 2:130 and page two begins with 4:10.
7. Dropsie College, Philadelphia, Genizah Collection no. 437.
One very torn parchment page. Begins with 4:10.
8. Cambridge T-S Arabic 45/12:
One page beginning at 3:51, and then omitting the fourth firmament and continuing with the fifth firmament.
9. Cambridge T-S Arabic 33/9:
One parchment page beginning with the last line of the third firmament (3:58) and continuing with the fifth firmament.
10. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/223:
One page beginning with 4:38.

Latin Translation

The Latin translation is titled Liber Razielis Angeli and is found in the Senate Library in Leipzig, Codex Latinus No. 745. Margalioth did not receive a copy of this manuscript until after the type had been set for the Hebrew edition. Consequently he refers to only a few places in it. Unlike the Arabic, the Latin is a free translation and adaptation which has been greatly expanded. Of the Hebrew codices, it is closest to D, whose editor claims to have used a Latin version.

Other Sources

Margalioth drew heavily upon many medieval collections of magical spells and formulas which he felt were descended from his postulated original. The most important of these are:

1. Sepher Razi'el, Amsterdam 1701. Siglum: 7.
2. Sepher Razi'el, manuscripts and fragments. cf. Margalioth, Sepher, 44f.

3. Sepher Kamay ^{Cot}, JTSL 2272. Siglum: n.
4. Sepher Kamay ^{Cot}, fragments. cf. Margalioth, Sepher, 51.
5. Mafteach Shlomo, Facsimile Oxford 1914. Siglum: n.
6. Sepher Ha-Malbush, Kaufman 245. Siglum: b.

A visual representation of the eclectic nature of the text can be found on the chart produced by Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln, between pages 18 and 19.

B. STRUCTURE

The text of SHR is divided into seven unequal sections preceeded by a preface which contains a description of the book's transmission and functions. Before the flood, it was presented by the angel Razel to Noah who used it as a guide. After the flood it was passed down through the Biblical generations to Solomon.

The structure of the seven heavens reflects the fairly common cosmology known from Jewish circles during the Hellenistic age. It has close parallels to Talmudic passages, the Enoch literature, and the Hekhaloth literature. The heavens are divided as follows:

1. The first firmament has seven separate encampments. Each encampment is ruled by an angelic overseer who has numerous angels listed as serving him.
2. The second firmament is divided into twelve steps or levels. Each has between nine and twenty angels who can be called upon.
3. The third firmament is ruled by three angels. Each has a troop of angels which serve him.
4. The fourth firmament is divided between thirty-one angelic princes and their encampments who lead the sun during the day and thirty-one angelic princes and their encampments who lead the sun during the night.

5. The fifth firmament is ruled by twelve princes of glory who represent the twelve months of the year.
6. The sixth firmament is divided between an eastern overlord who rules twenty-eight angelic leaders and their encampments and a western overlord who rules thirty-one angelic leaders and their encampments.
7. The seventh firmament is a description of the divine throne followed by a long doxology.

Each firmament, except the seventh, and each subdivision is described as to its nature and function. For each subdivision there is a magical praxis described which can be initiated by calling upon the angels listed in that subdivision and by following the prescribed rites. With few exceptions, the magical praxis will reflect the descriptions of either the angels or the heaven itself. The rules of sympathy and contagion are clearly in evidence.

With minor exceptions, this is an outline of the over all structure of any given subdivision.

I. A description of the firmament followed by

A. A description of the subdivision and its usage organized thus:

1. Names of the angels of the subdivision
2. Description of the angels and their function
3. The purpose these angels can be made to serve
4. The procedures to be followed in preparation
5. The invocation to be spoken to initiate the praxis (in some cases this has been lost)
6. In some cases, additional actions and/or invocations to assist, alter, or reverse the magical praxis

A fine analysis of the form and style of these incantations and invocations has been done by Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln, 63-118.

C. DATE

Dating an eclectic text is difficult at best. The consensus of those scholars who have worked with the text is to support Margalioth's dating of SHR to the early fourth or late third century CE.¹

The reasons generally listed for this are:

1. The reference to the Roman indictions in 1:27-28 (cf. Margalioth, Sepher, 24) gives a clear terminus a quo of 297 CE.
2. The majority of the text is written in a pure midrashic Hebrew which reflects the period.
3. Many of the Greek words found in the text are technical terms used in the magical praxeis of that period.
4. The spells and incantations of SHR closely parallel the magical material preserved in the Greek magical papyri and in the Aramaic incantation bowls.
5. The forms of the adjurations are similar to material we know from the early Rabbinic literature.
- ✓ 6. The cosmological framework of the text reflects the Enoch and Hekhaloth literature of that period.

Although Margalioth's basic assumptions have gained the support of the majority of scholars, we must understand exactly what it is we are dating.

There are two different types of document here. The first is a cosmological framework which shows a marked similarity with the hekhaloth literature. The second is a collection of unrelated magical praxeis which show a marked similarity to the materials preserved in PGM. Chen Merchavya (JE 13, 1594-95) implies that the praxeis were woven into the descriptions of the angels and the heavens. This would make the cosmological framework the primary document. Surely the reverse is true. Gruenwald points out the SHR should not be classed as hekhalot literature despite its similarity. The magical praxeis are the primary source.

It seems to me more likely that the magical praxeis have been provided with a cosmological framework intended to make them appear as legitimate Jewish practices. Thus the formulas, spells, and incantations presumably existed prior to their present form. The use of Greek and Aramaic words is limited to the actual praxeis. The language of those sections is simple and straightforward. It lacks the flowery descriptive wording and the Biblical quotations of the cosmological framework. The only exception to this lies in the long adjurations of the latter firmaments and these hardly seem part of the original praxeis themselves. SHR has a cosmology which concerns itself in great detail with Jewish ritual purity, but praxeis which demand we eat cakes made from blood and flour. We have a framework which speaks of the glory of YHWH, but praxeis which offer prayers to Helios, and invoke Hermes and Aphrodite. We should indeed date SHR to the early fourth century CE but it is crucial to recognize that what fascinates us most about this text, the magic, is part of a folk tradition which dates from an earlier time. For example, the idol used to quell a rising river in 2:115ff. is clearly one which the Rabbis in Avodah Zarah 3:1 forbid Jews to make or possess. Since the Rabbis found it necessary to ban the image, one must assume that it was in popular use prior to the Mishnah's compilation. In dating SHR we are not dating the antiquity of the praxeis themselves.

Just as we cannot date an eclectic text by reference to any one section, so we cannot determine its origin by any one section. Even a number of references will afford no more than a list of possibilities. It is far too easy to be led to a conclusion, for example, that SHR is of Egyptian-Jewish origin. The oldest fragments were preserved there. The passage of the sun to the East via the North reflects Egyptian mythology. The use of hieratic papyrus was a sign of the Egyptian priesthood's magical rites. The listing of the descent through the mother was a common Egyptian practice and of course the Roman indictions point to a possible Alexandrian origin. Most compelling, however, is the close similarity between the material preserved in SHR and that of PGM.

Such a listing is persuasive until objectively analyzed. That an Egyptian Jewish scribal community preserved the text is no argument for its authorship. The sun's passage is part of other folklores and was surely a common theme in the ancient world. Hieratic papyrus was known as a magical tool outside of Egypt. Descent through the mother was a popular aphorism of the Greco-Roman world as well as a basis for Jewish legal definitions and serves in SHR to insure the effectiveness of the praxis. The indictions were used throughout the Roman world and could easily have been part of a document written in Constantinople. That there are close similarities between SHR and PGM is surely of interest but close similarities also exist between SHR and the incantation bowls of Syria. Furthermore, that PGM was found only in Egypt merely points out how fortunate we are that Egypt's climate is so well suited for preserving such material.

Magic was the common property of the people of the Greco-Roman world. The praxeis could have arisen in any part of that world and have been initially preserved in any part of that world. To attempt to locate a single place of origin would be futile.

Furthermore, we should not attempt to place the magical praxeis of SHR within any specific group. The praxeis are part of the popular religion of the age. Jews who could place a mosaic of Helios on their synagogue floors certainly could not have found it strange to offer invocations to that same god. On the other hand, SHR has clearly undergone editing at the hands of more "traditionally" or rabbinically oriented scribes. We can sense the tensions between a developing orthodoxy and a popular religion here. SHR is a fine example of the syncretistic nature of the Hellenistic world. ✓

D. THE TRANSLATION

A translation either can be literal, to render the exact words of the Hebrew, or can be paraphrastic to catch the meaning. This translation contains elements of both sorts. Its purpose is to convey the meaning in each case as clearly as possible. Parentheses have been used to set off words and phrases which are not found in the Hebrew text, but are either implied, understood, or needed to create a readable translation.

I have attempted to follow the Margalioth text as closely as possible. When a different reading is offered it is so footnoted. The technical Greek terms and prayers have been translated in the text and footnoted.

The angelic lists presented a special problem. There was so much conjecture involved in creating these lists in transliterated form that I opted, for the sake of consistency and accuracy, to produce the lists without the speculative vocalization. For those who find this an unsatisfactory solution, I have provided the Hebrew lists in Appendix I.

Hebrew/English equivalents for the text are as follows:

TRANSLATION

(PREFACE)

This is a book, from the Books of the Mysteries, which was given to Noah, the son of Lamech, the son of Methuselah, the son of Enoch, the son of Jared, the son of Mehallalel, the son of Kenan, the son of Enosh, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, by Raziel the angel in the year¹ when he came into the ark (but) before his entrance.

And (Noah) inscribed it upon a sapphire stone² very distinctly.³ And he learned from it how to do wondrous deeds, and (he learned) secrets of knowledge, and categories of understanding and thoughts of humility and concepts of counsel, (how) to master the investigation of the strata of the heavens, to go about in all that is in their seven abodes, to observe all the astrological signs, to examine the course of the sun, to explain the observations of the moon, and to know the paths of the Great Bear, Orion, and the Pleiades,⁴ to declare the names of the overseers of each and every firmament and the realms of their authority, and by what means they (can be made to) cause success in each thing (asked of them), and what are the names of their attendants and what (oblations) are to be 10 poured out to them, and what is the proper time' (at which they will hear prayer,⁵ so as) to perform every wish of anyone (who comes) near them in purity. (Noah learned) from it rituals (that cause) death and rituals (that preserve) life, to understand the evil and the good, to search out (the right) seasons and moments (for magical rites), to know the time to give birth and the time to die, the time to strike and the time to heal,⁶ to interpret dreams and visions, to arouse combat, and to quiet wars, and to rule over spirits and over demons, to send them (wherever you wish) so they will go out like slaves,⁷ 15 to watch the four winds of the earth, to be learned in the speech of thunderclaps, to tell the significance of lightning flashes, to foretell what will happen in each and every month, and to know the affairs of each and every year, whether for plenty or for hunger, whether for harvest or for draught, whether for peace or for war, to be as one of the awesome ones and to comprehend the songs of heaven.

And from the wisdom of the secrets of this book, Noah learned and understood how to make gopher wood (into) an ark 20 and to hide from the torrent of the flood waters, to bring (the animals) with him two by two and seven by seven, to take in some of every kind of food and every kind of provender. And he placed (the book) in a golden cabinet and brought it first into the ark, to learn from it the times of the day and to investigate from it the times of the night, and in which period he should arise to pour out entreaties. And when he came forth from the ark, he used (the book) all the days of his life, and at the time of his death he handed it down to Abraham,⁸ and Abraham to Isaac, and Isaac to Jacob, and Jacob to Levi, and 25 Levi to Kohath, and Kohath to Amram, and Amram to Moses, and Moses to Joshua, and Joshua to the elders, and the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the sages,⁹ and thus generation by generation until Solomon the King arose. And the Books of the Mysteries were disclosed to him and he became very learned in books of understanding, and (so) ruled over everything he desired, over all the spirits and the demons that wander in the world, and from the wisdom of this book he imprisoned and released, and sent out and brought in, and built and prospered.¹⁰ For many books were handed down to him, but this one was found more precious and more honorable and more

 30 difficult than any of them. Happy the eye that will behold

⁸Mss. D and 7 insert Shem into the chronology.

⁹Cf. Pirke Avoth 1:1. This genealogy is similar to the Avot tradition but it puts Solomon the King after the prophets and the sages. Since they should follow Solomon, it seems that an original genealogy ending with Solomon (probably after "elders") has been interpolated by an editor who wanted to claim knowledge of these secrets for the rabbis. Evidence for such an insertion is important because it casts some doubt on other Rabbinic elements in the text, and because of the fact that a Rabbinic editor left the pagan elements stand, illustrates an unfamiliar side of Rabbinic Judaism.

it. Happy the ear that listens attentively to its wisdom.

✓ For in it are the seven firmaments and all that is in them.

From their encampments we shall learn to comprehend all things, and to have success in every deed, to think and to act from the wisdom of this book.

(THE FIRST FIRMAMENT)

The name of the first firmament is called Shamayim.¹

Within it are encampments filled with wrath. And seven thrones are prepared there and upon them are seated overseers, and around them on all sides encampments (of angels) are stationed and are obedient to men at the time when they practice (magic), to everyone who has learned to stand and pour (libations) to their names and cite them by their signs² at the period when 5 (prayer) is heard (so as) to make a magical rite succeed.

(Over) all these encampments of angels these seven overseers rule, to dispatch (them) for every (sort of) business so that they will hasten and bring success.

These are the names of the seven overseers who sit upon (the) seven thrones: the name of the first is 'WRPNY'L, and the name of the second is TYGRH, and the name of the third is DNHL, and the name of the fourth is KLMYY', the name of the fifth is 'SYMWR, the name of the sixth is PSKR, the name of the seventh is BW'L. And all of them were created from fire and their 10 appearance is like fire, and their fire is blazing, for from fire they emerged.

And without permission, (the angels who serve them)³ do not go out to engage in magical actions. (They wait) until a command comes to them from (one of) the seven overseers, the occupants of the thrones, who rule over them. 'For they are subject to the will (of the overseers) and go about (only) with their permission. And each and every one of them goes to his work determined to act quickly in any affair on which he may be sent, whether for good or for evil, whether for superfluity or for shortage, whether for war or for peace. And all of them 15 are to be called by the names (given them) from the day they were created.

And these are the names of the seven encampments which serve the seven overseers (for each encampment serves one of the overseers).

And these are the names of the angels of the first encampment who serve 'WRPNY'L:

I deliver to you, angels of anger and wrath, N son of N, that you will strangle him and destroy him and his appearance,²¹ make him bedridden, diminish his wealth, annul the intentions of his heart, blow away his thought and his knowledge and cause him to waste
 65 away continually until he approaches death. ✓

If you wish to exile him conclude the formula thus:

That you will exile him and banish him from his children and his home and he will have nothing left.

If he is one to whom you are in debt, conclude (the formula) thus:

That you will plug his mouth and make his planning vain and he will not think of me, nor speak of me; and when I pass in front of him, he will not see me.

70 If (the rite is) for a ship²² say thus:

¹⁷Literally, "in the east wind," et. al.

¹⁸Literally, "for the name of."

¹⁹Margalioth has "for them" and records no variant but the context requires "for him."

²⁰Reading שלמים instead of מים .

²¹I. e., so that the body will no longer be recognizable.

²²Either your enemy's ship or one on which he is.

I adjure you angels of wrath and destruction, that you will rise up against the ship of N son of N and that you not permit it to sail from any place. But if²³ wind (sufficient) for sailing²⁴ come to it, then let (the wind) carry it out to sea and shake it (so it sinks) in the midst of the sea and let neither man nor cargo be saved from it.

If you wish to fell a fortified wall say thus:

75 I adjure you, angels of fury, wrath, and anger, that you will go with the force of your power and fell the wall of N son of N. Smite it to dust and let it be overturned like the ruins of Sodom and Gemorah, and let no man place stone upon stone on the place²⁵ (where the wall was); if it be built during the day, let it be overturned at night.

Then pour out (the water) upon the four corners of the house. (In a like manner) if you wish to make your enemy bedridden, or to destroy his appearance, or to (do) any grievous thing, pour the water upon his doorstep. If (you wish) to exile him, pour out the water to the four directions.

80 If (you wish) to bind your creditor, throw the water on his garments. And if (you wish) to sink a ship, cast the vial and its water in the midst of the ship (while saying) the name of the ship and its master. And if you wish to overturn a wall, dig at the four corners of the wall and divide the water among (the four corners). (Use the water) thus in each ✓ case. Do it in (a state of) purity and then you will succeed.

²³Reading ואלו for ולא.

²⁴Possibly read מנהיג with Ms. ק, a leading wind."

²⁵Reading במקומה with Ms. ■ for בקומה. Possibly בחומה, "on the wall."

90 These angels tell everyone who, in purity, gains power over them, what will happen on the earth in each and every year, whether for plenty or for famine, whether rains will be abundant or sparse, and whether there will be a dearth and whether there will be produce, and whether locusts will come and whether there will be strife among kings, and whether a sword will come among the great men of the kingdom,²⁷ and whether death or suffering will befall mankind.

If you wish to know and understand what will be in each 95 and every year, take a hieratic papyrus²⁸ and cut it into ²⁶Probably a variant of Daniel or Danel, both of which are found as divine angelic names.

²⁷This seems to imply either strife or execution.

²⁸יִרְטִיקוֹן, i.e., ἱερατικόν - a hieretic sheet of papyrus.
"Hieratic" (priestly) here refers especially to the Egyptian priests who were famed for their magic and from whence came the types of writing and paper that they used and were thought

100 I adjure you O sun that shines on the earth, in the name of the angels who make men of knowledge understand and comprehend wisdom and secrets, that you will do what I ask and make known to me what will be in this year--do not conceal a thing from me.

And you will adjure (the sun with) this adjuration for three days, three times³⁵ and the third time you will scrutinize the oil. Notice everything brought up upon the face of the oil, that is what will happen in that year. If two ³⁰ I.e., one possibility on each slip.

³¹ Cf. PGM I:278.

³² Literally, "things."

³³ Cf. PGM II:87; III:325; IV:260; V:237.

³⁴ Here the text has צאתה מחופתה . If the final ה's were taken as feminine terminations (which they usually are) this would mean "when she comes forth from her bridal chamber." However, the sun is most often masculine. The verb forms and pronouns referring to the sun in this context are all masculine. Therefore, it is more plausible to explain these endings as Aramaizing spellings for the masculine termination ך.

³⁵ Literally, "3 days 3 times." Possibly once a day or three times each day.

window. And so, (as in) every operation, act in purity,

These are the angels³⁸ who bring around³⁹ the opinion 115 of the king and the good will of the nobles, chiefs, and leaders of the kingdom, directing and bestowing favor and mercy upon all who arise in purity to request anything from them. Perform this rite zealously and you will succeed.

If you wish to turn the king's opinion to your favor, or (that of) the chief of the army, or a rich man, or a ruler, or a judge of a city, or all the citizens of the state, or ³⁷ Here spelled with a η instead of a κ as in 1:8. The manuscripts show other variations, BLMY', GDYMY'.

³⁸ Perhaps the 36th angel comes from $\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$.
 Cf. 1:130.

³⁹ מְשׁוּבְבִים is possibly from שָׁב . Margalioth suggests amending $\text{שְׁתַּחֲבֹנִי אֶם מְשַׁרְתִּים אֶת}$ to מְשׁוּבְבִים . Cf. 1:127
 שְׁתַּחֲבֹנִי .

(if you wish to change) the heart of a great or wealthy woman, or the heart of a beautiful⁴⁰ woman, (do this). Take a lion cub and slaughter it with a bronze knife and catch its 120 blood and tear out its heart⁴¹ and put its blood in the midst (of the heart) and write the names of these (above mentioned) angels in blood upon the skin between its eyes; then wash it out with wine three years old and mix (the wine) with the blood.

Then take three of the chief spices, istorgon⁴² and myrrh and musk,⁴³ and stand clean and pure, facing the brilliant star⁴⁴ and put the spices on the fire; then take in your hand the cup in which are the wine and the blood and say (this spell over it while burning the incense) and call 125 on the name of the overseer and the names of the angels of this encampment. (Do this) twenty-one times over the blood and over the wine and say to the brilliant star, the name (of the star) which is that of Aphrodite, three hundred (times)⁴⁵ and (the name of the) angel ḤSDY'L (and then say):

⁴⁰Reading ביופיה for יופיה.

⁴²איסטרוקון is probably στύραξ (styrax), a fragrant gum.

⁴³מושך. If Margalioth is correct in assuming that מושך is a transliteration of the Persian musk and the Greek moschos, then the ך implies an Aramaic form making שורה the Aramaic "chain" or "chord." Margalioth points out the similarity between the Arabic targum of SHR which reads WSWRT 'LMSK and the Arabic targum of the Song of Songs 1:13 which reads SRH 'LMSK. Thus the targum renders "bag of myrrh" as "bag of musk."

⁴⁴I.e., Aphrodite-Venus. Cf. 1:126.

⁴⁵ש. Cf. PGM IV:2891. Margalioth suggests deletion of the ש.

I adjure you in the name of the angels of the fourth encampment who serve KLMY' that you bring around for me King N so that the heart of his army and the heart of his ministers (will be) in my hand, I, N son of N, and I will find favor and mercy before him and he will do what I want and ask, whenever I ask (anything) from him.

130 When you finish repeating the adjuration twenty-one times, look up and you will see (something) like a coal of fire descending into the blood and wine.⁴⁶

If you wish to enter the presence of the king or any (great) man, or a judge, wash yourself with "living" water⁴⁷ and take some of the blood and some of the wine and anoint your body, and place the lion's heart over your heart. If (you wish) to 135 bring around the citizens of the city⁴⁸ take the lion's heart and hide it in the midst of the city, and write on a (piece of) gold foil⁴⁹ the (name of) the overseer and (the names of the angels of) his encampment and say thus:

You angels who go around and circulate in the world, bring around (to me) all the citizens of this city, great and small, old and young, lowly and distinguished. Let the fear and terror of me be over them as the terror of the lion is over all the animals. And as this heart is mute while I am speaking, so let 140 all of them listen to me, and let none of the children of Adam and Eve be able to speak against me.

⁴⁶ Cf. the notion of the descent of the holy spirit, body and blood of Christ into the bread and wine of the Eucharist. Note the use of QRSTWS in the angelic list of this encampment. Cf. 4 Ezra 14:39.

⁴⁷ מֵיִם חַיִּים, "living water," i.e., water from a stream or spring, not from a cistern.

⁴⁸ מְדִינָה is here translated as "city" as it fits the sense better than "state" which was used in 1:118.

⁴⁹ צִיָּץ, gold plate, metal disc, or lamella, often used for making amulets.

Hide the heart in the middle of the city and go into seclusion⁵⁰ for three days and after three days appear in the city. (For this occasion) put some of the lion's blood under the soles of your feet.

If you wish to bind yourself to the heart of a great or wealthy woman⁵¹ take some perspiration from your face (and put it) in a new glass vessel; then write on it, (i.e.) on a tin lamella,⁵² the name of the overseer and the names of the angels, and throw (the tin lamella) in the midst (of the flask) and say thus over the perspiration of your face:

I adjure you angels of favor and knowledge, that you will turn (to me) the heart of N daughter of N and let her do nothing without me, and let her heart be (joined) with my heart in love.

Take the new flask and bury it under her doorstep⁵³ and say:

Just as a woman will return to the infant of her womb, so this N will return to me to love me from this day and forever.

This should be written⁵⁴ at the full moon.

⁵⁰Literally "hide your face."

⁵¹This love potion is independent of the previous use of the lion's blood.

⁵²Either the phrase "on it" or "on a tin lamella" seems to be a repetitive addition.

⁵³Literally "the place of her coming in and going out."

Or say:

⁵⁷Reading עומד for אומר.

⁵⁸The grammar here is most confusing. It would seem that the first clause (1:165,166) is a homosexual love formula and that the second (1:166,167) is bi-sexual. Another possibility is that the first clause uses a common masculine to imply that the formula could be used by any party. The fact that the second clause specifically provides for attraction of either a male or a female to a man seems, however, to imply that the first clause is indeed homosexual. The question is influenced by our rendering of נאמר . Does it imply a new formula or a continuation of the former? Cf. its usage in the first firmament, second encampment (p.27). Also compare DMP 22:40 p.143; and PGM IV:345f. and 1480f.

⁵⁹Literally "her father's house and her mother." This is probably a colloquial construction.

⁶⁰Note the definition of an individual by specification of his mother. This is common in Egyptian magic texts and used often in SHR. A common saying was, "the mother is certainly known, the father uncertain."

⁶¹See also 2:173. Cf. PGM VII:915. καὶ ἅλῳ μὴ δεῖξῃς remaining cake, crumble it, and place it in aged wine in a glass cup, and say the name(s) of the angels in the presence of the moon and the stars and continue thus:

I adjure you that you will give favor, kindness, and affection, to N, from the favor, kindness, and affection that radiate from your countenance. (Give them to) me, N son of N, so that I will find favor, kindness, affection, and honor in the eyes of every man.

Then blow into the wind and wash your face each dawn, 175 for nine days, with the wine and the cake crumbled in it.

If you wish to question a ghost; stand facing a tomb and repeat the names of the angels of the fifth encampment (while holding) in your hand a new flask (containing) oil and honey mixed together and say thus:

180 I adjure you O spirit of the ram bearer⁶² who dwell among the graves upon the bones of the dead, that you will accept from my hand this offering and do my will and bring me (the spirit of) N son of N who is dead. Raise him up so that he will speak to me without fear and tell me true things without concealment.⁶³ Let me not be afraid of him and let him tell me (for) my question, (the answer) I need from him.

He should appear immediately. But if he does not, repeat the adjuration a second time (and) up to three times. When he appears set the flask before him and after this speak your words while holding a twig of myrtle in your hand.⁶⁴ If you 185 wish to release him, strike him three times with the myrtle and pour out the oil and honey, and break the cup, and throw the myrtle from your hand, and return home by a different route.

⁶²קרפוריא , i.e., Κρυσφόρος or Hermes.

⁶³Cf. PGM IV:1034. Spirits do not always tell the truth.

⁶⁴The flask and myrtle are to protect the person reciting the incantation. Cf. Goodenough, Symbols 2.174.

If you wish to speak with the spirits, go out to "the place of the killed"⁶⁵ and call out there in a singsong, whimpering way:

190

I adjure you in the name of the angels who serve in the fifth encampment, and in the name of the overseer who is over them, who is 'SYMWR, that you will hear me at this time and send me the spirit of HGRGYRWT.⁶⁶ She shall go according to my will for whatever I send her and shall obey me in everything until such and such a time.

If you see opposite you a column of smoke, speak your words and send (her) for whatever purpose you wish.

These are the names of the angels in charge of dreaming, to make anyone who approaches them in purity know what the dream (was) and what its interpretation is.

If the king, or the head of the city, or governor, or your friend summons you and you want to give him an answer from your wisdom, say to him, "I will make known to you what is in your heart concerning me." (or "what you thought about me," or 220 "what you want to do," or "what is the interpretation of your dream.")⁶⁹ "Give me a period of three days and I will make known to you all that is in your heart." Then go out on Sunday to the sea shore or to a river bank during the third hour of the night. Wear a new cloak⁷⁰ and do not eat (the meat of) any animal,⁷¹ nor anything which yields blood (when slaughtered), and do not drink wine. Take myrrh and pure frankincense and place them on burning coals in a new earthen vessel, and turn your face toward the water and repeat three 225 times the name of the overseer with the name(s) of the angels of the encampment. When you see a pillar of fire between heaven and earth say thus:

⁶⁹The magician is to choose the appropriate phrase.
 Cf. PGM I:175.

⁷⁰ ἵνυδα i.e., στολή. Semetic pronunciation often avoids double consonants by the introduction of vowels.

⁷¹ Hebrew דג. Margalioth reads גד, fish, which might be possible in sympathy with "the river." But see 2:8 and notes. Furthermore the next phrase, "anything which issues blood" would not classically apply to "fish." In 5:35 we read "both small animals and all that yields blood even fish." Thus it seems that SHR would go out of its way to make the distinction if it was appropriate.

I adjure you by the One who measured the waters in the palm of His hand and rebuked the waters so that they fled from Him, and made winds flying in the air his personal servants, as a fiery flame, who rebuked the sea and dried it up, and made rivers a desert,⁷² by His name and by its letters, I adjure you, and by the names of the angels⁷³ of the seventh encampment who serve BW'L, that you make known to me what is in the heart of N son of N and what is his desire, and what is the interpretation of his dream and what is his thought.

Do likewise on the second and third nights and you will see that a pillar of fire will appear to you with a cloud on it like the image of a man.⁷⁴ Question him and he will tell you whatever you ask. And if you wish to release him throw some of the water, from the sea or the river by which you are standing, toward heaven three times and say under your breath:⁷⁵

Invisible Lord BW'L, sufficient to our need, the perfect shield bearen,⁷⁶ I free you, I free you, subside and return to your (heavenly) course.

Say this seven times. Perform the entire rite in purity and you will succeed.

These are the names of the seven spirits who serve in the firmament called Shamayim.

PEACE.

⁷²The adjuration is a combination of Isa 40:12; Ps 104:4; 107:33; and Nah 1:4.

⁷³Reading שמות for בשם ז, i.e., "the names of" for "the name of seven" angels, since there are 44 angels in this encampment.

⁷⁴Cf. Ezek 1:4.

⁷⁵Cf. PGM III:108.

(THE SECOND FIRMAMENT)

The second firmament is called "heaven of heavens."¹ In it are frost and fog² and treasuries of snow and treasuries of hail, angels of fire and angels of moisture³ and spirits of terror and spirits of dread. The firmament is full of fear, for within it are innumerable angels constituting armies upon armies and over them are officers and overseers. Within the 5 firmament are twelve steps⁴ and on each and every step stand angels in their splendor, and over them is one high official over another. Nevertheless, for human affairs, they are obedient to everyone who approaches them in purity.

If you wish to ask something of any who stand on the steps of the second firmament, cleanse yourself for three weeks from all fruit of the palm,⁵ from all kinds of animals, small and large,⁶ from wine, from (all) types of fish and from all (animals) that yield blood (when slaughtered); and do not approach a woman in her impurity,⁷ and do not touch anything ¹שמי שמים, a common designation in mystical literature for the second heaven.

²קטור, כפור וקטור "smoke." Here it seems to imply mist or fog in parallel to frost, snow, hail, etc.

³Reading זיעה, i.e., "moisture" with Mss. ה and נ instead of זיע, i.e., "trembling."

⁴מעלות, i.e., steps, levels, divisions.

⁵Reading דקל for דקה with Margalioth.

⁶דקה וגסה, i.e., small and large animals. This is a common distinction found in Rabbinic literature between sheep and goats as opposed to cattle.

⁷Cf. Ezek 18:6.

 terror, cloaked in wrath, girded with dread, surrounded by 15 trembling, their raiment like an image of fire, their faces like the appearance of lightning, and their mouths never cease (to utter) mighty words. Nevertheless, their voice is not heard, for their task is to silence, to frighten, and to terrify anyone who opposes the man who calls on them in purity.

If you wish to silence a great and powerful people, or a governor, or a judge, or the citizens of a city, or of a state, take a handful of ashes from beneath the bread offering⁹ of an ⁸Cf. Lev 21:11.

⁹Cf. Testament of Job 7. Here reading פת for פאת

¹⁰מפריע, possibly "out of order" or "irregularly," but most likely "backwards" the normal meaning. Saying things backwards is a well-known magical practice.

*me and let me be exonerated in my lawsuit; do not permit any mouth to speak evil about me.*¹¹

Then sprinkle the ashes, either in the city or in the 25 state, either before the governor or before the judge, and you will be exonerated.

Upon the second step stand these:

| | | | |
|--------|--------|---------|---------|
| CZZY'L | HNN'L | PSSY'L | YŠCY'L |
| DLQY'L | 'RPD' | MR'WT | RYPYPYS |
| 'MNY'L | NHMY'L | PRZYRWM | CNB'L |

These, their station is on the second step. They stand with strength, filled with might, surrounded with love, and in their presence fire burns, and they hasten to bring the 30 (ruling) planets of the sons of man into conjunction for love.

If you wish to put the love of a man into the heart of a woman, or to arrange for a poor man to wed a rich woman, take two copper lamellae and write upon them, on both sides, the names of these angels, and the name of the man and the name of the woman and say thus:

I ask of you, angels who rule the fates of the children of Adam and Eve, that you do my will and bring in conjunction the planet of N son of N into conjunction with (the planet of) the woman N daughter of N. Let him find favor and affection in her eyes and do not let her belong to any man except him.

35

Place one (lamella) in a fiery furnace and the other in her ritual bath.¹² Do this on the twenty-ninth of the month

¹¹In this formula note that two angelic names, הסעיאל and דמימאל which are derived from verbs meaning "to silence" (הס, דממת).

¹²By Rabbinic law, if the woman uses a ritual bath, mikvah, she is either about to be married or married, thus limiting the formula's usefulness to bridegrooms, husbands and

Upon the third step stand these:

adulterers. Since we do not know in what circles this document circulated, it is of course impossible to draw a definite conclusion about its intended use.

¹³Since the introduction to the Second Firmament gives general rules of abstinence to follow before using the formulas of the Second Firmament, we must assume that these rules are to be followed after the spell has been cast in order to insure effectiveness.

¹⁴These characters appear here in Ms. N. Such symbols, which were used to enhance the power of amulets and spells, were common both in the Greek and Jewish worlds. Cf. Margalioth, Sepher 4; PGM IV:2706; VII:810, 816, 860, 922. These characters are also reproduced in the sixth step of the Second Firmament and in the Third Firmament. Full magical alphabets coalesce at a later date. Cf. Robert Ambelain, La Kabbale Pratique (Paris: Edition Niclaus, 1951), or the chart reproduced in Gustav Davidson, A Dictionary of Angels (London: Macmillan, 1967) 335. The use of ringed symbols may derive from the punch writing on Greek allotment plates which were worn in a similar fashion to amulets. Cf. John H. Kroll, Athenian Bronze Allotment Plates (Cambridge, Mass: Harvard University Press, 1972).

These, their station is on the third step, for their function is to shake and agitate the hearts of men and to make void their intentions and nullify their thoughts. Dread is theirs and fear where they walk, and their appearance is (full) of wrath, and they are exceedingly harsh and mighty men of war, and fear goes before them and trembling after them,¹⁵ and they roar and cause trembling as they go shaking¹⁶ (the world), and their voice is like the voice of thunder and in their hands are rods of fire and their faces are like sparks of fire and 45 fire comes forth from their eyes, and all of them are ready to nullify and make void (whatever they are asked to).

If you wish to nullify a great man's intentions towards you, or the thoughts of an army officer, or the intentions of military men, or any other evil intentions or thoughts (directed against you); go out at midnight when the moon is full, barefoot,¹⁷ and pure, and wrapped in a new cloak.¹⁸ Stand under the moon and say twenty-one times the names of the angels written above, (those) who stand on the third step of 50 the "heaven of heavens," and say:

Moon, Moon, O Moon, bring my words before the angels who stand upon the third step: nullify the thought concerning me of N son of N and the intention of his heart and his plot. Let his mouth be unable to speak ¹⁵This calls to mind the figure of Ares and his attendants.

¹⁶רעש, commonly associated with earthquakes.

¹⁷The text reads נחני, i.e., "alone." Margalioth reads נחני "barefoot." This is justified by other magical texts of a similar nature.

¹⁸נחני, i.e., στωλή. Cf. First Firmament, note 70 (p.41).

against me, destroy his knowledge, and thwart his intentions, and let his purpose¹⁹ be devastated, so that every time he sees me he will be filled with love for me, and let him be changed so that he becomes my friend, and let him not remember any hatred of me, and let me find favor and affection in his eyes.

55 Then write (the names of) the angels and these (following) characters²⁰ upon a silver lamella; put them on a tablet over your heart,²¹ and during all the days you wear it²² you shall succeed.

Upon the fourth step stand these:

| | | | |
|---------|-------------------|---------|---------------------|
| SGRY'L | MLKY'L | 'WNBYB | PGRY'L |
| • | | | |
| CNNY'L | KLNMY' | 'WMY'L | MPNWR |

| KWZZYB' | 'LPY'L | PRYBY'L | S ^C QMYH |
| | • | | |
| KDWMY'L | 'SMD ^C | HWDYH | YHZY'L |
| | | | • |

60 These, their station is on the fourth step.²³ They are girded with storm and the sound of their steps is like the sound of bronze. They fly from the east and turn from the west towards the gate.²⁴ They are swift as lightning and fire is around ¹⁹Literally "heart."

²⁰והכרטיים for χαρακτῆρες. Cf. note 14 (p.46).

²¹Reading על לוח על לבך. This is a recipe for an amulet. The idea is that you put the silver foil on a stronger tablet and wear it suspended over your heart (chest).

²²Literally, "it is upon you."

²⁴פילן for πυλῶν.

them. They withhold²⁵ sleep from men, and they can do good or do evil.

If you wish to give your enemy trouble in sleeping,²⁶ take the head of a black dog that never saw light during its days and take a lamella from a strip of (lead) pipe from an aqueduct,²⁷ and write upon it (the names of) these angels and say thus:

65 I hand over to you, angels of disquiet who stand upon the fourth step, the life and the soul and the spirit of N son of N so that you may tie him in chains of iron and bind him to a bronze yoke. Do not give sleep, nor slumber, nor drowsiness to his eyelids; let him weep and cry like a woman at childbirth, and do not permit any (other) man to release him (from this spell).

Write thus (as above) and put (the inscribed lead lamella) in the mouth of the dog's head²⁸ and put wax on its mouth, and seal (it) with a ring which has a lion (engraved) upon it. Then go and conceal it behind his house or in a place he frequents.²⁹

If you wish to release him (take the dog's head) away from where it is concealed and remove its seal and withdraw the text and throw it into a fire, and he will fall asleep at once. Do this with humility and you will succeed.

²⁵Literally "separate."

²⁶Cf. PGM IV:2943.

²⁷פסוקרופורון for ψυχροφόρον . Cf. PGM VII:397.

²⁸Cf. PGM XXXVI:232,370.

²⁹Literally "a place in which he goes and comes." His doorstep is most likely, as this was a popular and effective place for magic deposits. Cf. First Firmament, note 53 (p.35).

Upon the fifth step stand these:

| | | | | |
|----|-----------|---------|--------|--------|
| | QWN'QRY'L | PTWNY'L | NQRY'L | 'Y'L |
| | Y'BWTY'W | BBSB'W | BKPY | MBWM |
| 75 | SKTB'Q | 'MRY'L | Y'L'L | MKS'BW |

These are they who stand on the fifth step. They grasp shield and spear, and brass helmets are on their heads, and their garments are coats of mail. To their right and left are (storms) as of hailstones. Trembling (accompanies) their running and they stride upon rivers of fire, grasping torches, and hurrying to return an answer, and their mouths never silent from roaring, and their breath³⁰ is like flaming fire, and their fire is blazing (so that) the breath of their mouths 80 kindles fire, for all their actions concern the treasures of fire, for from fire they emerged and they are stationed in fire.

If you wish to light an oven in the cold, take a lump of sulphur (that weighs) about seven shekels³¹ and divide it into the number of compartments in the oven. Then upon each and every (lump of sulphur) write with a bronze stylus³² the names of the angels who stand upon the fifth step and say:

85 I adjure you, angels of fire and angels of flame, by the King who is a consuming fire, that you shall stand with me and kindle the oven which is in such a place, and it shall be that anyone who approaches it will be amazed at its heat.

³⁰Perhaps "their spirit," but "breath" is more likely here.

³¹Or possibly 27 shekels exactly. Reading כ"יז.

³²Reading בעשש נחושט של בעת with Mss. ס and ח instead of בעשש נחושט.

Do this in the proven manner³³ and you will succeed.

Then take the sulphur and cast it into each and every burner of it (the oven) and it (the sulphur) will blaze up strongly. Every day that you wish to light (the oven) write (as directed) and cast (the sulphur) into the midst (of the oven).

Upon the sixth step stand these:

| | | | | |
|----|---------------------|---------|--------|--------|
| | 'BYHWD | QYTR | ZLQY'L | STRY'L |
| 90 | 'DRK | GHLY'L | TMKY'L | SMKYH |
| | RB ^c Y'L | YWQMY'L | SMYHWD | MHRY'L |
| | DWMY'L | KRKWS | QNZ | QNY'L |
| | KNTWN | | | |

These are they who stand on the sixth step. They behave with humility, but their faces are full of glory. Their garments are garments white as light. They stand like giants, awesome as the scholars of a court,³⁴ seated in thrones of glory, trusted to give true (judgments), and in charge of healing.

95 If you wish to heal a man who has had a stroke and half of him is dried up, either by an (evil) spirit or by witchcraft, take spikenard oil and three measures of honey and stand facing the sun as it rises, repeating three times each day for seven days the name of the man and the name of his mother and the names of the angels who stand upon the sixth step. And on the seventh day take him and stand him naked before the sun, and smear oil all over his flesh, while burning myrrh, frankincense, and chosen spices in the sunlight. Then again write upon a ³³ קאריג for δονιμή, or possibly δόλμα.

³⁴ Literally, "of a yeshivah" or academy.

silver lamella (the names of) these angels of glory with these characters:³⁵

(Write these on the lamella) as an amulet and put it on his neck with a (cord of) asbestos³⁶ and incense of spices. Write it thus on the twentieth of the month and you will succeed.

Upon the seventh step stand these:

| | | | |
|--------|-------|----------|--------|
| PTHYH | RZY'L | 'GRY'L | HGDY'B |
| 'DRWN | KRQT' | Q'TYPWR | 'BRY'L |
| ŠTQY'L | °MY'L | SYKBRDWM | |

105 These are they who stand on the seventh step, girt with strength, their might like a lion. Half of them are like fire and half of them cold as water. They stand in their place (and are weakened from their fear).³⁷ They are wondrous because of their deeds and no one can comprehend their image, ³⁵ See note 14 above (p.46). The characters given in the text are from Ms. η. Ms. δ reads:

³⁶ אַמִּינִטוֹן for ἀμιάντος i.e. "asbestos." Properly an adjective meaning "undefiled." Asbestos was used to fashion magical chains. Cf. PGM XIII:300; and the Fifth Firmament, line 40 and note 11 (p.76).

for they come great in stature with sparks of light upon their eyelids. Those who stand below are unable to look at their appearance and those, too, who stand above are frightened by their appearance; for they turn to every side and above, and they move in all four directions.³⁸

If you wish to expel from the city every dangerous wild animal, whether lion, or wolf, or bear, or leopard, or (if you wish to quell) a river or sea which is rising and washing against buildings, (do the following). (For the wild animals) make a bronze image in the likeness of the one (which you desire to expel) and then make an iron lamella and write upon it, on the obverse and reverse, the names of the angels (of the seventh step) and bind it upon (the image) and bury it at the entrance of the city and let its face be facing north. If it is a river or a sea you wish to bind so that it will not come and flood (the city), make a stone image (of a man), write (the names of) these angels on two copper lamellae and place them beneath his heels, and make a marble staff and place it on his shoulder, his right hand grasping the staff and his left hand open and his face towards the water.³⁹

³⁸This implies that the angels can look in all directions at once.

³⁹This image seems to be forbidden by Rabbinic texts. Cf. Mishnah Avodah Zarah 3:1; Maimonides, Mishnah Torah on A.Z. 7:6. Note that there are no spells, rituals, or sacrifices mentioned to be used when employing this figure. Perhaps a later hand has deleted them.

Upon the eighth step stand these:

| | | | | |
|-----|--------|---------|----------|---------|
| | 'BRH | BRQY'L | 'DWN'Y'L | CZRY'L |
| | BRKY'L | CMY'L | QDŠY'L | MRGY'L |
| | PRW'L | PNY'L | MRBNY'L | MRNYS'L |
| 120 | ŠMY'L | C'MNY'L | MTN'L | HWD HWD |

These are they who stand upon the eighth step.⁴⁰

Their appearance is as shining amber, they speak by their deeds, trembling and fire are in their dwelling place, (their presence) is filled with fear.⁴¹ They rule the spirits that wander in the earth, and in a place where their name is invoked an evil spirit cannot appear.

If you wish to drive off an evil spirit so it will not come to a woman when she is in childbirth and so it will not kill
 125 her child, before the woman's pregnancy write (the names of) these angels on a golden lamella and place it in a silver tubular case and let her wear it, and at the time of childbirth take four silver lamellae and write upon them (the names of) the angels and place them in the four sides of the house⁴² and no (evil) spirit will come in.⁴³

⁴⁰The sixteenth, הוּר הוּר, is not an angelic name. It is rather a description of their magnificence. Possibly amend to read הוּר וְהוּר both here and in 2:121.

⁴¹The text says, "they are filled with fear," but the meaning is clearly that they frighten those they encounter.

⁴²Probably the center of the four walls and not the corners.

⁴³Literally "come up," but the meaning is come up into (the house)."

Upon the ninth step stand these:

| | | | | |
|-----|---------|--------|----------|---------|
| | GDWDY'L | SKSY'L | TRSWNY'L | NSHY'L |
| | 'SDD' | RBNY' | HLYL'L | TWQPY'L |
| 130 | SMKY'L | PDH'L | QRB' | SY'L |
| | PR'L | PTHY'L | | |

These are they who stand on the ninth step. Quick and mighty, flying through the air, their strength is a breastplate and they appear to have swords in their hands; prepared for war, grasping bows and holding javelins, they leap forth from the fire. And they have horses of fire, and the harness of their chariots is of fire, and terror goes with them wherever they turn.

If you wish that a man going forth to war be protected from 135 arrow, sword, or any blow, take seven leaves of a bay tree⁴⁴ and write these names on them, two on each and every one of them, and put them in spikenard oil, and on the day he goes forth to war, let him smear (the oil) upon his flesh and upon his sword and his bow and arrows. Again write (the names of the angels) on a silver lamella, put them in a bronze tubular case, and let him tie it over his heart, then no blow will touch him.

⁴⁴Reading ערָא for עָר. Cf. Jastrow, Dictionary 1109; PGM XXIV:15; I:264.

Upon the tenth step stand these:

| | | | | |
|-----|---------|--------|--------|--------|
| 140 | DKRY'L | HRY'L | SBQY'L | 'TKY'L |
| | SMYK'L | MRMW'L | QN'L | SPTP |
| | YH'L | 'LSDQ | 'KPP | cZM'L |
| | MKMYK'L | TRKY'L | TBGY'L | |

These are they who stand on the tenth step.⁴⁵ They have been commanded (to reward) truth. Before them are myriads upon myriads (of angels) holding reed (pens) for fire and writing scrolls uninterruptedly, and recording acquittal for all those who call upon their names, (so that they) will be rescued and saved from forced tribute, the law of the land, and from every death penalty.

145 If you wish to rescue your friend from a bad judgment, or from any difficulty, purify yourself from all impurity, and do not cohabit with a woman for three days; then stand before the sun at the dawn and repeat these names (of these angels) and say:

150 I beseech thee O great angel who art called "sun," who ascend the steps of the firmament, who watch the children of men, that you will perform my request and will bring my words before the King of Kings of Kings, the (Holy One) Blessed be He, to whom I pray concerning the case of N son of N, who is in trouble and has a bad case; and that you will bring over for him, from (God's) presence, something good and a time of relief. Let those who sought to do him evil be ashamed and let him be rescued without injury.

In addition, write (the names of) these angels on a copper lamella and conceal it in the east, so it will be exposed to the sun at sunrise.⁴⁶ Do everything in purity and you will succeed.

⁴⁵For the tenth angel read אֵל צֶדֶק as one word with Ms. ה.

⁴⁶Literally, "at its arising."

Upon the eleventh step stand these:

| | | | | |
|-----|--------|---------|---------|----------|
| 155 | RPDY'L | DMW'L | M'RYNWS | 'MYN'L |
| | SHY'L | CQRY'L | 'DNY'L | RDQY'L |
| | SLMY'L | 'STTY'L | ST'L | 'GLGLTWN |
| | 'RMWT | PRHG'L | NPPMYWT | |

These, their position is upon the eleventh step. There is fear where they stand, a great multitude stationing (themselves) and establishing camps of ministering (angels) in the heaven, for on their command angels of fire run and return, causing (men) to descend from greatness and rise to splendor.

160 They fly to and fro, resuming their places, glorifying their creator and extolling their maker.

If you wish to restore to office one who has fallen from his place, a king, or minister, or governor, or judge, take oil and honey and fine flour and place them in a new glass vial,⁴⁷ and purify yourself from all impurity, and do not eat *nevelah*⁴⁸ and do not touch a woman's bed,⁴⁹ for seven days. Then on the seventh day stand beneath the moon, in its fourteenth, fif-

165 teenth, or sixteenth day,⁵⁰ and take the vial in your hand, and write on it (the names of the angels of) this encampment of the ⁴⁷ פזאלי for φάλη.

⁴⁸ That is meat from an animal which has died from natural causes.

⁵⁰ That is, "on the full moon." It seems to be implied by 2:163 that one may begin preparations on either the seventh, eighth, or ninth, but since 2:172 implies that the adjuration is to be recited on all three days of the full moon, one must begin preparations on the seventh.

(eleventh) step and recite over it seven times, while facing the moon, the names of the angels and say:

170 I bring my petition before you, O Moon, who travel by day and by night with chariots of light and angels of mercy before and behind you. I adjure you by the King who causes you to rise and set, as you are thin and become full and return to your place, so restore N son of N to his place and let him be (again) honored in the eyes of all who see him, and as you have glory in the world, so bestow glory upon him in the eyes of all the children of Adam and Eve, and restore him to his office, and let him rule as at the beginning and let him not move from his position (again).

Do this for him for three days, and afterwards make them⁵¹ into a cake and dry it at night so that the sun does not shine on it, and have him eat it for three days, before sunrise, and bury (the) vial, with the writing still on it,⁵² in his house.

175 Upon the twelfth step stand these:

| | | | |
|---------|-----------|----------|---------|
| 'STRYMY | BR'WT | BMR'WT | DRWDY'L |
| SDRLY'L | TLHBM | BRG'L | PY'L |
| PP'L | YKPTYNY | KLPTWN | BWBWKWK |
| 'WMTWN | 'RTMYKTWN | 'SMYGDWN | SPNYG |
| PRNYG'L | PSYKSWK | T'GYSWN | 'RTLYDY |

180 These, their position is on the twelfth step. Surrounded by righteousness, rays of majesty on their heads, full of understanding, they understand how to praise (the Lord). They stand in two equal companies, half of them singing and the other half answering after them. Their language heals, their speech binds up (wounds), and anything they mention will be successful.

⁵¹ I.e., the oil, honey, and flour.

⁵² Literally, "and vial bury written." One expects "and bury the inscribed vial" in order to parallel 2:165.

If you wish to cure a headache (affecting) half the head⁵³ or to bind or rebuke the spirit causing blindness, take fat that covers the brain of a black ox, and while in (a state of) purity, write on it the names of these angels and place it in a silver tubular case, then bind the tube with seven colors⁵⁴ and place it beside the pain. (In order to succeed) abstain 185 from meat, from wine, from (contact with) the dead, from menstruating women, and from every unclean thing.

⁵³Cf. PGM VII:199.

⁵⁴Cf. PGM VII:271.

(THE THIRD FIRMAMENT)

The third firmament is filled with storerooms of mist from which the winds go forth, and inside it are encampments of thunder from which lightning emanates. Within, three princes sit on their thrones; they and their raiment have an appearance like fire and the appearance of their thrones is like fire, fire that gleams like gold, for they rule over all the angels of fire. They are like fire in their strength and their voices
5 are like the roar of a peal of thunder. And their eyes are like sunbeams, and they rule over the wheels of flame and fire. Moreover, they have wings to fly. The whinnying of their mouths is as horses,¹ their appearance like torches; when they speak they cause trembling, when they shout they cause weakness. They soar in every direction and fly to every corner (of the world).

These are the names of the princes who rule in the habitation² which is the third firmament. The name of the first is YBNY'L, the name of the second is RHTY'L, and the 10 name of the third is DLQY'L. YBNY'L is in charge of all things concerning the igniting and extinguishing of fire. RHTY'L is in charge of every chariot of fire³ causing it to run (successfully) or to fail.⁴ DLQY'L is in charge of flames of fire, to kindle or quench (them).

¹Cf. Nah 2:5.

²מִעֲוָן, i.e., habitation, temple, place.

³The chariots of fire are the heavenly fires over which these princes rule. The circling celestial bodies are viewed as the circling chariots of the hippodrome. Thus RHTY'L appears as the ruler of chariot races and his name (RHT = run) indicates that he was created for this function. The association of RHTY'L with the other angels of fire comes through Helios who drove a fiery chariot and team and was therefore the most conspicuous of charioteers and thus became the patron of their profession.

These are the names of the angels who serve YBNY'L:

If you wish to extinguish (the fire which heats) a bath-house so it will neither flare up nor burn, bring a salamander⁵ and place it in a glass vessel with oil aged for three years. Do not set it upon the ground, but repeat backwards over it seven times during the third hour of the night the name of 20 the overseer and the names of the angels who serve before him, and say:

I adjure you, O salamander, in the name of YBNY'L and in the name of the angels of fire who serve him, just as you were driven from fire, so drive away and extinguish the fire from the bathhouse⁶ of N son of N. And you, angels of fire, all of whose deeds pertain to fire, do not permit fire to enter or warm this bathhouse, but stand on the gates of his (the owner's) house and enter it, and make it like cold snow⁷ or cold water.

⁴Literally, "stumble." The author is writing of chariots but thinking of horses.

⁵אֱלִיָּהוּ for σαλαμάνδρα. The salamander is well known in the ancient world as being associated with fire. Cf. Ginzberg, Legends 5.52, n. 157f.

⁶Deleting טִלְחָה, i.e., "blazing" since the purpose was to prevent ignition and the adjective implies the bathhouse is already ablaze.

⁷Cf. Prov 25:13.

Then take the flask of oil and put some of it on the four corners of each and every room. If you wish to undo the spell, take some of the remaining oil and stand facing the sun and repeat the name of YBNY'L and the names of the angels who serve him and say:

30 I adjure you, angel of fire and angel of conflagration, that you will undo what I have bound and will permit the angels standing at the gates of the bathhouse of N son of N to ignite and kindle its fire as before.

Then take the flask of oil and pour (some of it) in the four corners of each room and the fire will ignite and burn.

If you wish to race horses, (even) when they are exhausted, so that they will not stumble in their running, that they will be swift as the wind, and the foot of no living thing will pass them, and they will win popularity in their running, take a silver lamella and write upon it the names of the horses and the names of the angels and the name of the prince⁹ who is over them and say:

40 I adjure you angels of running, who run amid the stars, that you will gird with strength and courage the horses that N is racing and his charioteer¹⁰ who is racing them. Let them run and not become weary nor stumble. Let them run and be swift as an eagle. Let no animals stand before them,¹¹ and let no other magic or witchcraft affect them.

beloved or to your friend, for example, to fill a house with fire which will not burn, take a root¹³ of a wild plant¹⁴ and put it on burning coals and as the smoke rises in the house, 50 recite the names of the angels and the name of their overseer, who is DLQY'L. When the smoke rises seven times, and when the smoke will be....¹⁵ all those who see it will see it as fire. When you recite the names of the angels say:

55 I adjure you, O angels cloaked in fire, by Him who is all fire, who sits upon a throne of fire, and whose ministers are a flaming fire,¹⁶ and encampments of fire serve before Him. By His great name I adjure you, that you show me this great miracle and fill this house with your fire. Let me and all with me see this great miracle and not be afraid.

When you finish your words, you will see the house filled with fire. If you wish to cause (the fire) to subside speak the adjuration backwards and say:

Angels of fire, extinguish, extinguish at once, hurry, make haste.¹⁷

How great are your works O Lord, you have made all of them in wisdom.¹⁸

¹³Reading עקר for עגר.

¹⁴אגריאנופוריס for άγρυλοφορος.

¹⁵The text seems corrupt. We seem led to understand, "and when the smoke will be (all that can be seen) all those who see it will see it as fire."

¹⁶Cf. Ps 104:4

¹⁷Cf. 1 Sam 20:38

¹⁸Cf. Ps 104:24. This is the end of the Third Firmament and not part of the adjuration.

(THE FOURTH FIRMAMENT)

The fourth firmament is pitched¹ upon a storm wind, and stands on pillars of fire, and is held up by crowns of flame,² and full of treasuries of strength, also storehouses of dew. As each of its corners are swift angels running with each other, prancing, prancing.³

Within are seven rivers of fire and water, and along them, on both sides, stand innumerable angels. On one side stand 5 angels of fire that burn with an incandescent flame and on the other side angels of cold wrapped in hailstones. Neither do the (angels of cold) quench (the angels of fire) nor do (the angels of fire) ignite the (angels of cold). These immerse themselves in the rivers of fire and those immerse themselves in the rivers of water,⁴ and they all recite and chant⁵ songs and praises to the Life of the World for He created them to glorify His power.

Within the (fourth) firmament is the lovely bridal chamber of the sun, filled with light and all aflame. The angels of fire, girded with strength, surround him (the sun) and lead him 10 during the day. Then the angels of water, their bodies like ¹That is, it is pitched like a tent upon its posts.

²Greek capitals on columns seem implied.

³Cf. Judg 5:22.

⁴The immersion is for ritual purification. Presumably they immerse themselves in the river of their own substance, rather than the opposite, but the text leaves the question open.

⁵They thus alternate like a choir. The singing thus seems to be antiphonal.

⁷Apparently each of the thirty-one named here and below is a leader of others. Note the first angel, ἄβρασαξ, is a transliteration of the correct spelling.

These are the princes of the encampments who lead him at night.

25 If you wish to view the sun during the day, seated in his chariot and ascending; guard yourself, take care, and keep pure for seven days from all (impure) food, from all (impure) drink, and from every unclean thing.⁸ Then on the seventh day stand facing (the sun) when he rises and burn incense of spices weighing three shekels before him, and invoke seven times the names of the angels that lead him during the day. Then if you
30 are not answered after these seven times, go and invoke them in reverse order seven times, and say:

I adjure you, angels that lead the sun in the power of your strength on the heavenly paths to illuminate the world, by the One whose voice shakes the earth, who moves mountains in His anger, who calms the sea with His power, who shakes the pillars of the world with His glance, who sustains everything with His arm, who is hidden from the eyes of all the living, who sits upon the throne of greatness of the kingdom of the glory of His holiness, and who moves through the entire world; I repeat (your names) and adjure you by His great, fearful, powerful, majestic, forceful, mighty, holy, strong, wondrous, secret, exalted, and glorious name;⁹ that you will do my will and desire at this time and season, and will remove the radiance of the sun¹⁰ so I may see him face to face as he is in his bridal chamber. Let me not catch fire from your fire and give me¹¹ permission to do my will.

⁸Abstinence from impure food and drink seems implied rather than a fast. This creates a parallel to "unclean things" and follows the same pattern as previous commands of abstinence found in SHR.

⁹For an example of this type of listing see BT Berakhot 33b.

¹⁰The rays of the sun obscure the sun angel.

¹¹Reading וְלִי for לִי with Ms. 7 .

At the completion of your adjuration, you will see him in his bridal chamber and you can ask him (to foretell questions) of death or life, good or evil. And if you wish to release him, repeat the adjuration and say:

I adjure you that you return the radiance of the sun to its place as in the beginning.

Then the sun will go on his way.

If you wish to see the sun during the night, proceeding (on his course) in the north,¹² purify (yourself) for three weeks of days from all (impure) food and drink, and from every unclean thing. Then stand during the third hour¹³ in the night watches, wrapped in white garments, and say twenty-one times¹⁴ the name of the sun and the names of the angels that lead him at night, and then say:

I adjure you, angels that fly through the air of the firmament, by the One who sees but is not seen, by the King who uncovers all hidden things and sees all secret things, by the God who knows what is in darkness, and who transforms the shadows into morning,¹⁵ and who illumines the night as the day, before whom all secrets are as clear as the sun, for whom there is nothing too difficult.¹⁶ In the name of the Holy King who walks upon the wings of the wind,¹⁷ by the letters of the complete name that was revealed to Adam in the Garden of Eden, (by)¹⁸ the Ruler of the planets,¹⁹ and the

Let me see him perfectly today, and let me ask him what I wish, and let him speak with me as a man speaks with his friend and tell me the secret of the depths, and make known to me hidden things, and let no evil thing happen to me.

When you finish speaking, you will hear a peal of thunder from the north and you will see something like lightning come forth and light up the earth before you. And after you see him, you will assuredly bow down to the ground and fall upon your face to the earth and pray this prayer:

65 Holy Helios who rises in the east, good mariner, trustworthy leader of the sun's rays, reliable (witness), who of old didst establish the mighty wheel (of the heavens), holy orderer, ruler of the axis (of the heaven), Lord, Brilliant Leader, King, Soldier.²¹ I, N son of N, present my supplication before you, that you will appear to me without (causing me) fear, and you will be revealed to me without causing me terror, and you will conceal nothing from me and will tell me truthfully all that I desire.

²⁰Reading $\text{οἱ ἡλιος καὶ ὁ μῆσς}$ for οἱ ἡλιος .

²¹The prayer to Helios here is transliterated into Hebrew from Greek. Cf. Margalioth, Sepher 12 and 99f. The following transcription differs from Margalioth in the underlined words: εὐσεβῆς ἀνατολικὸν ἥλιος, ναύτης, ἀγαθός, πιστός ἀκτῶν κορυφαίος, εὐπιστός, ὃς πάλαι τροχὸν ὀβριμον καθίστης, κοσμητὴς ἅγιος.

πολοκράτωρ, κύριε, πομπὸς εὐφωτος, τύραννος, στρατιώτης.

Then stand up and you will see (the sun) in the north proceeding to the east.²² After this, put your hands behind you, and bow your head low, and ask whatever you desire. And after you have questioned him, lift your eyes toward heaven and say:

70 'WRPLY'L, 'WRPLY'L,²³ I adjure you by the One who formed you, for His splendor and His glory, to illuminate His world, and who gave you rulership of the day, that you will not harm me,²⁴ and will not terrify me. ²⁷This is the conclusion of the Fourth Firmament and not part of the preceeding adjuration.

(THE FIFTH FIRMAMENT)

The fifth firmament is exceedingly exalted. It is magnificent in appearance, for within it are clouds of splendor. It is filled with angels of majesty, and within it (their knees) knock with fear. They are stationed in troop after troop, glorifying (the One) who carved them into flame. The sound of their running is like the crashing of the sea, and their walk is like wheels of thunder. Therein, moreover, are twelve princes of glory seated upon magnificent thrones, the appearance of their 5 thrones is like that of fire. They quarter the heavens at the middle by facing the four directions of the world, three by three toward each direction.¹ And (the) angels run when they send them, and their roaring shakes the world. Lightnings issue from their breath and they have wings of fire and are wreathed with crowns of fire, and the (fifth) firmament shines from the lustre of their faces. They are in charge of the twelve months of the year and understand what will be in each and every month, and without them nothing can happen, for they were created for 10 this. Each is stationed over his month² since they make known month by month that which will be in each and every year.

These are the names of the twelve princes of glory of the fifth firmament:

| | | | |
|---------------------|--------|------------------------|---------------------|
| Š ^c PY'L | DGHY'L | DYDN'WR | T ^C NBWN |
| TRWRGR | MWR'L | PHDRWN | YLDNG |
| 'NDGNWR | MPNY'L | HŠ ^c NDNRWS | 'BRKY'L |

¹This seems slightly redundant. Perhaps one λ should be deleted, thus reading "three toward each direction.

²Cf. Isa 47:13.

These are they who are in charge of the twelve months of the year, from the month of Nisan to the month of Adar, each in his month, as they are written.³

15 If you wish to know in which month you will be taken from the world, or what will occur in each and every month, or in which month there will be rain, whether the grain will be plentiful, whether the olive tree will drop its fruit, or in which month kings will set forth for war, or in which month there will be pestilence among men and cattle, or in which month an epidemic will fall among men, or whatever you wish (to know); ask them and you will know.

If you wish to know in which month you will be taken from 20 the world;⁴ take refined gold lamellae and make from them twelve pieces of foil,⁵ then write on each of them the name of an angel and the name of his month. Then take good oil that has aged for seven years and throw all the pieces of foil into it and recite this adjuration seven times over the oil, and say:

25 I adjure you, O angels of wisdom and understanding, by the One who spoke and the world came into being, by the name of the God of Truth, the majestic and glorious, The King high and exalted, strong and powerful, mighty and wondrous, God of all creatures, Refuge of Hosts, righteous, pure and upright and trustworthy, and by the name (of Him) who established you over all the months of the year, He who sits in hidden heights,⁶ who ³This probably means "as they are written above," i.e., the preceeding list gives them in the order of their months from Nisan to Adar.

⁴Cf. PGM I:188; XIII:711.

⁶Cf. Ps 91:1.

30 reveals secret mysteries, who rules over death and life, who is King forever and ever and ever, who is established for all eternity. By this adjuration, the great, powerful, strong, fearful, terrible, wondrous, pure, and holy, I adjure you that you will truthfully make known to me the month in which I will be taken, and tell me my fate,⁷ in accordance to my request.

Then put the oil in a new glass vessel (and place it) under the stars for seven nights without exposing it to the sun. And on the seventh night, get up in the middle of the night, and look at the oil and see which month is written upon whichever piece of foil floats on the surface of the oil. In that month it is your fate to be taken. But before you perform this rite, 35 purify yourself from all impurity for three weeks of days, and guard yourself from all (meat of) small animals⁸ and from all that yields blood (when slaughtered) even fish, and do not drink wine, and do not come near a woman, and do not touch a grave, be wary of nocturnal pollution, and walk in humility and prayer, and make your prayers and supplications long, and devote your heart to the fear of heaven, and you will succeed.

After the rite, take the oil and be careful of it for it has great healing power. Make a ring of purified silver, with a large hollow space within.⁹ Take all the pieces of foil and asbestos,¹¹ and seal (it) and place it on your finger; then no evil eye and no evil spirit will come near you, and no evil thing will have dominion in (your) house. In the oil is a great (power of) healing to the sick.

¹⁰ פרח לבן is literally "white flower," and is possibly Greek in origin. Cf. PGM XII:356. Possibly an extract or wine made from the flower.

¹¹ אמיינטון for ἀμύαντος . Cf. 2:101 and note 36, Second Firmament (p.52).

(THE SIXTH FIRMAMENT)

As for the sixth firmament, its storehouses are full of honey.¹ Within is the place prepared for the spirits of the righteous. Light and fire encompass it and within are myriads, thousands upon thousands,² and armies and encampments (of angels) standing in awe and trembling. And on the head of each of them is (what) appears as a crown of fire, and their fire has the appearance of gold. The regiments of the army march within (the sixth firmament), and their strength is like an 5 inextinguishable fire and they are in fear from dread of their rulers. For two officers rule over them, one in the west of the (sixth) firmament and one in the east. And before the armies of spirits are myriads of angels created from flame and burning like fire. Their bodies are like fiery coals and upon coals of fire is their station. And they tremble and shake to sing forth³ songs and praises to the Exalted One of the Universe, who has prepared them to praise His honor and honor His praise.

10 These are the holy angels who rule over all the encampments of the sixth firmament. The name of the first is 'PRKSY⁴ and the name of the second is TWQPYRS. And all the princes of the encampments serve before them.

 to Moses face to face, by the Lord who brings 40 princes to naught,¹³ by the Rock whose hand is sufficient to save and to rescue, by the One who commanded and ignited the camp of Sennacharib,¹⁴ by His name and by its letters; I repeat (your names)¹⁵ and adjure you that you come and stand with me, to aid at this time in every place that I will go. Be seen with me as a great army, in all your might and with the strength of your spears, and let all who see me, from near or far, and all who come to fight great fear of your terrible appearance.¹⁶ And let them not be able to harm me or approach me, let fear and terror fall upon them¹⁷ and let fear of me fall upon them and all the children of Adam and Eve and upon every dangerous animal, and let them (all) tremble and recoil from before me.

When you finish speaking the adjuration, you will see something like fog and smoke before you. Then take the ring from your mouth and put it on your finger. And when you come to your house and wish to release (the angels), return the ring to your angels in reverse order and thereafter say:

(THE SEVENTH FIRMAMENT)

The seventh firmament, all of it is sevenfold light, and from its light all the (seven) heavens shine. Within it is the throne of glory, set on the four glorious ḥayot.¹ Also within it are the storehouses of lives,² and the storehouses of souls. There is no calculation or limit to the great light within it, and the fullness of the light illumines all the earth. The angels are fixed in pillars of light, and their light is as the light of the brilliant star³ and cannot be extinguished, for 5 their eyes are like flashes of lightning, and they stand upon the margins of (the divine) light, and glorify in fear the One who sits upon the throne of glory. For He alone sits in the heaven of His holiness, seeking out judgment, evening the scales of justice; judging in truth and speaking in righteousness.

And before Him the books of fire are open

And from before Him flow rivers of fire.⁴

When He rises⁵ the gods are afraid,

And when He roars the pillars shake,

To search and to know the power of the fear of His name.

Blessed be His name in the dwelling place of His splendor,

And blessed in the beauty of His strength.

Blessed be His name in the storehouses of snow,

And blessed in the rivers of flames.

Blessed be His name in the mists of brilliance,

And blessed in the clouds of glory.

35 Blessed be His name in the myriads of chariots,²¹

And blessed in the thousands upon thousands (of His warriors).

Blessed be His name in the chains of fire,

And blessed in the ropes of flame.

Blessed be His name in the peals of thunder,

And blessed in the bolts of lightning.

Blessed be His name in the mouths of all on earth,

And blessed in the depths of the earth.

Blessed be His name amid all the deserts,

And blessed amid the waves of the sea.

Blessed be His name alone on His throne,

²⁰Cf. Prov 8:18.

²¹Cf. Ps 68:18.

And blessed in dwelling places of His majesty,
Blessed be His name in the mouth of all living,

And blessed in the song of every creature.

40 Blessed be the Lord forever,

AMEN, AMEN, HALLELUJAH.

Preface

This volume of translations of the Greek magical papyri has been a long time in the making. The project began in a planning colloquium at Claremont, California, May 31 to June 4, 1978. At this meeting, a team of scholars resolved to produce this translation volume as part of a research project on the Greek magical papyri, the project as a whole being designed as a contribution to the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti.

The translations turned out to be more difficult and time-consuming than had been expected. Since it seemed desirable to expand the Preisendanz collection to include as many newly discovered and newly published magical papyri as possible, the number of papyri increased from 81 to 131. In this respect, the translation volume differs from the Preisendanz volumes. It differs also in that while Preisendanz reproduced only the Greek sections of bilingual Greek-Demotic papyri, this volume includes the full translations of all bilingual texts.

All translations are based on the Greek, Demotic, and Coptic texts. PGM I–LXXXI follow the Preisendanz edition, while PGM LXXXII–CXXX and PDM Supplement follow their critical editions, which are indicated in the notes. Translators were free to make changes in the texts when they thought it necessary; these changes are also indicated in the notes. Where earlier translations exist, they have been consulted, but all the translations included in this volume are new.

Unlike the Preisendanz edition, this new volume does not have an apparatus criticus. Instead, it has notes explaining difficulties in the text and the translation, and notes alerting readers to important information. It has been necessary to limit these notes to a degree which many readers may find drastic, but the team decided not to attempt what could only be a lengthy commentary on the papyri. Instead, they agreed that other research tools should be developed to encourage and assist further research on the papyri. The following research tools are presently being prepared:

1. An index of Greek words is being prepared by Professor Edward O'Neil.
2. A subject index based on the English translation is being worked out by Ms. Marjorie Menaul.
3. A collection of parallels between the magical papyri and early Christian literature is being prepared by the research team. This part of the project is most directly related to the task of the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti, namely, the collection of parallels from ancient literature to the New Testament and the other Christian literature up to approximately A.D. 150.
4. A comprehensive bibliography, including editions and investigations of the magical papyri, is being assembled by Professor David Hellholm.

The present volume would not have come about without the generous support of institutions and individuals. The National Endowment for the Humanities has funded the entire venture from the beginning by substantial grants from 1978 to 1983. Without this financial assistance, the project would simply not exist; scholarly team projects of this magnitude cannot live on enthusiasm alone. Apart from the purely financial aspect, the officers of the NEH have helped more than they may realize by their quiet encouragement and confidence expressed over a number of years.

A great deal of assistance also came from the institutions where the project was initiated and where it is now based. These include the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity at Claremont, where the project was based during the years 1977 and 1978, and the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion at the University of Chicago, where it has been from 1978 to the present. Thanks are especially due to the officers of these institutions, Professors James M. Robinson and James Brashler of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity; and Professors Joseph M. Kitagawa, formerly dean, and Franklin I. Gamwell, currently dean, of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, as well as to Martin E. Marty, program coordinator for the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion of the University of Chicago.

The present project could not have succeeded without the unfailing loyalty and generosity of the members of the team, both contributors and consultants. Among these should be named Professors Jan Bergman, Walter Burkert, Franco Maltomini, and P. J. Sijpesteijn. The research specialists of the project, Professor William C. Grese (1977–80), and Mr. Roy Kotansky and Ms. Marjorie Menaul (1980–83), not only helped to carry the burdens of administration and editorship, but made substantial contributions to the project as well. To all of them sincere thanks are due.

Table of Spells

This list of spells presupposes the divisions in the texts and the identification of section titles made by the editor. In the Demotic spells, section titles are sometimes indicated by red lettering (but this is not done consistently). If no titles are given, this fact is stated (No title) and a short description of content is added.

Explanation of References and Textual Signs

PGM I.
262–347

References cited thus refer to translations of the corresponding Greek text of Preisendanz's Papyri Graecae Magicae, with each roman numeral (including those with appended letters, e.g., PGM Va) corresponding to a separate papyrus manuscript. Roman numerals after PGM LXXXI refer to texts whose translations are based on editions published since, and sometimes overlooked by, Preisendanz. The bibliographies of these editions are mentioned in the introductory note (*) to each spell. Arabic numerals usually delineate the compass of individual spells within the papyrus manuscript. The use of the separate designations for each independent spell or charm represents a new feature designed to enable easy identification and ready reference to an individual spell.

PDM xxi. 6–20

References listed thus refer to Demotic (bilingual) spells corresponding to the texts whose editions are listed in the introductory note (*) to each spell. PDM stands for Papyri Demoticae Magicae, referring to this volume and not to be confused with DMP, an abbreviation for Griffith and Thompson, Demotic Magical Papyri, a work often referred to in the notes. Lower-case roman numerals are used simply to avoid confusion with spells labeled PGM. Arabic numerals are used as above.

[PGM XII.
445–48]

PGM references bracketed thus come immediately after references for bilingual Greek sections with the given spell. The references correspond to the appropriate Greek portions in Preisendanz, whose edition contained only the Greek sections of the Greek/Demotic spells. Since this translation volume contains all the Demotic spells, Preisendanz's numbering system is retained, but it is subsumed under the new Demotic collation.

A,b,c

Texts set in roman type represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Greek.

A,b,c

Texts set with leader dots beneath represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Demotic (Egyptian).

A,b,c

Texts with a thin underscore represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Old Coptic. Coptic is found both in the Greek texts of Preisendanz's edition and as glosses in portions of the Demotic/Greek bilingual spells; however, the purely Coptic magical spells form a separate corpus not dealt with in this volume.

- * An asterisk introduces an independent spell or a spell that contains most of the constituent parts necessary to effect the whole charm, though organic connections with adjacent spells can be recognized (e.g., spells entitled "Another . . .," or the like). The asterisk directs the reader to the contributor, whose name is given at the end of the spell. Some introductory comments may be found here as well. Bibliographical data, if appropriate, may also be listed.
- Tr.: This abbreviation stands for "translator" or "transcriber" (if the text contains no recognizable words that can be translated).
- Victory spell: Phrases set in roman boldface type refer to general titles of charms which usually stand at the beginning of the spell and which are often followed by one or more subtitles. Many spells do not possess a title, either because of a scribal omission or because it has been lost in a lacuna in the text.
- Spell to be spoken* Phrases set in italic boldface type refer to various subtitles and a number of types of rubrics (subsumed under the main title) that function in a titular sense to introduce a component feature of a spell. These may introduce ingredients, additional instructions, invocations, figures, magical names and characters, and so on, which are mentioned in the instructions in the text. In a long, multifunctional spell (cf. PGM IV. 2145–2240 and PGM XIII. 1–343), general titles are subordinate to the larger title, which describes an often elaborate ritual. In description, these general titles are identical to the main titles of most spells but are set as subtitles since they usually depend on a prior set of conditions to guarantee their efficacy.
- IAŌ SABAŌTH
ADŌNAI Small capital letters indicate magical names (voces magicae) which are usually untranslatable and often meaningless to the reader. In some instances, small capital letters preserve recognizable Greek, Egyptian, or Semitic words that merit special attention. Portions of texts whose fragmentary nature precludes the possibility of proper translation, but which may in fact have been readable in the original, are also set in small capitals.
- A diagonal slash indicates every fifth line of translated text, corresponding to the number given in the left-hand margin. Usually these are numbered consecutively until a new papyrus number is introduced.
- 35 [5] A bracketed number alongside the regular number refers to the line number of the original edition (in a Greek/Demotic text). Occasionally at the beginning the column number and line are also cited (e.g., [Col. III,5]).
- 30 (4) A number in parentheses refers to the original line of Preisendanz in a Greek/Demotic spell. The number corresponds to the PGM reference given within the bracketed number at the head of the spell.

- ... An ellipsis in the body of the text refers to a lost portion regardless of the size of the lacuna. Some punctuation (e.g., a comma or a period) may also be added at the end of the ellipsis.
- [spell] Brackets enclosing words indicate that the words are not preserved in the original text. These include (1) suggested restorations of lacunae; (2) editorial expansions of the text to elucidate the sense of the original language; and (3) phrases traditionally set off by pointed brackets ⟨ ⟩, namely, modern corrections to scribal omissions or errors. Scholars interested in determining which use the bracketed text refers to are recommended to consult the texts of the original editions. As a general rule, bracketed texts will not divide a word, but will surround the whole word if its reading is fairly uncertain.
- (add the usual) Parentheses enclosing words simply indicate material in the original texts best understood as parenthetical comments of the ancient authors and redactors.
- “Come to me . . .” Quotation marks enclosing words indicate material that is spoken (or intended to be spoken) or written (or intended to be written). Material not enclosed in quotation marks usually refers to parts of a formulary that contain instructions and directions apart from the material to be written or spoken. Such instructions are peculiar to the papyri that have preserved magical formularies, whereas the actual amulets and phylacteries found on papyrus usually contain simple invocations that have been transcribed as a result of following the instructions in such magical handbooks.
- Incantations originally written in Greek meter are set as verse, that is, they are indented en bloc, with the first letter of each line capitalized. In cases where the meter falters within such a hymnic portion, the original margin is restored to indicate prose.
- NN In the magical formularies, this abbreviation stands for a name or names to be inserted by the reader, the names of the persons against or for whom the magic is to be carried out. In the case of “(the) NN matter,” the reader understands that specific requests are to be named at this point.
- [R.K.R.] At the end of each footnote, the bracketed initials refer to the contributing scholar responsible for the material immediately preceding. Notes that carry no initials represent the joint efforts of the contributors and scholars.

Introduction to the Greek Magical Papyri

Hans Dieter Betz

"The Greek magical papyri" is a name given by scholars to a body of papyri from Greco-Roman Egypt containing a variety of magical spells and formulae, hymns and rituals. The extant texts are mainly from the second century B.C. to the fifth century A.D. To be sure, this body of material represents only a small number of all the magical spells that once existed.¹ Beyond these papyri we possess many other kinds of material: artifacts, symbols and inscriptions on gemstones, on ostraka and clay bowls, and on tablets of gold, silver, lead, tin and so forth.²

I

The history of the discovery of the Greek magical papyri is a fascinating subject.³ We know from literary sources that a large number of magical books in which spells were collected existed in antiquity. Most of them, however, have disappeared as the result of systematic suppression and destruction. The episode about the burning of the magical books in Ephesus in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 19:10) is well known and typical of many such instances. According to Suetonius,⁴ Augustus ordered 2,000 magical scrolls to be burned in the year 13 B.C. Indeed, the first centuries of the Christian era saw many burnings of books, often of magical books, and not a few burnings that included the magicians themselves.

As a result of these acts of suppression, the magicians and their literature went underground. The papyri themselves testify to this by the constantly recurring admonition to keep the books secret.⁵ Yet the systematic destruction of the magical literature over a long period of time resulted in the disappearance of most of the original texts by the end of antiquity. To us in the twentieth century, terms such as "underground literature" and "suppressed literature" are well known as descriptions of contemporary phenomena. We also know that such literature is extremely important for the understanding of what people are really thinking and doing in a particular time, geographical area, or cultural context. Magical beliefs and practices can hardly be overestimated in their importance for the daily life of the people. The religious beliefs and practices of most people were identical with some form of magic, and the neat distinctions we make today between approved and disapproved forms of religion—calling the former "religion" and "church" and the latter "magic" and "cult"—did not exist in antiquity except among a few intellectuals.⁶

Thus the suppression of this magical literature has deprived us of one of our most important sources of ancient religious life. Modern views of Greek and Roman religions have long suffered from certain deformities because they were unconsciously shaped by the only remaining sources: the literature of the cultural elite, and the archeological remains of the official cults of the states and cities.

But not everything was lost.⁷ At the end of antiquity, some philosophers and theologians, astrologers and alchemists collected magical books and spells that were still available. Literary writers included some of the material in their works, if only to make fun of it. It is known that philosophers of the Neopythagorean and Neoplatonic schools, as well as Gnostic and Hermetic groups, used magical books and hence must have possessed copies. But most of their material vanished and what we have left are their quotations.

The Greek magical papyri are, however, original documents and primary sources. Their discovery is as important for Greco-Roman religions as is the discovery of the Qumran texts for Judaism or the Nag Hammadi library for Gnosticism.⁸

Like these manuscript discoveries, the discovery of the Greek magical papyri was and often still is the outcome of sheer luck and almost incredible coincidences. In the case of the major portion of the collection, the so-called Anastasi collection, the discovery and rescue is owed to the efforts (and, if one may use the term, cooperation) of two individuals separated by more than a thousand years: the modern collector d'Anastasi and the original collector at Thebes.

In the nineteenth century, there was among the "diplomatic" representatives at the court in Alexandria a man who called himself Jean d'Anastasi (1780?–1857). Believed to be Armenian by birth, he ingratiated himself enough with the pasha to become the consular representative of Sweden.⁹ It was a time when diplomats and military men often were passionate collectors of antiquities, and M. d'Anastasi happened to be at the right place at the right time. He succeeded in bringing together large collections of papyri from Egypt, among them sizable magical books, some of which he said he had obtained in Thebes.¹⁰ These collections he shipped to Europe, where they were auctioned off and bought by various libraries: the British Museum in London, the Bibliothèque Nationale and the Louvre in Paris, the Staatliche Museum in Berlin, and the Rijksmuseum in Leiden. Another papyrus was acquired by Jean François Mimaud (1774–1837), also a diplomat, whose acquisition ended up in the Bibliothèque Nationale (PGM III).¹¹ Unfortunately, we know almost nothing about the circumstances of the actual findings. But it is highly likely that many of the papyri from the Anastasi collection came from the same place, perhaps a tomb or a temple library.¹² If this assumption is correct, about half a dozen of the best-preserved and largest extant papyri may have come from the collection of one man in Thebes. He is of course unknown to us, but we may suppose that he collected the magical material for his own use. Perhaps he was more than a magician. We may attribute his almost systematic collections of magica to a man who was also a scholar,¹³ probably philosophically inclined, as well as a bibliophile and archivist concerned about the preservation of this material.¹⁴

Although the person who collected the Anastasi papyri remains unknown, comparable figures are known from later Egyptian literature. In the Demotic Papyrus no. 30646 in the Cairo Museum, there appears Prince Khamwas, the fourth son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah in Memphis. This legendary figure belongs to the Stories of the High Priests of Memphis, published by Francis Llewelyn Griffith,¹⁵ stories that in many ways can serve as illustrative companions to the Greek magical papyri. Miriam Lichtheim has given this summary portrait in the third volume of her Ancient Egyptian Literature:

Prince Khamwas, son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah at Memphis, was a very learned scribe and magician who spent his time in the study of ancient monuments and books. One day he was told of the existence of a book of magic written by the god Thoth himself and kept in the tomb of a prince named Naneferkaptah (Na-nefer-ka-ptah), who lived in the distant past and was buried somewhere in the vast necropolis of Memphis. After a long search, Prince Khamwas, accompanied by his foster brother Inaros, found the tomb of Naneferkaptah and entered it. He saw the magic book, which radiated a strong light, and tried to seize it. But the spirits of Naneferkaptah and of his wife Ahwere rose up to defend their cherished possession. . . .¹⁶

The collection of the Anastasi papyri, if it was brought together by one person, may have been buried with him, either in his tomb or in the rubble of collapsed buildings. At any rate, when d'Anastasi came to Thebes and the papyri were offered to him, he sensed their value and acquired them, thus saving them from destruction.

It took almost another century, however, before scholars learned to appreciate the value of the papyri and started investigating them. It is noteworthy that the auction catalog of d'Anastasi's collection calls the material simply "fromage mystique."¹⁷ Until the middle of the nineteenth century, the papyri were stored in the museums simply as curiosities.

Scholarly investigations began when the great Dutch scholar Caspar Jacob Christiaan Reuvs (1793–1835) described some of the content of the Leiden papyrus J 395 (PGM XIII) in his Lettres à M. Letronne published in 1830.¹⁸ This work was reviewed almost immediately by the German historian of religion Karl Otfried Müller (1797–1840), who also translated Reuvs's excerpts into German.¹⁹ But Reuvs died before his edition of the Leiden papyri could appear. It was forty years before another Dutch scholar, the Egyptologist Conrad Leemans (1809–93), published the edition (PGM XII, XIII)²⁰ together with a Latin translation (1885).²¹

The first publication, however, is due to the efforts of the British scholar Charles Wycliffe Goodwin (1817–78), who published one of the papyri (PGM V) together with an English translation and commentary for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society in 1853.²² Then the German philologist Gustav Parthey (1798–1872) edited the two papyri from Berlin in 1865 (PGM I, II).²³ A very important new phase began when the Viennese papyrologist Carl Wessely (1860–1931) published in 1888 a transcription of the great magical papyrus of Paris (PGM IV), the London papyrus (PGM V), and the Mimaout papyrus (PGM III),²⁴ followed in 1889 by corrections.²⁵ In 1893 both Wessely²⁶ and Frederick George Kenyon (1863–1952)²⁷ independently edited and published the magical papyri of London (PGM VII–X). The last major papyrus was published in 1925 by the Norwegian scholar Samson Eitrem (1872–1966),²⁸ who had acquired in Egypt a valuable magical scroll with many drawings (PGM XXXVI).

With these important publications, the major pieces of the Greek magical papyri known to this period had become available. It seems to have been a suggestion first made by the great scholar of Greek religion, Albrecht Dieterich (1866–1908), that all the available papyri should be published in a handy study edition. But this idea developed only gradually after Dieterich began teaching a seminar on the subject of the magical papyri at the University of Heidelberg in 1905.²⁹

Today it is astonishing to learn that teaching such a seminar at that time was quite a daring enterprise. Magic was so utterly despised by historians and philologists that the announcement of the seminar did not mention the word "magic" but was simply phrased as "Selected Pieces from the Greek Papyri."³⁰

How far the dislike of the magical papyri could go is illustrated by a remark made by Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf: "I once heard a well-known scholar complain that these papyri were found because they deprived antiquity of the noble splendor of classicism."³¹

Dieterich,³² however, was at the edge of a wave of interest generated by the new discipline of history of religions. His seminar therefore had a surprising attraction for students, some of whom wrote their dissertations on related subjects and became contributors to the study edition. The plan for such a study edition was seriously threatened by Dieterich's sudden death on 6 May 1908, but the work was taken over by Dieterich's students, foremost of whom was Richard Wünsch, chief editor. Adam Abt, Ludwig Fahz, Adolf Erman, Georg Möller, and other contributors³³ stepped in to carry on the work.

When the body of the material of PGM I–IV was almost ready, World War I broke out and interrupted the work. Wünsch, Abt, and Möller were killed in the war. Despite these terrible losses and the desperate economic situation following the war, the publisher, B. G. Teubner of Leipzig, did not give up the project, but decided to start over. The edition was entrusted to Karl Preisendanz (1883–1968), another of Dieterich's former students.³⁴ Scholars at that time faced difficulties scarcely conceivable to us today, yet they persisted. In addition, a remarkable degree of international cooperation existed among the scholars.³⁵ Sam Eitrem from Oslo and Adolf Jacoby from Luxemburg joined the team, and British, French, and Dutch scholars gave their support to the effort. The Notgemeinschaft der Deutschen Wissenschaft as well as other governmental agencies gave financial support, so that despite all the problems the first volume of the first edition of the Papyri Graecae Magicae could appear in 1928, with a second volume following in 1931.³⁶

While all this was happening, new magical papyri were being discovered and published. A third volume, which was also supposed to contain extensive indexes, therefore became necessary. But this volume never appeared, for World War II broke out.

Despite the war, the work had progressed to the actual production of galley proofs, with the preface dated "Pentecost, 1941,"³⁷ when on 4 December 1943 the publishing house of Teubner in Leipzig was bombed and everything was destroyed.³⁸ Fortunately, however, the galley proofs survived the war and are at present being used by a number of scholars in the form of xerox copies. When Karl Preisendanz, the editor of the first edition and tireless promoter of the study of the Greek magical papyri before and after World War II, died on 26 April 1968, the publishing house of Teubner, which had in part been relocated in Stuttgart, West Germany, decided to bring out a new edition. This new edition was prepared by Albert Henrichs, a papyrologist from Cologne, who has been on the faculty of Harvard University since 1973.³⁹ It appeared in two volumes in 1973–74.⁴⁰ The first volume is mostly a reprint of the first edition, though many corrections have been made. The second volume, however, is considerably different from the first edition. A number of papyri were reedited completely, and the papyri originally planned to appear in vol. III were added so that vol. II of the 1974 edition contains all pieces up to PGM LXXXI. The idea of a third volume containing the indexes was postponed because all indexes would have to be redone in view of the changes and additions in the material.

II

What is the significance of the Greek magical papyri? Scholars since Albrecht Dieterich have consistently pointed out the importance of the Greek magical papyri to the study of ancient religions; thus we can limit ourselves here to a summary of the issues.⁴¹

Historians of religion are intrigued by the Greek magical papyri for a number of reasons. If, as Dieterich rightly says,⁴² the papyri are a depository of a great religious literature over many centuries, the recovery of the sources becomes a task of primary interest. In fact, throughout these sources we find citations of hymns, rituals, formulae from liturgies otherwise lost, and little bits of mythology called historiolae. These older materials are now embedded in a secondary context, but by careful application of the methods of literary criticism they are often recoverable.⁴³

Taken as a whole, the material presents a plethora of interesting problems for modern scholarship. One must realize first that the material assembled under the name Greek magical papyri represents a collection of texts of diverse origin and nature. This collection includes individual spells and remedies, as well as collections made by ancient magicians, from the early Hellenistic period to late antiquity. Since the material comes from Greco-Roman Egypt, it reflects an amazingly broad religious and cultural pluralism. Not surprising is the strong influence of Egyptian religion throughout the Greek magical papyri, although here the texts nevertheless show a great variety. Expressed in Greek, Demotic, or Coptic, some texts represent simply Egyptian religion. In others, the Egyptian element has been transformed by Hellenistic religious concepts. Most of the texts are mixtures of several religions—Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, to name the most important.

The picture presented by the Greek magical papyri has been changed substantially by the inclusion of the translation of the Demotic magical papyri. In Preisendanz's edition, the Demotic material was deleted, even when it occurred in the same papyrus as Greek sections apparently written by the same scribe. The inclusion of the Demotic material in the present translation raises new and intriguing questions regarding the relationship between the Greek texts and the antecedent Egyptian sources. Further studies must clarify the process of transmission and transformation of these texts. Such studies will gain new insights into the complex phenomena of the hellenization of religious traditions. (See also the Introduction to the Demotic texts below.)

Another interesting problem is posed by the fact that this material from Greco-Roman Egypt contains many sections that are Greek in origin and nature.⁴⁴ How did this older Greek religious literature find its way into Egypt? We do not, and probably never shall, know. In this older material, the Greek gods are alive and well. But Zeus, Hermes, Apollo, Artemis, Aphrodite, and others are portrayed not as Hellenic and aristocratic, as in literature, but as capricious, demonic, and even dangerous, as in Greek folklore.⁴⁵ The gods and their activities resemble those in the popular myths and local cults, as reported by mythographers or by Pausanias. Therefore, strange as it may sound, if we wish to study Greek folk religion, the magical papyri found in Egypt are to be regarded as one of the primary sources.⁴⁶

Questions similar to those appropriate to the study of Greek religion must be raised in view of the material (divine names as well as entire passages) that comes from some form of Judaism. Jewish magic was famous in antiquity,⁴⁷ and more sources have come to light in recent years; but the origin and nature of the sections representing Jewish magic in the Greek magical papyri is far from clear. Did this material actually originate with Jewish magicians? How did it get into the hands of the magicians who wrote the Greek magical papyri? What kind of transformation took place in the material itself? If the texts in question come from Judaism, what type of Judaism do they represent?

The historian of religion will be especially interested in the kind of syncretism represented in the Greek magical papyri.⁴⁸ This syncretism is more than a mixture of diverse elements from Egyptian, Greek, Babylonian, and Jewish religion, with a few sprinkles of Christianity.⁴⁹ Despite the diversity of texts, there is in the whole corpus a tendency toward assimilation and uniformity. Such assimilation and uniformity, however, includes primarily the religious traditions already mentioned: the Romans, although in control of Egypt by the time most of the papyri were written, left only a few traces in the material. Thus the papyri represent a Greco-Egyptian, rather than the more general Greco-Roman, syncretism.

In this syncretism, the indigenous ancient Egyptian religion has in part survived, in part been profoundly hellenized.⁵⁰ In its Hellenistic transformation, the Egyptian religion of the pre-Hellenistic era appears to have been reduced and simplified, no doubt to facilitate its assimilation into Hellenistic religion as the predominant cultural reference. It is quite clear that the magicians who wrote and used the Greek papyri were Hellenistic in outlook.

Hellenization, however, also includes the egyptianizing of Greek religious traditions. The Greek magical papyri contain many instances of such egyptianizing transformations, which take very different forms in different texts or layers of tradition. Again, working out the more exact nature of this religious and cultural interaction remains the task of future research.

The papyri also provide many insights into the phenomenon of the magician as a religious functionary, in both the Egyptian and the Hellenistic setting. One must be cautious, however, in making generalizing statements in regard to the figure of the magician in the Greek magical papyri.⁵¹ Some of the magicians writing and using the spells may have been associated with temples of Egyptian and Greek deities. According to Egyptian practice, the magician was a resident member of the temple priesthood. Genuine understanding of the older Egyptian and Greek languages and traditions can be assumed in some of the material, but by no means in all instances.

There are texts reflecting perhaps a different type of magician, a type we know from the Greek religious milieu.⁵² This type of wandering craftsman seems keen to adopt and adapt every religious tradition that appeared useful to him, while the knowledge and understanding of what he adopted was characterized by a certain superficiality. This type of magician no longer understood the old languages, although he used remnants of them in transcription. He recited and used what must at one time have been metrically composed hymns; but he no longer recognized the meter, and he spoiled it when he inserted his own material. In the hands of magicians of this type, the gods from the various cults gradually merged, and as their natures became blurred, they often changed into completely different deities. For these magicians, there was no longer any cultural difference between the Egyptian and the Greek gods, or between them and the Jewish god and the Jewish angels; and even Jesus was occasionally assimilated into this truly "ecumenical" religious syncretism of the Hellenistic world culture.

We should make it clear, however, that this syncretism is more than a hodgepodge of heterogeneous items. In effect, it is a new religion altogether, displaying unified religious attitudes and beliefs. As an example, one may mention the enormously important role of the gods and goddesses of the underworld. The role of these underworld deities was not new to Egyptian religion or, to some extent, to ancient Greek religion; but it is characteristic of the Hellenistic syncretism of the Greek magical papyri that the netherworld and its deities had become one of its most important concerns. The goddess Hekate, identical with Persephone, Selene, Artemis, and the old Babylonian goddess Ereschigal, is one of the deities most often invoked in the papyri. Through the egyptianizing influence of Osiris, Isis, and their company, other gods like Hermes, Aphrodite, and even the Jewish god

Iao, have in many respects become underworld deities. In fact, human life seems to consist of nothing but negotiations in the antechamber of death and the world of the dead. The underworld deities, the demons and the spirits of the dead, are constantly and unscrupulously invoked and exploited as the most important means for achieving the goals of human life on earth: the acquisition of love, wealth, health, fame, knowledge of the future, control over other persons, and so forth. In other words, there is a consensus that the best way to success and worldly pleasures is by using the underworld, death, and the forces of death.

Apart from this fascination with the control of death and the underworld powers, there is an equally important fascination with the universe. The older gods of the Greco-Egyptian pantheon now mostly represent the forces of the universe. Thus the Greek god most often invoked is Apollo Helios, a fact consistent with the enormous expansion of the worship of the sun in the Greco-Roman era. Besides other astral deities such as Selene, the constellation of the Bear, and the like, abstract deities, new and old, demand attention. These abstract deities personify Nature (Physis), Time (Kronos, Chronos), Destiny (the Moirai), and most important, the All (Aion). Popular Egyptian gods and goddesses are, however, called upon just as often. Yet the god most often employed is Iao, the Jewish god.

The people whose religion is reflected in the papyri agree that humanity is incapable at the whim of the forces of the universe. Religion is nothing but taking seriously this dependency on the forces of the universe. Whether the gods are old or new, whether they come from Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, or Christian traditions, religion is regarded as nothing but the awareness of and reaction against our dependency on the unathomable scramble of energies coming out of the universe. In this energy jungle, human life can only be experienced as a jungle, too. People's successes and failures appear to be only the result of Chance (Tyche). Individuals seem to be nothing but marionettes at the end of power lines, pulled here and there without their knowledge by invisible forces.

If this world view takes hold of people, what hope can there be for human life? How could ordinary men and women in the small towns of Egypt get something out of their lives? It is at this point that the magician enters the picture. In a transitional culture like Greco-Roman Egypt, a religious functionary who operated as a crisis manager became a necessity to the lives of ordinary people. This role the magician was able to fulfill.

Applying his craft, the magician could give people the feeling that he could make things work in a world where nothing seemed to work the way it used to. He had handbooks of magic,⁵³ which contained the condensed wisdom of the past, wisdom made effective to solve the problems of the present.

The magician claimed to know and understand the traditions of various religions. While other people could no longer make sense of the old religions, he was able to. He knew the code words needed to communicate with the gods, the demons, and the dead. He could tap, regulate, and manipulate the invisible energies.⁵⁴ He was a problem solver who had remedies for a thousand petty troubles plaguing mankind: everything from migraine to runny nose to bedbugs to horse races, and, of course, all the troubles of love and money.

In short, it was this kind of world in which the magician served as a power and communications expert, crisis manager, miracle healer and inflicter of damages, and all-purpose therapist and agent of worried, troubled, and troublesome souls.⁵⁵ To raise one final question: It is one of the puzzles of all magic that from time immemorial it has survived throughout history, through the coming and going of entire religions, the scientific and technological revolutions, and the triumphs of modern medicine. Despite all these changes, there has always been an unbroken tradition of magic. Why is magic so irrepressible and ineradicable, if it is also true that its claims and promises never come true? Or do they? Do people never check up on the efficiency of magicians?

The answer appears to be that, in general, people are not interested in whether or not magicians' promises come true. People want to believe, so they simply ignore their suspicions that magic may all be deception and fraud. The enormous role deception plays in human life and society is well known to us.⁵⁶ In many crucial areas and in many critical situations of life, deception is the only method that really works. As the Roman aphorism sums it up, "Mundus vult decipi, ergo decipiatur" ("The world wishes to be deceived, and so it may be deceived"). To an immeasurable extent, people's lives carry on by what they decide they want to believe rather than by what they should believe or even know, by what appears to be real rather than by what is really real, by props and by fads, and by gobbledygook of this kind today and that kind tomorrow.

Magicians are those who have long ago explored these dimensions of the human mind. Rather than decrying the facts, they have exploited them. Magicians have known all along that people's religious need and expectations provide the greatest opportunity for the most effective of all deceptions. But instead of turning against religion, as the skeptics among the Greek and Roman philosophers did, the magicians made use of it. After all, magic is nothing but the art of making people believe that something is being done about those things in life about which we all know that we ourselves can do nothing.

Magic is the art that makes people who practice it feel better rather than worse, that provides the illusion of security to the insecure, the feeling of help to the helpless, and the comfort of hope to the hopeless.

Of course, it is all deception. But who can endure naked reality, especially when there is a way to avoid it? This is why magic has worked and continues to work, no matter what the evidence may be. Those whose lives depend on deception and delusion and those who provide them have formed a truly indissoluble symbiosis. Magic makes an unmanageable life manageable for those who believe in it, and a profession profitable for those who practice the art.

6. A definition of the notion of magic cannot be attempted here. In order to provide an adequate definition, the complexities of the notion, its relations with “religion” and “science,” and the rather frustrating history and literature of the problem would have to be discussed first. For a good introduction to the question, see A. A. Barb, “The Survival of Magic Arts,” in The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century, ed. A. Momigliano (Oxford: Clarendon, 1963) 100–125; G. Widengren, Religionsphänomenologie (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1969) 1–19; cf. also Aune, ANRW II. 23.2, 1510–16 and G. E. R. 7. On the survival of magic, see Barb’s stimulating article mentioned in note 6 above. Also important for this question is the autobiographical account of the physician Thessalos and its discussion by J. Z. Smith, “The Temple and the Magician,” in his Map Is Not Territory: Studies in the History of Religions (Leiden: Brill, 1978) 172–89.

Anastasi, dans ses fouilles à Thèbes avait découvert la bibliothèque d’un gnostique égyptien du second siècle, et une partie de cette bibliothèque avait passé avec sa première collection dans le musée de Leide; c’est de là que venait le fameux texte magique en écriture démotique et deux petits papyrus grecs pliés en forme de livres qui font plusieurs des plus beaux ornements de ce musée.”

12. Cf. the report of another collector who speaks of his "residence of eighteen years at Thebes, entirely devoted to its objects of antiquity" (p. IX). This man, a Greek named Giovanni d'Athanasī, from the island of Lemnos, the son of a Cairo merchant, wrote his story at the suggestion of English travelers: Giovanni d'Athanasī, A Brief Account of the Researches and Discoveries in Upper Egypt, made under the direction of Henry Salt, Esq., to which is added a detailed catalogue of Mr. Salt's collection of Egyptian Antiquities; illustrated with twelve engravings of some of the most interesting objects, and an enumeration of those articles purchased for the British Museum (London: John Hearn, 1836). As d'Athanasī reports, the papyri are found mostly in or near tombs; so he says about the Demotic papyri: "they are very rare, and are found not in the mummies, but in the terra-cotta urns which are found closed up and buried in the earth around the tombs" (p. 79). See also the Catalogue of the Very Magnificent and Extraordinary Collection of Egyptian Antiquities, the Property of Giovanni d'Athanasī, which will be sold by auction by Mr. Leigh Sotheby, at his house, 3, Wellington Street, Strand, on Monday, March 13th, 1837, and the Six following Days (Sunday excepted), at One o'Clock precisely (London: J. Davy, 1837) 23–24: "Manuscript Rolls of Papyrus, found in the tombs at Thebes." 13. PGM V.a is a loose page stuck into a work on chemistry, the Papyrus graecus Holmīensis in Stockholm. Sohn Ramses' II. und Hoherpriester von Memphis. Ägyptologische Abhandlungen* 27 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1973), esp. 70ff. The papyrus was found in a Christian (!) tomb in Thebes. It should be noted that the story dealing with the search for the secret book has a parallel in Pseudo-Democritus, who may be identical with Bolos of Mendes. According to this text, Democritus went to Memphis where he was received by Ostanēs and his students in the temple of Ptah, but Ostanēs died before he initiated Democritus into his mysteries and handed his secret books over to him. Democritus also brought up the shadow of Ostanēs from Hades and asked him about the books. Ostanēs replied that they were in the temple, where they were finally discovered. Both names occur also in PGM (Democritus: VII.167, 795; XII. 351; Ostanēs: IV.2006; XII.122). The text is given in J. Bidez and F. Cumont, Les mages hellénisés II (Paris: Société d'édition "Les belles lettres," 1938) 317–18; see J. H. Waszink, "Bolos," RAC 2 (1954): 502–8; Speyer, Bücherfunde 26–27, 72–73.

Es nimmt mich immer wieder wunder, dass der unermessliche Gewinn, der aus den Zauberpapyri nach so vielen Seiten hin zu erlangen ist, nur so wenige Arbeiter lockt. Wie mancher, der religionsgeschichtliche Arbeit tun will, täte besser hier sich zu bemühen als um Probleme herumzureden, zu deren Lösung er doch nichts beitragen kann. Nach dem Schema der 'Papyrologie' gehören sie weder zu den Urkunden noch zu den literarischen Papyri; denn daß sich hier die große religiöse Literatur von Jahrhunderten niedergeschlagen hat, ist nur sehr wenigen deutlich. Die Unbekanntheit mit den magischen Papyri macht sich zum Schaden so mancher religionshistorischer Arbeiten, auch der letzten Jahre, bemerklich, und da die wichtigste Publikation von Wessely in den Denkschriften der Wiener Akademie, philos.-hist. Klasse XXXVI Band 1888, allerdings ohne eigene recensio und emendatio kaum benutzbar ist, habe ich es mit einem meiner Schüler zusammen unternommen, zunächst wenigstens das kapitalste Stück dieser Literatur, das grosse Pariser Zauberbuch, in einer neuen Ausgabe vorzulegen.

Ich habe einmal gehört, wie ein bedeutender Gelehrter beklagte, dass diese Papyri gefunden wären, weil sie dem Altertum den vornehmen Schimmer der Klassizität nehmen. Dass sie das thun, ist unbestreitbar, aber ich freue mich dessen. Denn ich will meine Hellenen nicht bewundern, sondern verstehen, damit ich sie gerecht beurteilen kann. Und selbst Mahadöh, der Herr der Erden,—soll er strafen, soll er schonen, muss er den Menschen menschlich sehn.

How they were made can still be seen from the partly unfinished, late Byzantine (16th c.) copy in the Gennadios Library in Athens (Codex Gennadianus 45), the text of which was published by A. Delatte, "Un nouveau témoin de la littérature so'omonique, le codex Gennadianus 45 d'Athènes," Bulletin de l'Académie royale de Belgique, Classe des lettres, 5^e série, tome 45 (1959): 280–321.

54. As I have tried to show, even the human self was regarded as a daimon which could be handled by the magician in the same way as all the other energies of the universe. See H. D. Betz, "The Delphic Maxim 'Know Yourself' in the Greek Magical Papyri," HR 21 (1981): 156–71.

55. A beautiful testimony of this self-understanding is cited by D. Wildung, Egyptian Saints: Deification in Pharaonic Egypt (New York: New York University Press, 1977) 84–85, where the great magician Amenhotep says about himself:

I am really magnificent among any people, one with a heaving heart when he is looking for a plan in some unknown problem, like one whose heart knows it already; who finds a sentence even if it was found destroyed; master of wisdom, friend of the ruler, who does useful things for the Horus, who makes his monuments splendid in order to cause everybody to remember him forever at the august place. Who guides the ignorant through the events since the primeval times, who shows their place to everybody who forgot about it; useful in his ideas, when he is looking for monuments to make immortal the name of his lord; who relates the proverb and acts with his fingers; leader of mankind, of engaging manners as a pleasant one. Who venerates the name of the king and his power, who praises his Majesty at any time of the day, who is on his guard in all his decisions. . . ."

56. A good illustration of the phenomenon is the social and psychological syndrome called "cognitive dissonance." The syndrome can be observed among persons of strong conviction who, when faced with evidence to the contrary of their convictions ("disconfirmation"), become more intense and close themselves off from their social context, rather than develop doubts about these convictions. See the study by Leon Festinger, Henry W. Riecken, and Stanley Schachter, When Prophecy Fails: A Social and Psychological Study of a Modern Group that Predicted the Destruction of the World (New York: Harper and Row, 1964). The authors of this study themselves may have become another instance of the syndrome: apparently they entered into the project armed with strong convictions about the origins of religion and, without ever becoming suspicious, found nothing but confirmation.

Introduction to the Demotic Magical Papyri

Janet H. Johnson

As important as the Greek magical papyri are to the understanding of Greco-Roman religion, as noted by Betz in his Introduction to the Greek magical texts, their full significance can be perceived only when it is realized that these texts written in Greek are part of a larger corpus that also includes texts written in that stage of the Egyptian language known as “Demotic,” and that the corpus as a whole derives in very large measure from earlier Egyptian religious and magical beliefs and practices. The interrelationship between the Greek and Egyptian aspects of these magical texts is emphasized by the fact that not only did the major find of such texts, the collection of Anastasi noted by Betz, occur in Egypt, in the ancient capital of Thebes (modern Luxor) and include both Greek and Egyptian documents, but it also included documents that were bilingual—some of the spells were written in Greek, others in Egyptian, all within the same texts and all for use by the same magician. Perhaps even more telling is the fact that even in the spells written in Greek, the religious or mythological background and the methodology to be followed to ensure success may be purely Egyptian in origin. Thus it is only with the inclusion of the Egyptian materials together with the Greek, and the study of the complete corpus, that the full ramifications of this extraordinary body of material can be studied and appreciated.

All four of the Demotic magical texts appear to have come from the collections that Anastasi gathered in the Theban area. Most have passages in Greek as well as in Demotic, and most have words glossed into Old Coptic (Egyptian language written with the Greek alphabet [which indicated vowels, which Egyptian scripts did not] supplemented by extra signs taken from the Demotic for sounds not found in Greek); some contain passages written in the earlier Egyptian hieratic script or words written in a special “cipher” script, which would have been an effective secret code to a Greek reader but would have been deciphered fairly simply by an Egyptian.

The longest of the four Demotic texts was at some time torn into two sections (PDM xiv; PGM XIV). The longer second section was acquired by the Leiden Museum of Antiquities in 1828; it now bears number P.Lugd.Bat. J 383 (formerly Anastasi 65). The shorter beginning section was purchased by the British Museum in 1857; it now bears number P.Lond.demot. 10070 (formerly Anastasi 1072). The definitive publication of the two sections, including hand copy, transliteration, and translation, with extensive commentary and glossary, is the work of F. Ll. Griffith and Herbert Thompson.¹ Attention was attracted to the Leiden section very early when Reuvens recognized the value that the glosses into Greek letters provided for the deciphering of Demotic script.² The entire preserved text (both the beginning and the end of the original manuscript are lost) consists of twenty-nine large columns on the recto and thirty-three smaller columns on the verso. All are in Egyptian with the exception of three short passages in three separate columns, which are written in Greek. Elsewhere occasional Greek words occur as glosses to Egyptian words or are written in the Egyptian text in an alphabetic Demotic script apparently developed for writing magical and foreign words. Much more common than the Greek passages is the use of the older Egyptian hieratic script in the midst of Demotic passages (as if the scribe were transcribing from an earlier manuscript and occasionally forgot to update what he was copying) and glosses into Old Coptic, most frequently for the writing of magical names and presumably to indicate proper pronunciation (which would have been very difficult to do given the abbreviated nature and great age of the traditional Egyptian scripts). Each column of the recto is written within a frame of horizontal and vertical lines; chapter or section headings are written in red ink (a tradition in Egyptian literature from Old Kingdom times³). In some cases, the scribes, while writing the body of the text in black ink, left room for the heading to be added later in red ink but failed to do so. Such headings can easily be restored.

The same scribe who wrote the London and Leiden text also wrote a second manuscript in the Leiden Museum (PDM xii; PGM XII) that contains Demotic magical texts—the verso of P.Lugd.Bat.J 384 (formerly Anastasi 75).⁴ Of the nineteen columns of magical spells on the verso, the two columns at the beginning (the left end of the manuscript) are purely Demotic, the following thirteen columns are in Greek (although two headings are written in Demotic), the next two columns are again in Demotic, and the last two columns at the right end of the papyrus are largely in Demotic although they have short passages in Greek cited in the middle. (Note that the papyrus is broken at both ends, so it is impossible to determine how many more columns there were originally and in what language.) Within the Demotic sections of the manuscript are occasional passages written in the earlier hieratic script and in alphabetic Demotic as well as Old Coptic glosses. It appears that this text was written before the London and Leiden text since it is in this text that one can see the development of the Old Coptic script being used for glosses. In the columns at the left end of the papyrus, the Old Coptic glosses were written letter by letter above the corresponding Demotic letter. Since the Demotic runs right to left, the glosses run the same direction. This would have been quite confusing to someone reading what appeared to be Greek, so by the glosses in the second group of Demotic spells, at the right end of the papyrus, the scribe had taken to writing the glosses word for word, left to right, over the appropriate Demotic word. It is this latter system that is found throughout the papyrus of London and Leiden. In Leiden J 384, the scribe did not write within a frame or use red ink for headings. That both the papyri of London and Leiden and Leiden J 384 were written in Thebes, where they were found and sold to Anastasi, is indicated further by the fact that the dialect of Coptic to which the glosses and other alphabetic spellings most closely correspond has been identified as “archaic Theban.”⁵

The British Museum also contains a second bilingual Greek and Demotic magical text (PDM lxi; PGM LXI), P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588.⁶ The recto contains eight columns of Demotic; two have occasional magical names written in Old Coptic and one has the names of some ingredients written in Greek in addition to two Greek sections within the Demotic. The verso contains two columns of Demotic with occasional Old Coptic and four columns of Greek. The Demotic sections use red ink for chapter headings (italicized in the translations), as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

The fourth Demotic magical text is P.Louvre E3229 (formerly Anastasi 1061).⁷ The preserved fragments (PDM Supplement) contain seven columns of Demotic on the recto and one column on the verso; the papyrus is broken at both ends. Both the earlier hieratic script and Old Coptic are used, together with the alphabetic Demotic script developed for writing magical names and attested in each of these texts except P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588. Section headings are written in red ink on the recto (italicized in the translations); the columns on the recto are written within a red frame, as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

In all four of these texts, all of which can be dated paleographically to the third century A.D. or only slightly later, there is every indication that all the various scripts were written by, and for, the same scribe, a bilingual person equally at home in Egyptian (old, current, and future) and Greek. The contents and the methodology are overwhelmingly Egyptian. Most of the material is completely Egyptian and its origins are easily traceable in earlier Egyptian religious and magical literature. The methods used are likewise standard Egyptian practices. Some of this is indicated in the notes to the translations.

By contrast, Egyptian divinities (in their own names or in the guise of their Greek counterparts) and Egyptian mythological references abound in the Greek texts and Egyptian methodology is also frequent. For example, although threats against gods who might fail to do what one wants go back to the earliest Egyptian religio-magic literature (Old Kingdom Pyramid Texts), but are unparalleled in classical Greece, they are frequent in the Greek magical texts as well as those written in Egyptian. Much of the Egyptian background of the Greek texts has been pointed out in the numerous textual notes added by Robert K. Ritner. The common source of the Greek and Egyptian language texts is also indicated by their frequent use of identical strings of invocation names, including, in addition to Egyptian and Greek divinities, western Asiatic divinities, "abracadabra" names, and what appear to the modern reader as gibberish.

Because the bulk of the texts is written in Greek, and because there are short passages of Greek in some of the Egyptian texts,⁸ it has been suggested that the Egyptian texts are translations from the Greek. But there are passages in Egyptian, written in Old Coptic, within many of the Greek texts and, as indicated above, the religious and magical background of many of the spells, both Greek and Egyptian, is decidedly Egyptian. In discussing the Egyptian texts, Griffith and Thompson concluded: "even where there are reasons for believing that the demotic is a translation from the Greek, the original source, in relation to magic at any rate, was probably Egyptian."⁹ The same may be true for much of the Greek material. One must, at any rate, be leery of overstating the Greek case and attributing too much to Greek influence.

The present collection of all the texts, Greek and Egyptian, in one easily usable volume, points this out conclusively. This will, in turn, allow and encourage the comparative study of the purposes, methods, props, magical names, and the like, of the Greek and Egyptian spells and encourage the study of the antecedents of the material in both cultures. This work will add greatly to our understanding of the cultural milieu in which these magical texts were produced and copied. Thus it is the hope of all those who have collaborated on the production of this volume that it will both further our knowledge of a dynamic period in the history of man and also encourage future study of cultural contact and cross-fertilization.

*[Rite]: A [daimon comes] as an assistant who will reveal everything to you clearly and will be your [companion and] will eat¹ and sleep with you.

Take [together, therefore,] two of your own fingernails and all the hairs [from] your head, and take a Circean² falcon / and deify it³ in the [milk] of a black [cow] after you have mixed Attic honey with the milk. [And once you have deified it,] wrap it⁴ with an undyed piece of cloth and place [beside] it your fingernails along with your hairs; and take [a piece of choice papyrus], and inscribe in myrrh the following, and set it in the same manner [along with the] hairs and fingernails, and plaster / it with [uncut] frankincense [and] old wine.

So, the writing on/[the strip] is: "A EE ĒĒ ĪĪ OOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌ." [But write this, making] two figures:⁵

/ And take the milk with the honey⁶ and drink it before the rising of the sun, and there will be something divine in your heart. And take the falcon and set it up as a statue in a shrine made of juniper wood. And after you have crowned the shrine itself, make an offering of non-animal foods and have on hand some old wine. And before you recline, speak directly to the bird itself after you have made / sacrifice to it, as you usually do, and say the prescribed spell:

[This] is your authoritative name: ARBATH ABAÖTH BAKCHABRË.¹¹

PGM I. 42–195

*The spell of Pnouthis, the sacred scribe, for acquiring an assistant:¹² . . . Pnouthios to Keryx,¹³ a god[-fearing man], greetings. As one who knows, I have prescribed for you [this spell for acquiring an assistant] to prevent your failing / as you carry out [this rite]. After detaching all the prescriptions [bequeathed to us in] countless books, [one out of all . . .] I have shown you this spell for acquiring an assistant [as one that is serviceable] to you . . . for you to take this holy [assistant] and only . . . O friend of aerial / spirits [that move] . . . having persuaded me with god-given spells . . . but [now] I have dispatched this book so that you may learn thoroughly. For the spell of Pnouthis [has the power] to persuade the gods and all [the goddesses]. And [I shall write] you from it about [acquiring] an assistant.

[The] traditional rite [for acquiring an assistant]: After the preliminary purification, / [abstain from animal food] and from all uncleanness and, on whatever [night] you want to, go [up] onto a lofty roof after you have clothed yourself in a pure garment . . . [and say] the first spell of encounter as the sun's orb is disappearing . . . with a [wholly] black Isis band on [your eyes], and in your right hand / grasp a falcon's head [and . . .] when the sun rises, hail it as you shake its head [and] . . . recite this sacred spell as you burn [uncut] frankincense and pour rose oil, making the sacrifice [in an earthen] censer on ashes from the [plant] heliotrope. And as you recite the spell there will be / this sign for you: a falcon will [fly down and] stand in front of [you], and after flapping its wings in [mid-air and dropping]

8. The section describes the voyage of the sun god, his changing age, and his journey through the underworld. See E. Hornung, Das Amduat (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1963). For the forms of the sun god, see H. Brugsch, Thesaurus Inscriptionum Aegyptiacarum (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1883) 405–33. [R.K.R.]

9. The reference is to Ra-Atum emerging from the seas of chaos in the primal month and his creation of the gods by masturbation. In the Egyptian view of time this cosmic event occurs continually (δενεκέως). Cf. also Pritchard, ANET 6. [R.K.R.]

10. Ancient religion knew of a large number of sacred fig trees, but little is known about the one in Heliopolis. The reference may point to another sacred tree as well, such as the jšd tree (see L. Kákossy, "Ischedbaum," LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–83) or the tree "in which is life and death" (idem, LdÄ 2 [1977]: 112). Or the tree is the persea tree sacred to Ra (see Herodotus 2. 73; and LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–84; Bonnet, RÄRG 83–84, s.v. Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris 736–40). [R.K.R.]

11. Walking backwards as a magical rite. See PGM IV. 44, 2493; XXXVI. 273.

12. The term refers to an assistant daimon; see Glossary. Pnouthis and Pnouthios refer to the same person.

13. Keryx, which means "herald," may refer to a real or to an ideal person of priestly or holy status. See W. Quandt, "Keryx," PRE 21 (1921): 348–49.

an oblong stone,¹⁴ it will immediately take flight and [ascend] to heaven. [You] should pick up this stone; carve it at once [and engrave it later]. Once it has been engraved, bore a hole in it, pass a thread through and wear it around your neck. But in the evening, / go up to [your] housetop [again] and, facing the light of the goddess, address to her this [hymnic spell] as you again sacrifice myrrh troglitis¹⁵ in the same fashion. Light [a fire] and hold a branch of myrtle . . . shaking it, [and salute] the goddess.

At once there will be a sign for you like this: [A blazing star] will descend and come to a stop in the middle / of the housetop, and when the star [has dissolved] before your eyes, you will behold the angel¹⁶ whom you have summoned and who has been sent [to you], and you will quickly¹⁷ learn the decisions of the gods. But do not be afraid: [approach] the god and, taking his right hand, kiss him and say these words to the angel, for he will quickly respond to you about whatever you want. But you / adjure him with this [oath] that he meet you and remain inseparable and that he not [keep silent or] disobey in any way. But when he has with certainty accepted this oath of yours, take the god by the hand and leap down, [and] after bringing him [into] the narrow room where you reside, [sit him] down. After first preparing the house / in a fitting manner and providing all types of foods and Mendesian wine,¹⁸ set these before the god, with an uncorrupted boy¹⁹ serving and maintaining silence until the [angel] departs. And you address preliminary (?) words²⁰ to the god: “I shall have you as a friendly assistant, a beneficent god who serves me whenever I say, ‘Quickly, by your / power now appear on earth to me, yea verily, god!’”

And while reclining, you yourself quickly speak about what you propose.²¹ Test this²² oath of the god on [what] you wish. But when 3 hours have passed, the god will immediately leap up. Order the boy to run [to] the door. And say, “Go, lord, blessed god, / where you live eternally, as you will,” and the god vanishes.

This is the sacred rite for acquiring an assistant. It is acknowledged that he is a god; he is an aerial spirit which you have seen. If you give him a command, straightway he performs the task: he sends dreams, he brings women, men without the use of magical material, he kills, he destroys, he stirs up winds from the earth, he carries / gold, silver, bronze, and he gives them to you whenever the need arises. And

14. For the relationship between amulets and the magical papyri, see M. Smith, “Relations between Magical Papyri and Magical Gems,” Papyrologica Bruxellensia 18 (1979): 129–36; J. Schwartz, “Papyri Graecae Magicae und magische Gemmen,” in M. J. Vermaseren, ed., Die orientalischen Religionen im Römerreich, EPRO 93 (Leiden: Brill, 1981) 485–509.

15. This statement shows that something has fallen from the text, for this is the first extant reference here to myrrh troglitis. [E.N.O.] The name may be commonly referred to as “Ethiopian myrrh.”

16. This angel or messenger (ἄγγελος) is also referred to as “the god” throughout this spell.

17. The adverb, which occurs in PGM I. 76, 79, 91, 108, 111, 113, 116, 121, can mean “precisely” or “in detail.”

18. This is not to be confused with the famous Mendacian wine. Mendesian refers to the Egyptian city of Mendes in the Nile Delta. For a discussion of the confusion between the names, see Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris II, 600.

19. Apparently this boy serves as a child medium. Cf. for this form of medium PGM II. 56; V. 376; VII. 544, etc.

20. πρόπεμπε with an inanimate (and esp. abstract) object is poetic. Here the prefix seems to have its literal meaning: “first,” hence “preliminary words.” [E.N.O.]

21. πρὸς ἃ φράζει should be read as second-person middle (cf. I. 79) and not third-person active, as Preisendanz translates.

22. The position of the word “this” is awkward in the Greek text; perhaps “the oath itself” is preferable. Cf. I. 156: “the same spell.”

he frees from bonds a person chained in prison, he opens doors, he causes invisibility so that no one can see you at all, he is a bringer of fire, he brings water, wine, bread and [whatever] you wish in the way of foods: olive oil, vinegar—with the 105 single exception of fish²³—and he will bring plenty of vegetables, / whatever kind you wish, but as for pork,²⁴ you must not ever tell him to bring this at all! And when you want to give a [dinner], tell him so. Conjure up in your mind any suitable room and order him to prepare it for a banquet quickly and without delay. At once he will bestow chambers with golden ceilings, and you will see their walls covered
 110 with marble—and you consider these things partly real / and partly just illusionary—and costly wine, as is meet to cap a dinner splendidly. He will quickly bring daimons, and for you he will adorn these servants with sashes. These things he does quickly. And [as soon as] you order [him] to perform a service, he will do so, and
 115 you will see him excelling in other things: He stops ships and [again] / releases them, he stops very many evil [daimons], he checks wild beasts and will quickly break the teeth of fierce reptiles, he puts dogs to sleep and renders them voiceless. He changes into whatever form [of beast] you want: one that flies, swims, a quadruped, a reptile. He will carry you [into] the air, and again hurl you into the billows / of the sea's current and into the waves of the sea; he will quickly freeze rivers
 120 and seas and in such a way that you can run over them firmly, as you want. And [especially] will he stop, if ever you wish it, the sea-running foam, and whenever you wish to bring down stars²⁵ and whenever you wish to make [warm things] cold
 125 and cold things / warm,²⁶ he will light lamps and extinguish them again.²⁷ And he will shake walls and [cause] them to blaze with fire; he will serve you suitably for [whatever] you have in mind, O [blessed] initiate of the sacred magic, and will accomplish it for you, this most powerful assistant, who is also the only lord of the air.
 130 And the gods will agree to everything, for without him / nothing happens. Share this great mystery with no one [else], but conceal it, by Helios, since you have been deemed worthy by the lord [god].

*And engraved on the stone*³¹ is: Helioros³² as a lion-faced figure, holding in the left / hand a celestial globe and a whip, and around him in a circle is a serpent biting its tail. And on the exergue of the stone is this name (conceal it): “ACHA ACHACHA CHACH CHARCHARA CHACH.” And after passing an Anubian string³³ through it, wear it around your neck.

Spell to Selene: “INOUTHŌ³⁴ PTOUAUMI ANCHARICH CHARAPTOUMI ANOCHA ABITHROU / ACHARABAUBAU BARATHIAN ATEB DOUANANOU APTYR PANOR PAU- RACH SOUMI PHORBA PHORIPHORBARABAU BŌĒTH AZA PHOR RIM MIRPHAR ZAURA PTAUZOU CHŌTHARPARACHTHIZOU ZAITH ATIAU IABAU KANTANTOUMI BATHARA CHTHIBI ANOCH.” Having said this, you will see some star gradually free itself from [heaven] and become a god. / But you approach, take him by the hand, kiss him and say the same spell: “ŌPTAUMI NAPHTHAUBI MAIOUTHMOU MĒTROBAL RACHĒPTOUMI AMMŌCHARI AUTHEI A. . . TAMARA CHTŌBITAM TRIBŌMIS ARACHO ISARI RACHI IAKOUBI TAURABERŌMI ANTABI TAUBI.” When you have spoken this, / a reply will be given. But you say to him: “What is your divine name? Reveal it to me ungrudgingly, so that I may call upon [it].” It consists of 15 letters: SOUESOLYR PHTHĒ MŌTH.³⁵

And this is spoken next: “Hither to me, King, [I call you] God of Gods, mighty, boundless, undefiled, indescribable, firmly established Aion. / Be inseparable from me from this day forth through all the time of my life.”

Then question him by the same oaths. If he tells you his name, take him by the hand, descend and have him recline as I have said above, setting before him part of the / foods and drinks which you partake of. And when you release him, sacrifice to him after his departure what is prescribed and pour a wine offering, and in this way you will be a friend of the mighty angel. When you go abroad, he will go abroad with you; when you are destitute, he will give you money. He will tell you what things will happen both when and at what time of the night or day. And if / anyone asks you “What do I have in mind?” or “What has happened to me?” or even “What is going to happen?” question the angel, and he will tell you in silence. But you speak to the one who questions you as if from yourself. When you are dead, he will wrap [up] your body as befits a god,³⁶ but he will take your spirit and carry it into the air with him. / For no aerial spirit which is joined with a mighty assistant will go into Hades, for to him all things are subject. Whenever you wish to do something, speak his name alone into the air [and] say, [“Come!”] and you will see him actually standing near you. And say to him, “Perform this task,” and he does it at once, and after doing it he will say to you, “What else do you want? For I am eager for heaven.” If you do not / have immediate orders, say to him, “Go, lord,” and he will depart. In this fashion, then, the god will be seen by you alone, nor will anyone ever hear the sound of his speaking, just you yourself alone. And he will tell you

32. This is Helios-Horus. See Bonner, SMA 19–20, 153.

33. The precise nature of the Anubian cord is not clear. Anubis, the divine undertaker, may have had his name applied to thread used in mummification (see also IV. 1083, 2899; XXXVI. 237). See P. Wolters, “Faden und Knoten als Amulett,” ARW 8, Beiheft (1905): 1–22; Bonner, SMA 3.

34. INOUTHŌ corresponds to Egyptian i ntr ‘3, “O great god,” and is the beginning of an invocation. [R.K.R.]

35. In Greek the name consists of fifteen letters.

36. This dressing up refers to the practice of mummification and the body’s subsequent deification. See B. Gunn, “The Decree of Amonrasenethēr for Neskhons,” JEA 41 (1955): 84–85. [R.K.R.]

*This, then, is the prayer of deliverance for the first-begotten and first-born god: “I call upon you, lord. Hear me, holy god who rest among the holy ones, at 200 whose side the Glorious Ones³⁸ stand continually. I call upon you, / [fore]father, and I beseech you, eternal one, eternal ruler of the sun’s rays, eternal ruler of the celestial orb, standing in the seven-part region, CHAÖ CHAÖ CHA OUPH CHTHE-

 205 THAMASTRA PHATIRI TAÖCH IALTHEMEACHE; you who hold fast to the root, [who] possess the powerful name which has been consecrated by all angels. Hear me, you who have established the mighty Decans and archangels, and beside whom 210 stand untold myriads of angels. You have been exalted to heaven, and the lord / has borne witness to your wisdom and has praised your power highly and has said that you have strength in the same way as he, as much strength as he [himself] has.

“I call upon you, lord of the universe, in an hour of need; hear me, for my soul is CHÖËIOURTHASIÖ IÖSIA ICHËMEÖÖÖÖ AÖAEI, rescue me in an hour of need.”

Say this to Helios or whenever you are forced to do so.⁴¹

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil. Since the character of this invocation shows no tangible connection with the preceding or foregoing spells, it is best understood as a separate charm. Although the purpose of this prayer (which at certain points is reminiscent of the language of the Psalms) is not exactly stated, ll. 215–16 and 221–22 suggest that deliverance from the onslaught of a demonic attack is requested.

37. Preisendanz’s reading ἰσχνὴ νύχ is doubtful because the term is nowhere else attested (see his apparatus ad loc.). The word may reflect an Egyptian or Semitic idiom (“son of your own loins”), an idiom formed in Greek from the word ἰσχνιον (hips). The Egyptian term is more general, however, and refers to “part of the body.” [J.B.] Cf. also Gn 35:11; 1 Kgs 8:19; Acts 2:30; Heb 7:5, 10. See furthermore PGM IV. 646, 2519, and Abt, Apologie 65–66.

38. Doxai is a name for angels. See also IV. 1051, 1202, and Bauer, s.v. “δόξα,” 4.

39. The translation of ἄβουλος follows Preisendanz (“ratos”). For the general language of prayer, cf. Ps 42:6, 12; 43:5; Jon 4:9 LXX: Sir 37:2; Mk 14:34 par.

40. The concept of Heimarmene is found in PGM here and XIII. 613, 635; cf. 709. See D. Amand, Fatalisme et liberté dans l’antiquité grecque. Recherches sur la survivance de l’argumentation morale anti-fataliste de Carnéade chez les philosophes grecs et les théologiens chrétiens des quatre premiers siècles (Amsterdam: Hakkert, ²1974); H. O. Schröder, “Fatum (Heimarmene),” RAC 7 (1969):524–636, esp. 567–68.

PGM I. 222–31

Indispensable invisibility spell: Take fat or an eye of a nightowl and a ball of dung rolled⁴² by a beetle and oil of an unripe olive⁴³ and grind them all together until smooth, and smear your whole / body with it and say to Helios: “I adjure you by your great name, BORKĒ PHOIOUR IŌ ZIZIA APARXEOUCH THYTHE LAILAM AAAAAA IIIII OOOO IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ NAUNAX AI AI AEŌ AEŌ ĒAŌ,” and moisten it and say in addition: “Make me invisible, lord Helios, AEŌ ŌAĒ EIE ĒAŌ, / in the presence of any man until sunset, IŌ IŌ Ō PHRIXRIZŌ EŌA.” 225 230

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

Memory spell: Take hieratic papyrus and write the prescribed names with Hermaic⁴⁴ myrrh ink. And once you have written them as they are prescribed, wash them off⁴⁵ into spring water / from 7 springs and drink the water on an empty stomach for seven days while the moon is in the east. But drink a sufficient amount. 235

This is the writing on the strip of papyrus: “KAMBRĒ CHAMBRE SIXIŌPHI HARPON CHNOUPHI BRINTATĒNŌPHRIBRISKYLMA ARAOUAZAR BAMESEN KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPH AKTIŌPHI ARTŌSE BIBIOU / BIBIOU SPHĒ SPHĒ NOUSI NOUSI SIEGŌ SIEGŌ NOUCHA NOUCHA LINOCHA LINOCHA CHYCHBA CHYCHBA KAXIŌ CHYCHBA DĒTOPHŌTH II AA OO YY ĒĒ EE ŌŌ.” After doing these things wash the writing off and drink as is prescribed. 240

This is also the composition of the ink: myrrh troglitis, 4 drams; 3 karian figs, 7 pits of Nikolaus dates, / 7 dried pinecones, 7 piths of the single-stemmed wormwood, 7 wings of the Hermaic ibis,⁴⁶ spring water. When you have burned the ingredients, prepare them and write. 245

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM I. 247–62

Tested spell for invisibility: A great work. Take an eye of an ape or of a corpse that has died a violent death and a plant of peony (he means the rose). Rub these with oil of lily, and as you are rubbing / them from the right to the left,⁴⁷ say the spell as follows: “I am ANUBIS, I am OSIR-PHRE,⁴⁸ I am OSOT SORONOUIER, I am OSIRIS whom SETH destroyed.⁴⁹ Rise up, infernal daimon, IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PHOBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ APOMPS; whatever I, NN, order you to do, / be obedient to me.” 250 255

And if you wish to become invisible, rub just your face with the concoction, and you will be invisible for as long as you wish. And if you wish to be visible again, move from west to east and say this name, and you will be obvious and visible to all / men. 260

42. The pellet (“that which is rolled”) of a scarab is sacred to the sun god Ra. See also PGM VII. 584. [R.K.R.]

43. The papyrus reads φακνίνου, which Preisendanz emends to (ὀμ)φακνίνου. For similar expressions, see PGM IV. 228–29, 3008. For a different reading, see Schmidt, GGA 1931, 445.

44. This is the myrrh ink of Hermes.

45. In order to transfer the magical powers of the names, they were washed off and consumed. For the widespread practice, see Handbuch des deutschen Aberglaubens 8 (1936/37): 1156–57.

46. The ibis was sacred to Hermes Thoth. [R.K.R.]

57. The words “Ἀναξ . . . σὺν Παίῳ” form an iambic pentameter which may preserve a line from a longer hymn. The line belongs to Hymn 8 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. For a similar expression, cf. PGM II. 7–8. [E.N.O.]

58. Or, “I adjure (you by) God’s head,” here and in the verses that follow.

59. The dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4: vv. 7–8, 12–17, 20, 18, 23–24. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM IV. 436–61, 1957–89; VIII. 74–80. (The identification of lines in Preisendanz is not correct, vol. II, p. 239: l. 18 is present, l. 19 is missing.) [E.N.O.]

60. The word should be read as a palindrome. One can see the word THŌTHŌ, written twice; it means “Thoth the great.” [R.K.R.]

sacrifice with the aforementioned burnt offering. And after the enquiry, if you wish / to release the god himself, shift the aforementioned ebony staff, which you are holding in your left hand, to your right hand; and shift the sprig of laurel, which you are holding in your right hand, to your left hand; and extinguish / the burning lamp; and use the same burnt offering while saying:⁶¹

“Be gracious unto me, O primal god,
O elder-born, self-generating god.
I adjure the fire which first shone in the void;
I adjure your pow’r which is greatest o’er all; /
I adjure him who destroys e’en in Hades,
That you depart, returning to your ship,
And harm me not, but be forever kind.”

PGM II. 1–64

“... AKRAKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A” (speak the whole name thus, in wing formation).¹

“O Phoibos, helper through your oracles,
Come joyous, Leto’s son, who works afar,
Averter, hither come, hither, come hither.
Foretell, give prophecies amid night’s hour,²
5 ALLALALA ALLALALA SANTALALA TALALA”³ (speak this name too, / leaving off one letter in succession, so as to make a wing formation):⁴

“If e’er with vict’ry-loving laurel branch
Here from your holy peak you often voiced Words of good omen, so may you now speed
Your way to me with truthful oracles,

LAETONION and TABARAÖTH AEÖ EÖ, lord Apollo Paian, who control this night, who are master of it, who hold the hour of prayer too. Come, mighty daimons, help me today / by truly speaking with the son of Leto and Zeus.”

Add also the following [spell], which is to be written on laurel leaves, and together with the strip of papyrus on which the Headless One is drawn, it is to be placed beside your head, rolled up. It is to be spoken also to the lamp, after you come in from the prayer, before going to bed, after you have placed a lump of frankincense in the wick of the lamp: “BOASOCH⁵ OĒAĒ IAÖIĒ ŌIAĒ ŌIAĒ NICHAROPLEX / STHOM ÖTHÖ . . . Y IE IÖ ĒI LAĒL IRMOUCH ÖNOR ÖEYE IYÖ EAÖ SABAÖTH
15 THĒOTĒ PAÖMIACH SIEOU IAÖ IE IEÖ . . . IOY IEÖY IÖ IĒI ĒÖ IĒAI IEÖA A E Ē I O Y Ö.”

61. The following dactylic hexameters also form vv. 16–18 of the reconstructed Hymn 23 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 262. [E.N.O.] In contrast to the preceding hymn, ll. 341–47 are Egyptian in character and refer to the sun god’s self-generation and daily travel in his ship. See Hornung, Das Amduat, passim. See also PGM I. 34. [R.K.R.]

1. On the wing formation, see PGM I. 11 and n. Here the formula seems to be incomplete. Supply (KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKARNABA) and (A) at the end. Cf. l. 65 below.

2. These lines, except for 4–5, are dactylic hexameters which are not always metrically correct; they are the reconstructed Hymn 9, Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. The first three lines appear, in slightly altered form, at PGM IV. 24–27 (Hymn 10, 4–6). [E.N.O.]

3. Presumably SANTALALA, but there is considerable corruption in the text.

4. The lines of the following hymn may have originally been written in some iambic meter. Cf. PGM I. 296–97.

5. In l. 32 the papyrus gives BOLSOCH in lieu of BOASOCH as the beginning of the incantation. One or the other is probably wrong.

In order to remember what is said: Use the following compound.⁶ Take the plant wormwood, a sun opal, a “breathing stone,” the heart of a hoopoe⁷ (also known as the “vulture cock”). Grind all these together, add a sufficiency of honey, and anoint your lips with the mixture, having first incensed / your mouth with a grain of frankincense gum. 20

This is the preparation: In the evening, just before retiring, purify your bed with ass’s milk, and then, holding in your hands twigs⁸ of laurel (the preparation for which is given below), speak the invocation given below. Let your bed be on the ground, either upon clean rushes or upon a rush mat, and lie on your right side, on the ground and in the open air. While performing the invocation, give answer to nobody, and as you are uttering it, make an offering of a lump of frankincense / and 25 twelve right-whorled⁹ pinecones and 2 unblemished [gizzard stones of a] rooster, one to Helios and one to Selene, on the first day [of the month], on a censer¹⁰ of bronze or of earth. On your right inscribe this character,¹¹ and go to sleep in line with the upper stroke of it. While praying, wear a garland of laurel of the following description: Take 12 laurel twigs; make a garland of 7 sprigs, and bind the remaining five together and hold them in your right hand while you pray, / and lie down 30 to sleep holding this, in the above-mentioned position. Inscribe the character with myrrh ink, such as is shown to you [below], with a . . . feather [or pen],¹² and hold it, along with the laurel, while you are uttering in prayer the words which begin “BOLSOCH,” etc.¹³

The names to be written on the sprigs, on each leaf: “YESSEMIGADŌN ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NOËRE SOIRE SOIRĒ SANKANTHARA ERISCHIGAL SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE KODĒRE” / (write 12 names). 35

The ink is as follows: In a purified container burn myrrh and cinquefoil and wormwood; grind them to a paste, and use them. Take a sprig of laurel and Ethiopian cumin and nightshade, and grind them together; take in a clay pot water from a new well, dug either 5 months previously or within the last 5 years, or any one you come across on the first day after its being dug, and throw the mixture into the water. Leave it for just 3 nights, and, as you are uttering the invocation, put a little of it into your / right ear. 40

To achieve a good memory: Write on a leaf of cinquefoil the following character, written with myrrh ink, and keep it in your mouth while you sleep.

The character is:¹⁴ ℓ

Start saying the aforementioned invocation at the 7th hour of the moon, until the god hearkens to you, and you make contact with him.

And these are the compulsive [procedures]: All of them may be brought before the moon after the first or second day. / If he does not appear, sacrifice the brain of 45

6. σύνθεμα as a variant of σύνθημα may also have the meaning of “token” or “sign.”

7. Cf. Horapollo, Hier. 1. 55, and the use of the hoopoe in a magical recipe in PDM xiv. 116. See Crum, Coptic Dictionary 102, s.v. [R.K.R.]

8. κλάδος is normally to be translated “branch,” but that seems to convey the notion of something larger than can be envisioned here. “Twig” may be better, but it may sound too small. The reader must think of a small branch.

9. δεξιούς is either “right-turning” or simply “perfect in shape.” Cf. PGM III. 694; XIII. 10.

10. θυμιατήριον is properly an incense burner, but here perhaps simply a word for “altar.”

11. In the margin is the ankh sign (ⲁ), a symbol of life.

12. The papyrus reads εν πιννηλι. . . . Preisendanz suggests πίννη λι[τῆ], “with a simple, or plain, pen” (taking πίννη as the equivalent of the Latin penna).

13. Cf. above, l. 14.

14. The sign is called shenou, an Egyptian symbol of protection. [J.B.]

a black ram, and on the third day the little nail of its right forefoot, the one nearest to the ankle; on the fourth, the brain of an ibis; on the fifth, write the figure sketched below¹⁵ on papyrus with myrrh ink, wrap it in a piece of clothing of one 50 who has died violently, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse¹⁶ / (some, however, [throw it] not into a furnace, for that is too extreme, but they suspend it over a lamp, or place it beneath one).

In another [text] I have found the following: If then, he does not hearken to this method, wrap up the figure in the same piece of cloth, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse on the fifth day, saying after the invocation: “ABRI and ABRO EXANTIABIL, God of gods, king of kings, now force a friendly daimon of prophecy to come to me, lest I apply worse tortures to you, the things written on the strips of papyrus.” /

55 If even after this he does not hearken, pour fine, pure oil of radishes over an uncorrupted boy, who has been tested,¹⁷ and having gathered it up again, prepare a lamp not painted red, and set it upon a lampstand fashioned from virgin soil (some authorities say to pour some of the oil on the altar also). If you feel a blow,¹⁸ chew up the cumin and drink it down with some unmixed wine.

60 Write the prescribed figure / as given above, along with the characters and the prescribed spell twice with myrrh ink on hieratic papyrus. And of these, one you should hold as you make your invocation, as you go to sleep grasping it in your right hand, and placing it under your head, while the other, if the necessity arrives for the compulsive [procedure], you should roll up in the aforementioned cloth and use as prescribed.

65 An alternative procedure:* Take a sprig of laurel and write the / 2 names on its leaves, the one: “[AKRAKANARBA] KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A”;¹⁹ the other: “SANTALALA ANTALALA NTALALA TALALA ALALA LALA ALA LA A.”¹⁹

Take another sprig with twelve leaves on it, and inscribe on it the following heart-shaped name,²⁰ while you begin with a sacred utterance. This is as follows:
 70 And make of the sprig inscribed with the two names / a garland for yourself, weaving about it a binding consisting of white wool, bound at intervals with red wool, and let this hang down as far as the collarbone. You shall hang a similar binding also from the twelve-leaved sprig, and present yourself to the god in the following manner: Take a completely white cock and a pinecone; pour wine upon it,
 75 anoint yourself and remain praying / until the sacrifice²¹ is extinguished. Then rub

15. That is, the figure of the Headless One given at the end of the variant spell, PGM II. 64–183.

16. Properly, the hot-air space of a hypocaust. [J.M.D.] Bathhouses were important places for doing magic. See Kropp, Koptische Zaubertexte I, 51–52; II, 32; J. H. Johnson, OMRM 56 (1975): 44–45. See also PDM xii. 149. [R.K.R.]

17. γυμναζομένω means literally “trained” or “practiced.” But cf. PDM xiv. 287 and esp. xiv. 68, where a boy’s sexual purity is stressed. Hence the accompanying use of ἀφθόρῳ here.

18. What seems to be envisioned is something akin to an electric shock. Cf. VII. 230. [J.M.D.] Cf. also 2 Sm 6:7.

19. Cf. above, ll. 1–5. Each name is to be uttered in “wing formation,” leaving off one letter from the beginning in sequence. See I. 11 and n.

20. The heart-shaped name is lost, but presumably it resembled the allegedly twelve-part inscription given at ll. 33–35 above. Cf. III. 70, “in the shape of a heart, like a bunch of grapes.”

21. Cf. above, ll. 24ff.

*The operative name*²³ is: “AKTI KARA ABAIŌTH, O lord god, servant of god, who are in control of this night, stand by me, Apollo Paian.”

22. MENCHTHŌTH is equivalent to mnē Dhwty, “Thoth is excellent/beneficent.” [R.K.R.]

23. On the significance of the term κύριον ὄνομα, see Philo, Leg. alleg. 1. 75; Det. 22; 83; Plant.

74. For the doctrine of the sacred name, see also Iamblichus, Myst. 7.4–5.

24. The exact significance is not clear, but cf. PGM VI. 4–5, where a very similar hymn is to be recited at sunrise. See also Philo, Vit. cont. 89; Apuleius, Met. 11.20.

25. The basic form of the lines in this passage is metrical, but the dactylic hexameters are frequently interrupted by voces magicae and brief statements in prose. Ll. 81–102, 107, 132–40, 163–66 have been combined to reconstruct Hymn 11. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 245–46. Ll. 81–82 (Hymn 11. 1–2) appear also at PGM VI. 6–7 (Hymn 13. 1–2) and 81 also appears at PGM XII. 87–93. [E.N.O.]

26. For the role of laurel in magic, see L. Deubner, Kleine Schriften zur Klassischen Altertumskunde (Königstein: Hain, 1982) 401–3.

27. The papyrus reads χαίρε, “hail,” which Preisendanz understands as an abbreviation of χαίρε-τισμός, “greeting formula.” See on this A. Baumstark, “Chairetismos,” RAC 2 (1954): 993–1006. The hymn that follows is written in hexameters, although toward the end of the passage the meter falters. The hymnic section that begins in l. 101, “I call upon you . . .,” may be in prose; however, cf. PGM IV. 261ff., where σέ is used repeatedly as the first word of a hexameter and where καλ(έ)ω follows σέ three times.

28. δυπετός properly means “fallen from Zeus or heaven,” referring to water, but the term is widely used to mean simply “divine.” Here some of the original meaning seems appropriate. See Bauer, s.v. “δυπετός,” Betz, Lukian 168 n. 2.

29. Lachis is probably metrical for Lachesis.

30. The following is an Egyptian section in contrast to the preceding Greek hymn. Ll. 102 and 106–7 contain an invocation of the sun god as a child sitting upon the lotus, enlightening the world. See S. Morenz and J. Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona: Artibus Asiae, 1954). [R.K.R.]

31. For the transformations of the sun god hour by hour, see PGM III. 500ff.; IV. 1596ff., and on the whole subject H. Brugsch, "Die Kapitel der Verwandlungen," ZÄS 5 (1867): 21–26. [R.K.R.]

32. Cf. Apulcius' description of the Olympiaca stola in Met. 11. 24, and Griffith's commentary, The Isis-Book 308–14. The bird may be the phoenix, for which cf. PGM XII. 231; XIII. 881. See on the Phoenix myth the chapter in M. Tardieu, Trois mythes gnostiques: Adam, Èros et les animaux d'Égypte dans un écrit de Nag Hammadi (II, 5) (Paris: Études Augustiniennes, 1974) 231–62.

33. Zas is an old name for Zeus. See also PGM XIXa. 44; Orph. Frag. no. 145 (p. 189); cf. Dieterich, Abraxas 130 n. 1.

34. CHÔOUCH is equivalent to Egyptian kky, "darkness." [R.K.R.]

Preparation for the rite: On the first day, [collect] nails of a sheep; on the second, the nails of a goat; on the third, the hair or knucklebone of a wolf. Use these as burnt offerings for the next 3 days. On the seventh day, in case he does not yet lently, and light a lamp from pure oil, and recite the prescribed formulas, beseech-ing and exhorting the god to come with good will; let your place be cleansed of all pollution, and having purified it, begin in purity the supplication to the god, for it is very great and irresistible.

/ Rite: Take mud and purify the doorposts of your bedchamber, in which you are 150 observing ritual purity, and having thus smeared on the mud, write the following inscription with a bronze stylus on the right-hand doorpost.⁴⁰

What is to be written is as follows: “𐤀𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁 𐤀𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁 2 ARSAMŌSI NOUCHA NOUCHA 𐤀

36. The papyrus reads πολυφωτιστα (cf. LSJ, s.v. πολυφωτίστης), a reasonably well-formed word only attested here. However, in view of the genitive ὑδάτων following the vax magica, which seems to need a governing noun, Preisendanz emends to πολύφω(τε κ)τίστα.

37. For similar formulas see PGM V. 485; XII. 80; XIII. 805ff.; XXI. 25. The formula beginning “ABERAMEN . . .” (see Glossary) should be read in Preisendanz’s text as a long palindrome.

38. The following text has many epithets of the god Apollo. Cf. PGM II. 139–40; III. 251; VI. 24–25. See I. 263 and n.

39. The spacing of this formula has been changed to conform to the spacing of the same formula found elsewhere in the PGM (see I. 141–42; III. 77–78, 151–52, etc.).

40. For the ritual concerning the doorposts cf. the Jewish mezuzah, for which see Ex 12:7, 22–23; Dt 6:4–9; 11:13–21. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberbuch 152; Schürer, History of the Jewish People II, 479–80 (with additional references).

41. For the whole formula, see PGM I. 27.

42. The papyrus has ωσπεριεχει, which Preisendanz emends to read ὡς περιέχει, but the meaning is not clear.

lent and merciful; appear to me with pure countenance.”

*[Take a] cat, and [make] it into an Esiēs [by submerging] its body in water. While you are drowning it, speak [the formula] to [its] back.

The formula during the drowning [is as follows]:

- 5 "Come hither to me, you who are in control of the form of Helios, you the cat- / faced god,¹ and behold your form being mistreated by [your] opponents,² [them,] NN, so that you may revenge yourself upon them, and accomplish [the]

- 15 / Take the cat, and make [three] lamellae, one for its anus,⁴ one for . . . , and one for its throat; and write the formula [concerning the] deed on a clean⁵ sheet of

1. The goddess addressed here is Sekhmet-Bastet, well known from Egyptian magical texts. See Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts, nos. 5, 13–15, 18, 20, 124; Bergman, Ich bin Isis 264–67; E. Otto, "Bastet," LdÄ 1 (1975): 628–30.

2. For this type of accusation, see PGM III. 113–14; IV. 2475 and n.

3. The letters BARBATHIAŌBAINCHŌŌŌCHNIABŌAITHABRAB form a palindrome. BAINCHŌŌŌCH ("soul of Khukh," the god of darkness) is often read separately, but is adapted to this form for numerical reasons: the formula adds up to 3663.

4. That is, "one [to be placed] in its anus." Preisendanz in the second case restores ἐν τῷ στόματι, but this is in conflict with the other restoration in l. 67 below: [. . . διὰ τῶν καμ[αρῶν], "through the carholes."

5. "Clean" is meant regularly in PGM in a descriptive sense, i.e., previously unused or "free" from imperfections, etc. See LSJ, s.v. "καθαρός," 3a. For detailed description regarding papyrus, see Pliny, NH 13. 68–89, and R. Wünsch, "Charta," PRE 3 (1899): 2185–92.

Then take up the water in which the drowning took place, and sprinkle it [on] the stadium or in the place where you are performing [the rite].

The formula to be spoken, while you are sprinkling the drowning water, is as follows: “I call upon you, Mother of all men, / you who have brought together the limbs of Meliouchos, even Meliouchos himself, OROBASTRIA NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH, Entrapper,¹¹ Mistress of corpses,¹² Hermes, Hekate, [Hermes?], Hermekate,¹³ LETH AMOUMAMOUTERMYÖR;¹⁴ I conjure you, the daimon that has been aroused in this place, / and you, the daimon of the cat that has been endowed with spirit;¹⁵ come to me on this very day and from this very moment, and perform for me the NN deed” (add the usual, whatever you wish), “CHYCHBACHYCH BACHACHYCH BACH-AXICHYCH BAZABACHYCH BALACHACHYCH BAZĒTÖPHÖTH / BAINCHÖÖCH ANI-BÖÖ CHÖCHE . . . PHIÖCHEN GĒBRÖCHTHÖ MYSAGAÖTH CHEÖÖ . . . Ö¹⁶ SABAÖTH EULAMOSI ĒĒLAXIMA . . . [. . . THACHÖCH]AXIN CHOUCHEÖCH.”

On the [1st and 3rd leaves of metal] which you are to use for the conjuration, there should be this: “IAEÖ” /

6. μονότωρ is a late word for μονόμπτυξ, “horse with a single frontlet,” i.e., a racehorse. Presumably one drew crude representations of them, along with their names, on a sheet of papyrus. Cf. such figures on the so-called Sethian curse tablets in R. Wünsch, Sethianische Verfluchungstafeln aus Rom (Leipzig: Teubner, 1899), esp. 51.

7. Cf. PGM IV. 2390 for a similar injunction to perform a rite with good cheer. See also Plutarch, De tranq. an. 20, p. 477E, and R. Bultmann, TDNT 2 (1976): 772–75 s.v. “εὐφραίνω.”

8. The papyrus reads . . . ονε. Eitrem suggests τύραννε.

9. It is not clear whether iaktore is a magical word or something sensible. Preisendanz suggests ακτωρε as a Greek equivalent of Latin actores, “drivers,” but in that case the syntax is unclear.

10. Emended and restored with plausibility from PGM III. 78–79, 513–14, 545–46; IV. 339–40; LXVII. 13.

11. Although attested in LSJ, s.v. “ἄγκυια,” as an epithet of the goddess Hekate with uncertain meaning (with reference to Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae 38. 14 [third cent. A.D.]), “the netter” is a standard Egyptian underworld daimon. See D. Bidoli, Die Sprüche der Fangnetze (Glückstadt: Augustin, 1976); J. Zandee, Death as an Enemy (Leiden: Brill, 1960) 226–34. [R.K.R.]

12. The term νεκρία is also attested in this sense only in PGM IV. 2781, but necessarily having some such meaning.

13. The name Hermekate is a combination of Hermes and Hekate. See Wünsch, Defixionum Tabellae, nos. 104–7. Here in the papyrus the name could also be read Hermekatēlēth, that is, with the typical ending -ēth; thus Eitrem in the apparatus to III. 37.

14. ΑΜΟΥ at the beginning is Coptic for “come!” [R.K.R.]

15. πνευματώδης is a form not otherwise attested; cf. PGM XIII. 525: ἐμπνευματώδη.

16. A plausible restoration is IAÖ in that IAÖ and SABAÖTH form a common pairing in the PGM.

27. For this type of accusation see PGM III. 5; IV. 2475 and n.

32. Reading λιβυβόρω, a compound found nowhere else; it probably means “west.”

33. It is not clear whether this damaged word is a vox magica or a Greek word.

34. Mourōph is a name of the hour god in PGM IV. 1690 (the god of the eleventh hour, having the form of an ibis).

35. Forms of this logos occur in PGM IV. 1010; XII. 190; XIII. 780, 820. The final name Kmēph is an epithet of Osiris and is the equivalent of the Egyptian hm̄f, “his shrine.” Cf. SATRAPERKMĒPH in PGM XII. 185; XIII. 915.

36. The phrase is equivalent to the Egyptian p3 šy ʿ3 p3 šy ʿ3 p3 ntr n3 ntr. w tr. w, “Good Daimon, Good Daimon, O god of all the gods!” PSOETŌ should be the usual PSALAS. [R.K.R.]

38. This formula has been misread and is here emended on the basis of PGM I. 141–42; II. 138–
 39; III. 77–78. Preisendanz has LABRA at the beginning. The lambda has been misread for a chi.

39. The papyrus has [.]α[.] δαμινον, which Preisendanz restores to read [κ]α[ρ] δαμινον, an unat-tested adjectival form of κάρδαμον, “nose-smart” (thus LSJ, s.v.; a mustardlike plant). However, Schmidt, GGA 1931, 450 suggests [β]α[λ] σάμινον, “balsam wood.” Cf. PGM XII. 364.

40. A variant of the name OSIRCHENTECHTHA. See also PGM VII. 257. The name corresponds to Egyptian Osiris-khenty-khet, a combination of Osiris and Khenty-khet, the local god of Athribis, who in the text is joined together with Osiris, Horus, and Apis. See Bonnet, RÄRG 131–33, s.v. “Chenrehtai.” [R.K.R.]

regard me; speak to me [clearly about] everything, accomplish everything . . . of / my prayer [and . . .] if god will, of this prayer [on the strip of papyrus] and of the important matter of mine.” 175

And you must make an offering in . . . [write] this [on a piece of priestly papyrus] with myrrh ink: . . . / [ouroboros]⁴¹ serpent . . . “ÖTE . . . IAM . . . GRASÖ-CHÖ . . . NÖPSITHER THERNÖPSI . . .” 180

*Tr.: J. M. Dillon. This fragmentary portion of PGM III begins another untitled spell which probably ends at line 186, since line 187 begins a new column (col. VIII) in the papyrus manuscript. Although the exact purpose of this short spell cannot be determined, its function may be similar to that of the spell to follow, viz., an oracular request.

PGM III. 187–262

* Pound up dry fruit (?)⁴² with a pestle (?)⁴³ and mix it to sufficiency with honey and [oil of] a date palm. Grind up a magnet. Boil all together and pulverize it. Make little rounds, as many as you wish, / but put an ounce of each element of the mixture into each of these, and proceed thus, singing a hymn of praise to the god. 190
Then the deity will come to you, shaking the whole house and the tripod⁴⁴ before him. Then he will bring about⁴⁵ your enquiry into the future, being clear in his intercourse with you,⁴⁶ as long as you wish, / and then dismiss the god with thanks. 195

The drawing of the tripod:

*This is the prayer of encounter of the rite which is recited to Helios:*⁴⁷

“Keep silent, everyone, the voice that’s in Your mouths; O circling birds of air, keep quiet; /
Cease frolicking, you dolphins, o’er the brine.
Stand for me, river streams and fountain [flows].” 200

41. Supplying [οὐροβ]ορος in the lacuna. [R.D.K.]

42. τὰ ξυρά. Preisendanz translates on the basis of a gloss in Hesychius, ξυρόν, “cutting, dry, sharp.” But perhaps we are to understand simply ξύλα, “pieces of wood,” assuming a confusion of lambda and rho. The definite article, however, suggests the pieces of wood were previously mentioned, in which case this spell would be connected to the preceding (cf. l. 165).

43. The papyrus has σχομπανον, a word otherwise unattested and meaningless. Preisendanz emends to κομπανον, “strawberry tree,” a rather radical change. Perhaps we should read κοπάνον, “pestle,” the sigma being an error, and the mu intrusive, as it often is with pi. This, however, would have to be a genitive used instrumentally, which is troublesome.

44. This tripod has not been mentioned before, but it is obviously central to the ceremony (cf. ll. 291–96 below). Perhaps we can assume the tripod is a part of the magician’s basic equipment (see PGM IV. 1890–91; 1897; V. 200–201; XIII. 104, 661, etc.).

45. Reading future τελει instead of imperative τέλει. The phrase that follows (τρανής τῇ ὁμιλ[λ]ίῃ) seems to make better sense if it refers to the god. Cf. PGM II. 83–84, where ὁμιλῶν is used of the god consorting with the magician.

46. On Apollo’s epiphany cf. Callimachus, Hy. 2.1–2. [W.B.]

47. The following dactylic hexameters are also the reconstructed Hymn 5. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42. [E.N.O.]

- Now, birds of augury, stop everything
 Beneath the sky. Snakes in your dens, attend
 The cry and be afraid. May you in awe
 205 [Keep] silence, daimons 'mid the shades. / The world
 Itself's astonished by the secret words.
 King Semea,⁴⁸ [father] of the world, be gracious
 To me, O scarab; [I call you] immortal,
 Golden-haired god, O scarab, marvel great
 To ev'ry god and man, [be gracious, lord,
 Who hold the fiery vapor in your power], /
 210 Lord of the [sunrise], risen fiery,
 Titan, I call [you], flaming messenger
 Of Zeus, divine ΙΑΘ; and you, too,
 Who rule in heaven's realm, O [RAPHAËL],
 Who joy in sunrise, be a gracious god,
 O ABRASAX; and you, O greatest one,
 O heav'nly one, I call, and [you, MICHAËL], your helper,⁴⁹ /
 215 Who saves [his people's lives], the perfect eye
 Of Zeus, and who has both exalted⁵⁰ nature
 And brought forth nature in its turn from nature.
 And I call . . . of the immortals . . .
- ΟΠΑΣΕΕΡΑ SESE[NGENB]ARPHARAGGĒS:
 All-mighty is the god, but you are⁵¹ greatest,
 Immortal one; I beg you, shine forth now,
 220 Lord of the world, ΣΑΒΑΘΘΗ, / who veil⁵² sunset
 From dawn, ΑΔΩΝΑΙ, who, being a world,
 Alone among immortals tour the world, self-taught,
 Untutored, through the world's midst traveling
 To those who with a cry raise you at night.⁵³
- ΑΚΡΑΜΜΑΧ[ΑΡΙ], ΚΑ . . . Κ . . .
 225 Who joy in laurel offering, / in gates
 Of untamed Stryx and Death the Arbiter.

48. The name Semea also appears at PGM III. 29, where it is fem., and at V. 429; PDM xiv. 214 among the voces magicae. Despite the designation "King" here, Semea elsewhere is a Syrian goddess whose name appears in various forms on numerous votive inscriptions. She is identified with several deities, e.g., Astarte, Athena, Hera. Semea does not appear in Greco-Roman literary writings except perhaps in Ps.-Lucian, De Syr. Dea 33 (yet the text is uncertain), where it is suggested she is Semiramis. There is also a Syrian god Seimios. See O. Höfer, in Roscher IV, 601; R. Dussaud, "Simea und Simios," PRE, second series 5 (1927): 137–40; W. Fauth, "Simia," KP 5 (1979): 200. [E.N.O.]

49. The papyrus reads ἀ[ρ]ωγόν σου Μ[ι]χαήλ, which is unmetrical. Heitsch would excise ἀρωγόν σου; Preisendanz would excise μέγιστε at the beginning of the line, and write Μιχαήλ σου ἀρωγόν, which would restore the meter. "Michael" is a restoration, but a probable one; cf. PGM I. 301.

50. ἀέξοντα, the emendation of Wünsch, is preferable to δειξαντα for two reasons: (1) it corrects the meter and (2) it restores the proper sense, for whatever is written must govern φύσιν in both clauses. In any case, ἀέξοντα must be taken as azeugma. [E.N.O.]

51. Fahz reads ἐσσι in lieu of ἐστι, "you are almighty god."

52. ἐπισκεπάζω is properly "to cover over," hence "veil." It may, however, be a solecism for ἐπισκοπέομαι, "look upon," the sense required here (cf. Preisendanz: "beschaut"). Cf. PGM I. 303, ἐπισκοπάζεις, which is at least metrical, though the verb is not elsewhere attested. [E.N.O.]

53. The readings of the papyrus are quite uncertain here. See the restoration by Heitsch in Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42 (Hymn 5).

You I adjure, god's seal,⁵⁴ at whom all deathless Gods of Olympos quake and daimons who Stand forth preeminent, for whom the sea
 Is ordered to be silent when it hears.⁵⁵
 You I adjure by mighty god Apollo. /

ΑΕΪΙΟΥΩ."

Also say this: "Send me the daimon who will give responses to me about everything which I order him to speak about." And he will bring this about.

*This is also [another] hymn:*⁵⁶

"I⁵⁷ sing of you, O blessed one, O healer, Giver of oracles, / O all-wise one,
 O Delian [lord and Python-]slaying⁵⁸ [youth],
 Dodona's [king, foretell,] O Pythian Paian;
 I call you, [god who rule the tuneful lyre],
 Which you [alone] of gods [do hold and strike]
 [With sturdy hands] . . . [lord of the silver bow],
 [O well]-named Phoibos . . .

235

/ . . . ruler absolute . . .

240

Who roam the wooded peaks [of Mount Parnassos],
 Be silent, do not now unstring . . .
 O myrrh tree . . . / Lykian god,
 Cease grow . . .

245

A greater light, for he will learn . . .
 From lips divine; someone . . . to arouse
 The seer with plectrum⁵⁹ . . .
 But come you hither, prophesying; come,
 Come hither, prophet, who bring joy, O Smintheus,
 Give your response and / hearken, Pythian Paian;
 Undying shoot, hail, Delphic maiden, Daphne,
 For to you first did Phoibos strike up songs
 In contest with the Muses; Daphne, you
 Shake bough and urge on Phoibos. Then in hymns
 They praise your tunefulness from holy Delphi.
 O maiden who exult in tones divine
 And oracles / . . . heaven's runner,⁶⁰ light bearer, Earth shaker: gracious and obedient,

54. O, "I adjure you [by] the god's seal." See PGM I. 306 and n.

55. In Hymn 5, Preisendanz concludes with ἀκούει, but the following words seem part of the hymn for two reasons: (1) they are almost metrically sound, and (2) they seem to have a poetic sense. [E.N.O.]

56. This hymn is extremely fragmentary in the papyrus. Here the suggested restoration by Heitsch is followed. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 247 (Hymn 12). [E.N.O.]

57. This passage contains what appears to be dactylic hexameters, many of which are fragmentary while others are completely missing. [E.N.O.]

58. The papyrus has]ωλετοκτυπε, which Preisendanz (vol. II, p. 247 [Hymn 12]) restores as [Πυθ]ολετοκτύπε. This, if correct, would be a unique epithet, a combination of two attested epithets: Πυθολκτόνος, "Python slayer," and Πυθολέτης, "Python destroyer."

59. On the instrument called πλῆκτρον, cf. Plutarch, De def. or. 436E; Clement Alex., Protr. I. 5. 3. [W.B.]

60. Read οὐρ(αν)οδρόμε for papyrus ουροδρομε, which is meaningless. For this epithet see I. 258 and LSJ, s.v.

Come to your prophet, but come now in haste,
O you who run through the air, O Pythian Paian.”

- 260 Dismissal: [“Hasten], O air-traversing Pythian Paian; return to your heavens, / leaving to me health together with all gratitude, benevolent and ready to hearken, a sure breastplate (?), and depart to your own heavens, and [dwell there.]”
*Tr.: John Dillon and E. N. O’Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 198–230; 234–58).

290 yourself being pliable because of these / songs and psalms.”

The preparation for the operation: For a direct vision, set up a tripod and a table of olive wood or of laurel wood, and on the table carve in a circle these characters:⁶⁷

61. For another example of placing something under the tongue, see PGM IV. 1745–46. Cf. also V. 253–54.

62. Cf. Smith, Jesus the Magician 116, who translates: “(in the morning) before you speak to anyone.”

63. The formula is spoken to each of the four winds as the officiant faces them successively.

64. κύκλος is supplied by Preisendanz, who translates it “Zodiakalkreis.” In the parallel passage in PGM VII. 284 papyrus has κύκλος Σελήνης, which Preisendanz translates “Kreislauf des Mondes.”

65. Cf. PGM IV. 1718–19, 1721 for such a use of κλίνω.

66. The term “angel” can also be read as “messenger.”

67. Among these characters a scarab is drawn.

 It is advantageous⁶⁸ to place on the table a [hollow figurine] of Apollo out of laurel wood. Engrave [on a lamella] of gold, of silver, or of tin these characters:
